PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 80th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1948

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who are the guiding wisdom in the life of men and nations, we pray that Thy servants may be blessed with clear minds and courageous hearts as they take counsel together for the building of a better world. Grant unto them insight and inspiration as they frame policies and enact laws which shall lift our own beloved country into nobler and happier ways of living.

Help us to put forth a more heroic effort in behalf of a social order in which there shall be a finer spirit of brotherhood and all the members of the human family shall seek one another's welfare.

Hear us in Christ's name. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate, each with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 418. An act to provide for water-pollution-control activities in the Public Health Service of the Federal Security Agency and in the Federal Works Agency, and for other

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 56) welcoming the Inter-American Bar Association to the United States for its conference in Detroit, Mich., in May 1949.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 4462. An act authorizing the conveyance of certain lands in Park County, Wyo., to the State of Wyoming;

H. R. 5053. An act to provide for the establishment of the Independence National Historical Park, and for other purposes;

H.R. 6247. An act to provide for the air security and defense of the United States, to establish the composition of the Air Force, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6411. An act to provide for the issuance of a special postage stamp in furtherance of national safety against traffic and other accident hazards.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2642. An act to amend the District of Columbia Motor Vehicle Parking Facility Act of 1942, approved February 16, 1942; and

S. J. Res. 84. Joint resolution to provide for the restoration and preservation of the Francis Scott Key Mansion, to establish the Francis Scott Key National Memorial, and for other purposes

THE JOURNAL

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday be approved without reading.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to expedite in every possible way the business of the Senate, but I have examined the RECORD this morning, and there is considerable confusion as to the exact parliamentary status, as to what shall transpire this morning in the morning hour. I dislike to invoke the consequences of the application of rule VIII, but unless there can be arranged an appropriate unanimous-consent agreement which will carry out the seeming understanding of the Senate as to the order of business, I shall feel constrained to object to dispensing with the reading of the Journal. I should dislike very much to take that step.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will yield, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the unfinished business is the so-called long-range agricultural bill. It was definitely made the unfinished business yesterday afternoon by unanimous consent, no objection being registered. So certainly the status of that bill has been cleared up. The intention this morning is to have a call of the calendar from the beginning. The reason why I did not ask unanimous consent for a call of the calendar was the fact that there are some Senators on both sides of the aisle who have bills they would like to ask to have considered and voted on, and following the adjournment taken last night the calendar would be called automatically during the morning hour. We may just as well be frank about it; that is why an adjournment was taken last night.

Mr. TAFT. I understand the Senator from Georgia has the floor. Will he

Mr. RUSSELL. I have the floor, and I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator's objection based on the fact that this is not Monday, and would the Senator be satisfied with a unanimous-consent agreement that the calendar be called as if this were Monday?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the calendar may be called for the consideration of measures to which there is no objection, with the understanding that no motion may be made to proceed to the consideration of a bill to which there is objection, I shall not insist upon the reading of the Journal.

Mr. TAFT. What is the Senator's objection to such a motion? After all, the consideration of a measure taken up on motion would come to an end at 1 o'clock. Certainly I think the Senator would have no difficulty with an agreement that the unfinished business would not be displaced during that time, if that is what the Senator is concerned about.

Mr. RUSSELL. There may be some doubt, from a reading of the RECORD of yesterday, as to what is the unfinished business. I am perfectly aware of the fact that the Chair ruled last evening that the unfinished business, or at least the business that would be before the Senate, would be the long-range agricultural bill. The Senator from Georgia was present last evening when the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Government corporations appropriation bill, and that bill was brought before the Senate by motion. The Chair ruled last evening—not the present occupant of the chair, but the presiding officer at the time-that inasmuch as he heard no "no" votes, he considered that as being a unanimous-consent agreement. But, Mr. President, there is a great deal of difference, in parliamentary effect, be-tween a unanimous vote of the Senate and a unanimous-consent agreement.

This matter might be submitted to the Members of the Senate on an appeal, in the present situation. I prefer to have the business of the Senate, during this period, conducted by unanimous consent. I think it will expedite the business of the Senate to a very great extent if we proceed as we have recently done, under unanimous-consent orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The situation at the moment is that the Senator from Nebraska has asked unanimous consent for approval of the Journal. The Senator from Georgia has objected, and requests the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have reserved the right to object.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield. Mr. HATCH. I have just come into the Chamber, and I heard the Senator state what he might do if he could have unanimous consent that no Senator would move to proceed to the consideration of a bill on the calendar to which objection was made. It had been my intention to make such a motion. There is a bill on the calendar to which I am quite sure objection will be made. I have had no opportunity to discuss it. It is impossible to discuss it under the 5-minute rule, and it is my intention-it has been, at least-to make a motion to take the bill up, in the hope that at the conclusion of the calendar, when there would be some time remaining, the Senate might proceed to the consideration of this particular bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no assurance that the Senator from New Mexico will be recognized for the purpose of making the motion which he has in mind.

Mr. HATCH. I am quite sure the Presiding Officer, whoever he may be, will be courteous to any Senator, and give him the recognition to which he is entitled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot hear what courtesy is to be extended.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Georgia will yield, I may say that the Senator from Georgia just observed that he had no assurance that the Chair would recognize the Senator from New Mexico to make a motion, and I observed that I was quite sure that whoever was presiding over the Senate at the time would accord to the Senator from New Mexico or any other Senator the courtesy to make any motion which was within the rules of the Senate.

Mr. RUSSELL. I refuse to permit the Senator from New Mexico to put me in the position of casting any aspersion on the Presiding Officer. I know that in the concluding hours of a session there are many Senators who are anxious to make motions to proceed to the consideration of bills, and the Chair is bound by the rules to recognize the Senator he first sees rise and address the Chair, and since 10 or 12 Members of the Senate might rise and address the Chair for the purpose of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of some measure, I cannot afford to gamble with the hope that the Chair would recognize the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot be put in the position, either, of being committed to recognize the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. In keeping with the time-honored custom of the Senate, the Senator from New Mexico now states publicly that when Calendar No. 802, House bill 3834, to authorize a project for the rehabilitation of certain works of the Fort Sumner irrigation district in New Mexico, and for other purposes, is reached, if objection is made, he will seek to make a motion, at the conclusion of the call of the calendar, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill. and he respectfully asks that the Presiding Officer look in the direction of the Senator from New Mexico when he rises for that purpose.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The rules provide a regular method by which the calendar shall be called. It is sometimes called by a different method, by unanimous consent, and some doubt results because of the calendar being called differently on Mondays from the way it is called on some other days.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is quite a great difference.

Mr. TAFT. I wondered if the Senator would be satisfied if the unanimous-consent agreement should provide that the calendar would be called as if this were Monday, and, second, that there be unanimous consent that the unfinished business would in no case be set aside by motion during the morning hour, before 1 o'clock.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I would be perfectly willing, if the Chair would further rule that there is unfinished business coming over from the previous day. I think that would be adequate protection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Ohio restate his proposal?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the call of the calendar is reached in the morning hour. that it be called as if this were Monday; and, second, I ask unanimous consent that at 1 o'clock, under any circumstances, we return to consideration of Senate bill 2318, a bill to provide for a coordinated agricultural program, as the unfinished business of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. The unfinished business is the bill to provide for a coordinated agricultural program, even though it is so restated in the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the understanding of the Chair that that Mr. WHERRY. And will automatically come up at 1 o'clock regardless of what happens.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that I am not familiar with what the difference is between the calling of the calendar on Monday and on any other day.

Mr. TAFT. I understand that on Monday the calendar must be called in order, and objection to any bill may be made at any time. Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct. And no motion to proceed to consideration of any bill out of order is in order. Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair make the situation plain. When the calendar is called on Monday and a bill is objected to when it is reached in order on the calendar, it is in order to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill at that point.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if that be the case I shall have to object, because I had understood that if the motion were made, when the hour of 2 o'clock arrives, or 1 o'clock when the Senate meets at 11 a. m., the bill under discussion would go back to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. RUSSELL. And it is the holding of the Chair that if the unanimous-consent request be agreed to, and a motion be made on the call of the calendar to proceed to the consideration of any bill on the calendar, the motion itself is not debatable, but the bill is debatable, and then upon the arrival of the hour of 1 o'clock the bill under discussion returns to its place on the calendar and the unfinished business is laid down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. is the state of the situation, as the Chair understands it, and that is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. RUSSELL. In view of that statement by the Chair, I withdraw any objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.
Mr. CONNALLY. I did not hear the proposal by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senator from Ohio is asking unanimous consent that the calendar be called as under rule VIII on Monday.

Mr. RUSSELL. I mean my objection will be withdrawn if the unanimous consent is obtained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands. Mr. CONNALLY. Do I correctly understand that under the rule with respect to the call of the calendar on Monday, if a bill is called and it is objected to it may then be moved that it be considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. I regret very much that I shall have to object.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am not going to assume the attitude of tying up the business of the Senate. I know full well the condition that prevails. If I should make a motion to take up the Fort Sumner project bill perhaps the motion would be defeated, and if not, the debate would be continued until the end of the morning hour. I would gain nothing by such procedure except to delay the business of the Senate. That, Mr. President, I do not propose to do at this time. So, in order that the business of the Senate may be conducted expeditiously, I shall not make the motion to take up House bill 3834, Calendar No. 802. If the fear that I shall do so is what causes the Senator from Texas to object, I now suggest that he withdraw his objection on my assurance that I shall not make the motion before the end of the morning hour, but before the Senate adjourns I shall by amendment to some pending bill seek to have the matter thoroughly discussed in the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Is it the ruling, as appears from the RECORD of yesterday, that a motion to which there is no objection is comparable to a unanimous-consent agreement? Is that the precedent laid down by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not consider that that is a precedent. The Chair accepts the net result which the RECORD discloses, that the agricultural bill is the unfinished business

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Regardless of how it was set aside?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no precedent involved in the pending matter, if I correctly understand the unanimous-consent request made by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; that does not affect the question. It solely affects the question whether a motion could be considered equivalent to a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I express the hope that that may not be regarded as the permanent ruling of the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair makes the same statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. We all know that there is quite a difference between making a motion and asking unanimous consent temporarily to set aside the unfinished business, in order that another bill may be taken up, which action does not displace the unfinished business. A motion to proceed to the consideration of another bill, even though it is unanimously agreed to without opposition, does automatically displace the unfinished business, and I doubt very much whether the Chair can interpret the maker of a motion as being in the attitude of asking unanimous consent.

I do not object to this procedure now. I think it is the best way out of the difficulty, but I hope it will not be regarded as the permanent ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair state that that is precisely the state of mind of the Chair. The Chair is not going back into that question. He is simply accepting the fact that the so-called long-range agricultural bill is the unfinished business of the Senate on the record.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is true, I may say, that sometimes a Senator makes a motion to take up a bill, when he does not really mean it; he means to ask unanimous consent; because certainly in this case he would not want to displace the unfinished business.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand further that the request of the Senator from Ohio brought in the long-range agricultural program bill as the unfinished business regardless of the ruling of the Chair last evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is correct.

Let the Chair submit the unanimousconsent request.

The first unanimous consent is the request of the Senator from Nebraska to approve the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. I submit that I should prefer to have approval given to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Taft].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. Without objection, the Chair will submit the second unanimous-consent request first.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if any decision has been reached with regard to bringing up the bill to repeal the tax on oleomargarine?

Mr. TAFT. No. We have reached no decision as to what bill will follow the long-term agricultural program measure. It is anticipated that bill will take several days, with the various appropriation bills which will have to be considered. No decision has been reached as to the next bill to be taken up on the calendar.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I ask further if any decision has been made by the policy committee with regard to the closing of the session of Congress?

Mr. TAFF. Whether or not what?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Whether the session of the Congress will be continued beyond Saturday?

Mr. TAFT. We hope we shall be able to reach that on Saturday without the necessity of coming back, but we cannot be certain,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the morning hour the calendar be called under rule VIII.

Mr. RUSSELL. At the conclusion of morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; that at the conclusion of the morning business the calendar shall be called under rule VIII, as it is on Mondays, and that at 1 o'clock, when the morning hour is finally concluded, the unfinished business, to wit, Senate bill 2318, shall be laid before the Senate. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Now the Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the Journal be approved without reading. Without objection, the Journal is approved.

Morning business will therefore be pursued.

CERTAIN ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES IN POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representative to the bill (S. 2510) to provide for certain administrative expenses in the Post Office Department, including retainment of pneumatic-tube systems, and for other purposes, which was in line 10, to strike out all after "exceed" down to and including "$10,500" in line 11, and insert "$11,000."

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr.

LANGER, Mr. ECTON, and Mr. O'CONOR conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

PRODUCTION AND PROCUREMENT OF COPRA AND PALM OIL IN THE NETHERLANDS INDIES

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to the provisions of section 7 of Public Law 395, Eightleth Congress, an agreement entered into by and between the Government of the Netherlands Indies and the Commodity Credit Corporation, for the Government of the United States, relating to the production and procurement of copra and palm oil in the Netherlands Indies (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A latter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of several departments and agencies of the Government which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. Langer and Mr. McKellar members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

MEMORIAL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a memorial signed by sundry members of the Department Store Union, CIO, Local No. 3, of the State of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Mundt un-American activities bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FARWELL (NEER.) IRRIGATION CONSTRUCTION

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Farwell, Nebr., irrigation district, in annual meeting assembled at Farwell, Nebr., favoring the enactment of legislation to bring about early construction and completion of the irrigation work in that district.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Farwell Irrigation District in annual meeting assembled, That we fully realize the advantages and necessities of Irrigation in this territory; that we hereby wholeheartedly endorse the splendid work thus far done by your Bureau in this district, and that we hereby urge you to take speedily any and all steps necessary to bring about the early construction and completion of the irrigation district planned for this territory; be it further

Resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent immediately to each Senator and Congressman from Nebraska.

Respectfully submitted.

President of Furwell Irrigation District. Attest:

ALEX WM. LAMB, Secretary.

The foregoing resolution was unanimously passed this 28th day of April 1948.

S. 2866. A bill for the relief of Giacomo Spano and his family; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE COLUMBIA RIVER FLOOD DISASTER

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement in connection with an emergency bill which I am now introducing in behalf of my colleague, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], the Senator from Washington [Mr. Cain], the Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson], and myself.

Yesterday the Senators from Washington and Oregon had a long conference with representatives of various Government agencies in regard to the very serious emergency which exists in the Portland area as a result of the flood. I shall be very brief. I know that only a brief statement is necessary to apprise the Senate of the seriousness of the situation which confronts more than 30,000 people this very hour in the Vanport area.

As the result of the report which General Fleming, Mr. Foley, and Mr. George Field presented to us yesterday in regard to that very serious situation, we are introducing an emergency bill, for immediate reference, we understand, to the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Tobey] is Chairman, in the hope that the bill will be considered immediately, and that we may have an immediate report, or an early report, to the Senate, for action prior to Saturday night.

Briefly, Mr. President, the bill authorizes the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to make loans to provide housing accommodations for families in the Vancouver-Portland area deprived of their homes as a result of the flood disaster. It provides briefly as follows:

First. A $30,000,000 Vancouver-Portland area flood disaster fund to be made available to the Housing and Home Finance Administrator through the issuance and sale of notes to the Secretary of the Treasury.

I point out that we are dealing here with the destruction of what was, after all, a Federal city. Vanport was a war city, built by the Federal Government in order to meet the emergencies of war production.

Second. The bill authorizes the Administrator to make loans to public and private agencies to enable them to construct and sell or rent dwelling accommodations for families deprived of their homes by the disaster with a first preference to families who had been tenants in the Vanport housing project. One hundred percent loans based on necessary current cost would be available for both sales and rental housing, at a 4-percent interest rate in the case of private corporations or persons and a 3-percent rate in the case of loans to public bodies.

Third. Loans to public agencies cannot be made without the prior approval of the local governing body. To enable such housing to be made available to low income families deprived of their homes by the flood disaster, the Administrator may agree to waive principal and interest payments during the first 5 years of occupancy to the extent necessary to permit adjustment of rentals, provided that the State, municipality or other local public body or agency shall similarly agree to make a contribution to the project for such low-rent purposes in the form of cash, land, community services or facilities for which a charge is usually made, or tax remissions or tax exemptions in an amount not less than 20 percent of the amount of the principal and interest payments waived by the Administrator.

Fourth. Loans for housing built for sale may not exceed 25 years and the aggregate amount of the loan and any other obligation shall not exceed: (A) $7,500 if such dwelling is designed for a single-family residence, or (B) $12,500 if such dwelling is designed for a twofamily residence, or (C) $16,000 if such dwelling is designed for a three-family residence, or (D) $18,500 if such dwelling is designed for a four-family residence.

Fifth. Loans for rental housing shall have maturities satisfactory to the Administrator and shall not exceed $7,500 per family unit for such part of the property or project attributable to dwell-

Sixth. In addition to the usual administrative provisions and authority to issue and sell notes to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Administrator is authorized to make necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of the act, and he shall maintain a separate set of accounts for this program and report to the Congress annually on the program authorized by the act.

Seventh. No loan shall be made under the act after March 31, 1949, except pursuant to a commitment to make a loan issued before March 31, 1949.

I wish to point out that the bill has the endorsement and support of the Senators from both Washington and Oregon. A companion bill is being introduced in the House of Representatives this morning by Mr. ANGELL, from the Portland district.

I want to stress, Mr. President, that we are introducing this bill as an emergency bill, because all the heads, so-called, who have been working on this problem since this terrible tragedy has afflicted our section of the country—and it is the worst disaster in all the history of the Pacific Northwest-all the heads, I say, who have been working on it have come to the conclusion that the passage of this bill is of vital importance if we are going to bring the relief or sustenance and the help to these thousands of fellow Americans who have been wiped out, so far as their worldly possessions are concerned, by this tragic flood.

I am sure the Senator from New Hampshire will see to it that the bill receives early consideration by the committee, and I am convinced that, if the committee does consider it, it will receive a favorable report, and if it receives a favorable report I cannot imagine the Congress of the United States adjourning on Saturday night without having taken action on this meritorious bill.

On behalf of myself, my colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. Cor-DON], the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson], and the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], I now introduce the bill and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2863) to authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administration to make loans to provide housing accommodations for families in the Vancouver-Portland area deprived of their homes as a result of the flood disaster, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in order to assist in relieving the critical housing emergency in the Vancouver-Portland area resulting from the flood disaster, the Housing and Home Finance Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") is authorized to make loans (including advances thereon) to public and private agencies, as hereinafter provided, to enable them to undertake the construction and sale or rental of dwelling accommodations for families deprived of their homes by said disaster: Provided, That no loan shall be made under this act unless the Administrator finds that adequate financing at reasonable rates and terms is not available from other sources, and that no loan shall be made to a public agency without the prior approval of the local governing body.

SEC. 2. (a) No loan shall be made under this act unless-

(1) it involves, in the case of a property upon which there is located a dwelling designed principally for residential use for not more than four families in the aggregate, a principal obligation (including such initial service charges, appraisal, inspection, and other fees as the Administrator shall ap-prove) in an amount which, together with the amounts of the principal obligations of any loans obtained for the development of the property or project from other sources, does not exceed the Administrator's estimate of the necessary current cost (including the land and such initial service charges and such appraisal, inspection, and other fees as the Administrator shall approve) of the property: Provided, That such aggregate amount shall in no event exceed-

(A) $7,500 if such dwelling is designed for a single-family residence, or (B) $12,500 if such dwelling is designed for a 2-family residence, or (C) $16,000 if such dwelling is designed for a three-family residence, or (D) $18,500 if such dwelling is designed for a four-family residence.

(2) it involves, in the case of properties not covered by paragraph (1) hereof, a principal obligation in an amount, which, together with the amounts of the principal obligations of any loans obtained for the development of the property or project from other sources, does not exceed-

(A) the amount which the Administrator estimates will be the necessary current cost of the completed property or project, including the land; the proposed physical improve-ments; utilities within the boundaries of the property or project; architects' fees; taxes and interest accruing during construction; and other miscellaneous charges incidental to construction and approved by the Administrator:

(B) $7,500 per family unit for such part of such property or project as may be attributable to dwelling use:

Provided, That in the case of a loan on any such property to a private agency, the Administrator may, in his discretion, require the borrower to be regulated or restricted as to rents or sales, charges, capital structure, rate of return, and methods of operation;

(3) it has a maturity satisfactory to the Administrator, but not exceeding in the case of properties on which loans are made un-der paragraph (1) hereof, 25 years from the date of the loan;

- (4) it contains complete amortization provisions satisfactory to the Administrator and provides, in a manner satisfactory to the Administrator, for the application of the borrower's periodic payments (exclusive of the amount allocated to interest) to amortization of the principal of the loan: Provided, That in the case of housing undertaken by a State or local public agency, the Administrator may, in order to enable such housing to be made available in whole or in part to families of low income who have been deprived of their homes by the flood disaster, agree to waive principal and interest payments on the loan during the first 5 years of occupancy to the extent necessary to permit adjustment of the rentals charged such families to the amounts such families can reasonably afford: Provided further, That the State, municipality, or other local public body or agency shall likewise agree to make a contribution to the project or housing for such purpose (in the form of cash, land, community services, or facilities for which a charge is usually made, or tax remissions or tax exemptions) in an amount not less than 20 percent of the amount of the principal and interest payments waived by the Administrator hereunder;
  (5) it bears interest at not to exceed 4 per-
- cent per annum on the amount of the principal obligation outstanding at any time, or not to exceed 3 percent per annum on such amount in the case of a loan to a State or local public body or agency;
  (6) It contains such terms and provisions
- with respect to security, which may include a second mortgage, insurance, repairs, alterations, payment of taxes, default reserves, delinquency charges, foreclosure proceedings, anticipation of maturity, prior or other addi-tional liens in other parties, and other matters as the Administrator may in his discretion prescribe.

(b) The Administrator shall prescribe such procedures as in his judgment are necessary to assure to families deprived of their homes by the flood disaster, preference or priority of opportunity to purchase (and at a down payment of not more than 10 percent) or rent properties with respect to which loans are made under this act: Provided, That first preference shall be given to families who had been tenants in the Vanport housing project of the Federal Government.

(c) The Administrator may at any time, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, consent to the release of the borrower from his liability under the mortgage or the credit instrument secured thereby, or consent to the release of a part or parts of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage, and the mortgage may provide for any such release: Provided, That the borrow er shall not be released from such liability in any case until the Administrator is satisfied that the property has been sold to a purchaser satisfactory to the Administrator.

(d) Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property acquired and held by the Administrator under this act from taxation by any State, or any political subdivision thereof, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

SEC. 3. The total amount of loans (exclusive of advances and temporary loans made in anticipation of definitive loans) made pursuant to this act shall not exceed $30,000,-000. The Administrator may, on and after the effective date of this act, issue, from time to time, notes and other obligations for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, in such amounts as may be necessary to obtain funds for such purposes (and advances thereon) and for administrative expenses of the Administrator in carrying out the program authorized by this act. Such notes or other obligations shall be in such forms and denominations, have such maturities, and be subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such notes or other obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations the Administrator issued under this section and for such purpose is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of such notes and other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall be treated as public debt transactions of the United States.

SEC. 4. (a) In the performance of, and with respect to, the functions, powers, and duties vested in him by this act, the Administrator, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law

(1) shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act;

(2) shall maintain an integral set of accounts which shall be audited annually by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles and procedures appli-cable to commercial transactions as provided by the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, and no other audit shall be re quired: Provided. That loan transactions of the Administrator hereunder and vouchers approved by the Administrator in connection with such transactions shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government:

(3) shall include in his annual report to the Congress a report with respect to the program authorized by this act;

(4) may delegate his functions, powers, and duties hereunder to such agencies, officials, or personnel as he may designate, and may authorize redelegation by such agencies, officials, or personnel; may utilize, contract with, and act through, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, any State or local public body or agency; and may utilize, and exercise any powers through, the facilities, officers, and employ-ees of the Federal home-loan banks, or of any department, agency, corporation, or establishment of the Government; and may (without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended) contract with any such agency or any other agency or individual or private corporation for the furnishing of any services or facilities, including appraisal, management, title, and other work in connection with property, and contract to make payment or reimbursement for any services or facilities;

(5) may sue and be sued:

(6) may foreclose on any property or com-mence any action to protect or enforce any right conferred upon him by any law, contract, or other agreement, and bid for and purchase at any foreclosure or any other sale, or obtain by voluntary conveyance, or otherwise acquire, any housing project, or part thereof, in connection with which he has made a loan pursuant to this act: Pro-vided, That any such acquisition of real property shall not deprive the State or any political subdivision thereof of its civil jurisdiction in and over such a property or impair the civil rights under the laws of the State or any local law of the inhabitants on such property. Notwithstanding any other provision of law relating to the acquisition, handling, or disposal of real property by the United States, the Administrator shall have power to deal with, complete, operate, rent, renovate, modernize, insure, make contracts, or establish suitable agencies for the man-agement of, or sell for cash or credit or lease, in his discretion, any properties conveyed to or otherwise acquired by him pursuant to this act; and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator shall also have power to pursue to final collection, by way of compromise or otherwise, all claims against borrowers;
(7) may sell or exchange at public or private sale, or lease, real or personal property, and sell or exchange any securities or obligations, upon such terms as he may fix; and may obtain insurance against loss in con-nection with property and other assets held;

(8) subject to the specific limitations in this act, may consent to the modification, with respect to rate of interest, time of payment of any installment of principal or interest, security, or any other term, of any contract or agreement to which he is a party or which has been transferred to him pursuant to this act; and may include in any contract or instrument made pursuant to this act such other covenants, conditions, or provisions as he may deem necessary to assure that the purposes of this act will be achieved. No provisions of this act shall be construed or administered to permit speculation in land holding.

(b) Funds made available to the Administrator pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be deposited in a checking account or accounts with the Treasurer of the United States. Receipts and assets obtained or held by the Administrator in connection with the performance of his functions under this act shall be available for any of the purposes of this act, and all funds available for carrying out the functions of the Administrator under this act (including appropriations therefor, which are hereby authorized) shall be available, in such amounts as may from year to year be authorized by the Congress, for the administrative expenses of the Administrator in connection with the performance of such functions.

(c) Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not be construed to apply to any contract for hazard insurance, or to any pur-chase or contract for services or supplies on account of any property acquired pursuant to this act if the amount thereof does not exceed $1,000. The power to convey and to execute in the name of the Administrator deeds of conveyances, deeds of release, assignments, and satisfactions of mortgages, and any other written instrument relating to real property or any interest therein acto real property or any interest therein acquired by the Administrator pursuant to the provisions of this act, may be exercised by the Administrator or by any Assistant Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency without the execution of any express delegation of power or power of attorney: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the Administrator from delegating such power by order or by power of attorney in his discretion, to any officer, agent, or employee he may appoint.

SEC. 5. No loan shall be made under this act after March 31, 1949, except pursuant to a commitment to make a loan issued before March 31, 1949.

Mr. CAIN. In my opinion, Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon has just stated the disaster needs and requirements in the Portland-Vancouver area both well and fully. Because of the lateness of the hour I simply join with him and others from that stricken area in hoping that time will permit our colleagues in the Senate to give consideration to this meritorious disaster need legislation within the confines of the few days yet remaining.

AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934—CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF

Mr. WHITE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 261), which was ordered to lie over under the rule:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, discharged from the further consideration of S. 2833, a bill to amend section 605 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, and that said bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

EXPLANATION OF STATEMENT IN THE RECORD

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I note on page 8036 of yesterday's RECORD the following statement—the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] is speaking:

I call the a tention of the distinguished Senator from Colorado, with whom I am in perfect agreement regarding his amendment on reciprocal trade agreements as being the best thing and the wisest thing we can do at the present time—I call his attention again to the fact that the Democratic platform of 1932 said:

"We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding Tariff Commission free from Executive interference."

I ask the distinguished Senator from Colorado if that is not exactly what we are advocating in this amendment?

The junior Senator from Colorado replied:

That is exactly what we are advocating in this amendment.

The junior Senator from Colorado intended only to give approval of that part of the platform which was read, which referred to a fact-finding Tariff Commission free from Executive interference.

FORT SUMNER IRRIGATION DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO

The bill (H. R. 3834) to authorize a project for the rehabilitation of certain works of the Fort Sumner irrigation district in New Mexico, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to be recognized for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we have again reached Calendar Order No. 802, relating to the Fort Sumner project. Under the 5-minute rule, it will be impossible to discuss that project as I greatly desire to do.

I presume it is useless to request the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] not to object, as he has previously done. Yesterday evening, a friendly and neutral Senator in this war between the States rather facetiously said to me, "You have used both vinegar and oil on the Senator from Texas. What do you propose to do tomorrow?"

Today, Mr. President, I expect to use neither vinegar nor oil. I shall merely say to the distinguished statesman who has so well and ably represented his State and the Nation in his long service in this body as a Senator from the State of Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that I still cling to the hope-vain and as hopeless as that hope may be-that he will not object today, that he will permit this measure to pass, and that we may, at the next session, obtain the necessary appropriation to begin the necessary rehabilitation and repair of the Fort Sumner project, which will in no sense injure or hurt the great State of Texas or any of its projects.

Standing only upon the undisputed and uncontradicted facts, I make this appeal to the Senator from Texas, without bitterness and without expressing sweet sentiments which I do not honestly feel, and shall today but remind the Senator from Texas that preventing the doing of this work, so essential to the welfare of the little irrigation district at Fort Sumner, can only impoverish that district and the already overburdened farmers who reside therein, and can and will in no sense or manner benefit or enrich the great State of Texas.

In short, stopping this work, preventing the passage of this bill, helps neither Texas nor New Mexico and only hurts that small district and tends to disturb and perhaps destroy the neighborly accord and harmony which should exist between our two States, which in the past have held so much in common and have worked together for the mutual benefit and advantage of each.

I earnestly hope that the Senator from Texas will not object.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas very much regrets that the Senator from New Mexico makes this sort of appeal. The Senator from Texas is doing no more than is the Senator from New Mexico-

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. CONNALLY. He is trying to represent the interests of his State and his people. That is my duty, and I must do it.

Mr. HATCH. On another occasionit was during the consideration of the Mexican treaty-when the projects on the lower Rio Grande in Texas were vitally affected, the residents of my State thought that treaty would injure them, and they objected and protested, and asked me to do the same. But, Mr. President, I believed that those projects in Texas were necessary. So I joined the State of Texas and the distinguished Senator from Texas and supported the Mexican treaty, over and against the protests and objections of citizens of my own State.

So I ask the Senator to do today what I did under similar circumstances when his State was affected.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have no animus toward New Mexico or its projects. On a former occasion I agreed to a bill which related to this project, and which provided that $60,000 be taken out of the reclamation fund and turned over to this district. But the bill did not pass in the House of Representatives. I have been agreeable to its being revived to that extent here in the Senate.

However, the bill to which we are presently addressing ourselves provides for the permanent establishment of this project under the Reclamation Service I hold in my hand a report of the Bureau of the Budget which is adverse to this project. I have before me the protest of my Governor and all the water engineers of my State.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, not of all the water engineers, for I hold in my hand a report signed by some of the water engineers.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask the Senator please not to take up all my time.

Mr. HATCH. But the Senator used the word "all."

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, I have an official report here.

Mr. HATCH. I also have an official report here, signed by your engineers.

Mr. CONNALLY. Not by all of them. Mr. President, I have an official protest signed by the Governor, and by the board of water engineers, and others.

All we want to do is ask New Mexico to agree to a compact with us. Twice we have agreed so far as the engineers were concerned, but twice New Mexico re-fused to ratify the compact. Once the refusal was by the legislature, and once by the Governor. They are now sitting at Santa Fe, trying to get a compact. If they get it, our troubles will be over.

But New Mexico insists upon proceeding unilaterally and gathering all the water she can, without a compact. Every gallon of water taken by New Mexico reduces the amount of water which can come to Texas. We in Texas are dependent upon having the water come down the Pecos River to our projects. We have a project there that is practically useless now because it cannot get water, because water is taken out of the river by New Mexico.

I hate to object, but it is my duty to object; I must object. I hate to be at cross purposes with the Senator from New Mexico. I have voted for projects here-at least, in the committee I recently so voted-and I have agreed with him on a project on the same river, at Carlsbad, N. Mex. At this session I agreed with him on a project called the Middle Rio Grande project. I am not out of harmony with him. But when it comes to the point where I have to represent my people and my State and make an objection, and when I am fortified by a report by the United States Bureau of the Budget adverse to this project. I do not see how I can be blamed for making objection.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in order that the record may be made clear and complete, I wonder whether the Senator from Texas will put into the RECORD the letters and telegrams he has from his people in Texas; and I also wish to say at some time I shall advance this proposal as an amendment to a bill when we can discuss it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill is passed over.

The clerk will state the next measure on the calendar.

NATIONAL FREEDOM DAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 37) requesting the President to proclaim February 1 as National Freedom Day, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments, on page 1, in line 3, after the word "authorized", to strike out "and requested"; and in line 10, after the word "America", to strike out "and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate ceremonies and thanksgiving", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to issue a proclamation designating the 1st day of February of each year as National Freedom Day for the purpose of commemorating the signing by President Abraham Lincoln, on February 1, 1865, of the joint resolution adopted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, proposing the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 2326) to repeal the Alaska Railroad Retirement Act of June 29, 1936, as amended, and to extend the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to officers and employees to whom such act of June 29, 1936, is applicable was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask that this bill be temporarily laid aside until we see about certain matters in connection with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC LANDS IN OREGON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 580) relating to the administrative jurisdiction of certain public lands in the State of Oregon, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with amendments, on page 3, after line 18, to strike out:

Sec. 3. Nothwithstanding any provisions of the act of August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 874), or any other act relating to the revested Oregon and California Railroad and reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands, all of such revested or reconveyed lands, except power sites, shall be open for exploration, location, entry, and disposition under the mineral land laws of the United States, and all mineral claims heretofore located upon said lands, if otherwise valid under the mineral land laws of the United States, are hereby declared valid to the same extent as if such lands had remained open to exploration, location, entry, and disposition under such laws from August 28, 1937, to the date of enactment of this act: Provided, That any person who under such laws has entered since August 28, 1937, or shall hereafter enter, any of said lands, shall not acquire title, possessory or otherwise, to the timber, now or hereafter growing there-on, which timber may be managed and disposed of as is or may be provided by law, except that such person shall have the right to use so much of the timber thereon as may be necessary in the development and opera tion of his mine until such time as such timber is disposed of by the United States: Provided further, That locations made prior to August 28, 1937, may be perfected in accordance with the laws under which initiated.

And on page 4 to strike out:

SEC. 4. The owner of any unpatented mining claim located upon any of such lands shall file for record in the United States district land office of the land district in which the claim is situated: (1) Within 180 days after the effective date of this act, as to locations heretofore made, or within 60 days of locations, as to locations hereafter made, a copy of the notice of location of the claim; (2) within 60 days after the expiration of any annual assessment year, a statement under oath as to the assessment work done or improvements made during the previous assessment year, or as to compliance, in lieu thereof, with any applicable relief act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of the act entitled "An act relating to the revested Oregon & California Railroad and reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands, situated in the State of Oregon," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 874), the authority of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the administration of the revested Oregon & California Railroad grant lands shall be deemed to extend to, among other lands, all the unpatented lands in the odd-numbered sections included within the indemnity limits of the grant made to such railroad by the act of July 25, 1866 (14 Stat. 239), as amended, and for which payment was made by the United States to such railroad or its successors in interest under the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218), except the portions of such unpatented lands which have been specifically placed under the jurisdiction of an executive department (other than the Department of the Interior) since June 9, 1916, by an act of Congress.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture are authorized and directed, as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, to exchange ad-ministrative jurisdiction of revested Oregon & California Railroad grant lands or reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands lying within the boundaries of any national forest, and national-forest lands of approximately equal aggregate value, when by such exchange the administration of the lands will be facilitated: Provided, That the said national-forest lands, administrative jurisdiction of which is transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, shall be excluded from the national forest and shall become subject to administration under the same provisions of law as the revested or reconveyed lands in exchange for which they were transferred and the revested or reconveyed lands, administrative jurisdiction of which is transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture, shall become a part of the national forest within the boundaries of which they are situated and subject to administration under the laws applicable to such national forest: Provided further, That the revested or reconveyed lands and the national-forest lands, administrative jurisdiction of which is exchanged in any county, shall be approximately equal aggregate value: Provided further, That those certain revested Oregon & California Railroad grant lands, described in the acts of February 11, 1920 (41 Stat. 405), September 22, 1922 (42 Stat. 1019), and June 4, 1936 (49 Stat. 1019) Stat. 1460), shall, for the purpose of exchange under the terms of this section, be deemed to be revested Oregon & California Railroad grant lands and subject to exchange for national-forest lands. The exchanges provided for herein shall in each case be evidenced by an order signed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture and such orders shall be transmitted to the Division of the Federal Register for filing and publication.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR POST-MASTERS AND POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 1949) to provide additional compensation for postmasters and employees of the postal service was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Over.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I am very much interested, and I know that thousands of others are also interested, in knowing what action we can expect on this bill before the end of the session.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, as I understand, the House has now agreed to give a rule for a bill on this subject, amounting to a $450 increase, with some additional revenue provisions to make up in part for the increased expenditures resulting from the bill. It is my understanding that the House will act first. I can assure the Senator that action will be taken at this session by the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let me add that I also am interested in this bill, as all of us are. I appreciate the attention the Senator from Connecticut has given it and the comments he has made in the Record, and also the comments which have been made by the Senator from Ohio. I feel that this bill must be given our consideration before this session of Congress concludes. I hope the House bill comes to us promptly. If it does not come to us within the next day or so, I think we are duty bound to consider this proposed legislation before the session concludes.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, with the statements of the able chairman of the majority policy committee and also that of the acting floor leader, I am greatly reassured.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made—

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, before the bill is passed over, I merely wish to express my thorough agreement with the remarks which have been made by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Baldwin] and by the acting leader of the majority. I sincerely hope that this so-called must legislation of which the Senator from Connecticut has spoken, will become law and will be a reality before this session of Congress recesses or adjourns, as may be determined upon. I think it most unfortunate that these employees, who are faced with the high cost of living and the other conditions with which they have to contend during these difficult years, have not previously received a sufficient increase in salary to enable them to take care of themselves and their families.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

The clerk will proceed with the call of the calendar.

ALLIED AVIATION CORP.

The bill (H. R. 631) for the relief of the Allied Aviation Corp. was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Over.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator who objected will withhold his objection for a moment, to permit me to make an explanation.

The persons mainly affected by this bill are not constituents of mine, so far as I know. I am not on the committee which considered the bill. The chairman of the subcommittee was the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Cooper].

However, a small wartime plant was located in the State of Maryland; and because of that circumstance the persons affected by the bill came to me and asked me to look into the bill. The main claimants, I believe, are residents of New York, as I understand.

I have looked into the bill; I have read the committee report through carefully. In my opinion, a grave injustice will be done if relief is denied these persons further. The counsel of the Navy Department admits the justice of their claim, as shown in the report of the House committee.

I likewise read an exact excerpt of a telephone conversation between the general counsel of the Navy Department and my office. It is as follows:

Mr. Hill. The Navy Department is not going to take any position in active opposition to a bill for the relief of this company.

We know they lost money and we will not act to prevent their recoupment. We cannot grant relief on the authority we have.

Further than that, a concern in New York which had a contract identical to that of the claimant named in this bill has obtained its relief.

There should be a rule of uniform justice. I submit it is not fair to give the New York company compensation for its losses and deny the Allied Aviation Corp. equal compensation for identical losses. As a matter of fact this particular company, the Allied Corp., did perform a service. It made planes. The planes were accepted by the Navy, and the company received no compensation for its loss. However, the New York company did not make any planes, its models were not approved, and it was paid in full.

I appeal to the fairness of the Senate as a matter of simple justice that these claimants have their day in court and get their money. The Senator from Kentheir money. tucky has written a very comprehensive report. They are not constituents of mine, but my sense of justice is strongly urged to rally to the support of the bill. I hope very much that Senators will not deny these claimants their losses and opportunity for compensation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should also like to state that the Small Business Committee is very much inter-Was there an obested in this claim. jection made? I could not hear.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. My objection was the result of a mistake. I was not objecting to this particular bill. I was on a committee some time ago that investigated the particular bill and I think it should be passed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator. I am sure the favorable attitude evidenced toward the consideration of this measure by people who have no interest in it from the standpoint of constituents, should make an appeal, particularly since the overwhelming evidence shows the claimants are entitled to their day in court. This is a House bill. It has already run the gamut of the House, and the Senate should not deny the relief at this late hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 631) for the relief of the Allied Aviation Corp., which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments: On page 1, line 7, to strike out "$108,753.13" and insert "$234,-195.20", and in line 9, before the word "in", to insert "under contract No. S-

PLACING A CERTAIN PORTION OF IDAHO IN THE THIRD TIME ZONE

The bill (S. 2547) to amend section 3 of the Standard Time Act of March 19, 1918, as amended, relating to the placing of a certain portion of the State of Idaho in the third time zone, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is identical with Calendar No. 1408, House bill 6318, and without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill and will now be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6318) to amend section 3 of the Standard Time Act of March 19, 1918, as amended, relating to the placing of a certain portion of the State of Idaho in the third time zone.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, when this bill was formerly reached on the call of the calendar I objected, but I have no objection to Senate bill 2547

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the House bill will be amended as the committee proposed the Senate bill should be amended.

The Clerk will state the amendment. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 10, strike out "That the Union Pacific Railroad Company may use Pocatello as the point at which it changes from mountain time to Pacific time and vice versa, and may conduct all its operations on its main and branch lines west of Pocatello on Pacific time," and insert "That common carriers within such portion of the State of Idaho may conduct their operations on Pacific time."

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

The bill (S. 2688) to provide for the administration of the Central Intelligence Agency, established pursuant to section 102, National Security Act of 1947, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BREWSTER. Over.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator who objected to the bill will withhold his objection if he feels he can do so. Last year under the Unification Act the Central Intelligence Agency was established. It is now functioning as a part of the general unification scheme. In order to conduct its business properly with the other agencies of the Government it should have a seal of its own and the necessary authority to act in the ordinary way other bureaus of the Government act. The bill is essentially for that purpose. It gives the Agency several advantages over other departments, because of the confidential nature of its undertaking and of the necessity of many of its employees being located in foreign countries under circumstances not open to disclosure.

The Committee on Armed Services considered the bill very carefully, and spent several days on it. I believe if we want the Unification Act to function, if we want the Central Intelligence to have full opportunity to take its proper place in the activities of the Government at this stage, particularly in our relations with other countries, and in obtaining knowledge from other countries, the bill should become a law at this time.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I was the one who raised the objection, and I want to assure the Senator from Massachusetts and the other members of the committee that the objection I have is not captious. I have assured Senators that as soon as the information I have requested is available, I trust the whole matter can be worked out. The people who have indicated an interest in this bill—and they were of rather responsible character-were not in town and were not back until this morning. I did not realize the calendar was going to be called. I hoped to be able to adjust the matter and that my objection will be of only a temporary character.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162) to rescind certain orders of the Secretary of the Interior establishing Indian reservations in the Territory of Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHERRY (and other Senators). Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. WHERRY subsequently said: Mr. President, I have no objection to Calendar 1421, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162). I was mistaken in the calendar number. I ask that the Senate revert to a consideration of it.

Mr. LUCAS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the objection the Chair just heard an objection to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162). Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. MAGNUSON subsequently said: Mr. President, did Calendar 1421, Senate Joint Resolution 162, go over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution passed over.

Mr. MAGNUSON. May I inquire who made the objection?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Illinois.

AMENDMENT OF SECURITIES ACT AND SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT AND NA-TIONAL BANK ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2636) to amend the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and the National Bank Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. is on the table an amendment which has been reported from the committee by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS]. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, after line 17, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. In order that the Congress may from time to time review the operation and effect of the provisions of this act, the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems shall transmit to the President and to the Congress special reports on the operation and effect of the provisions of this act as hereinafter in this paragraph provided. The first report shall be made not later than 2 years after the approval of this act and a report shall be made every 2 years after making of the first report. Each report shall cover and include the extent to which the exemptions herein provided for have accomplished their purposes; the operations and the policies of the bank in the marketing of obligations issued or guaranteed by it; the extent to which such exemptions have aided the bank in the marketing of such obligations; the extent, if any, to which modifications of this act may be advisable in the opinion of said Council in order adequately to protect the interests of investors and securities dealers; and the recommendations of said Council with regard to the advisability of continuing, modifying, or terminating such exemptions, with particular reference to the extent to which the discontinuance or modification of such exemptions may affect the bank in respect of the aid which it may be able to afford under its articles of agreement in the financing of European recovery and the reconstruction and development of the economic resources and facilities of its members. Before making any such report said Council shall afford to any association of brokers or dealers which shall be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission as a national securities association under section 15A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 an opportunity to present to said Council its views with to the matters to be covered and included in such report as herebefore provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRICKER subsequently said: Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate today passed the bill, S. 2636, to amend the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and the National Bank Act. It is calendar No. 1435.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THYE in the chair). The motion will be entered.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, is this a motion to reconsider?

Mr. BRICKER. It is a motion to reconsider.

Mr. AIKEN. Or did the Senator ask unanimous consent for reconsideration of the bill?

Mr. BRICKER. No; I made a motion to reconsider.

Mr. AIKEN. I object to the motion. Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. I have been requested by some friends of mine connected with institutions affected by the bill to do what I can to see that the bill is passed. I ask if the Senator from Ohio is objecting to the passage of the bill?

Mr. BRICKER. I voice my objection to the passage of the bill now. I have moved that the vote by which it was passed be reconsidered. The bill was passed on the call of the Consent Calendar. I was not present in the Senate Chamber at the time the bill was reached on the calendar and passed. I am opposed to the bill. I think we should have hearings in committee on it. There have been no hearings held on the bill. The bill deals with a matter of too great importance to have the bill pass on the call of the calendar without any hearings having been had on the bill in the Senate committee, and without any debate upon the bill on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. I will say that various groups in the State of New Jersey are embarrassed because of their inability to deal in these securities, because of the situation which now exists. I have been asked to do what I can to assist in relieving the situation in which they find themselves. I think it is important that the bill be enacted into law.

Mr. BRICKER. I take the opposite view, and I think most of the people of my State do.

Mr. SMITH. I was not aware of any such opposition. I desire to obtain the facts, if I can, so that we may see where we are.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if the motion made by the Senator from Ohio is acted on, will it not mean that the pending business, the Government corporations appropriation bill, will be permanently laid aside until a new motion is made respecting it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Chair will state that the Senator from Ohio submitted a privileged motion, and his motion was entered. The mere entering of the motion does not affect the status of the pending business.

Mr. AIKEN. But if there is any effort made to act upon the motion, I should have to ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No action on the motion has been asked.

REORGANIZATION AND SIMPLIFICATION OF PROCUREMENT, UTILIZATION, AND DISPOSAL OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

The bill (S. 2754) to reorganize and simplify the procurement, utilization, and disposal of Government property, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to have consideration of a proposed amendment to this bill, which I have taken up with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN]. My amendment is acceptable to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2754) to reorganize and simplify the procurement, utilization, and disposal of Government property, and for other pur-

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the amendment I offer is as follows:

My amendment is acceptable to the author and sponsor of the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, it is a bill which transfers the War Assets Administration to the Bureau of Federal Supply of the Federal Works Administration. The reason for this transfer is that the War Assets Administrator estimates that it will not be very long before it will be costing more than a dollar to sell a dollar's worth of surplus property. It provides for the disposal of surplus property which any of the agencies of the Government may have. It also provides that the Federal Works Administrator shall perform the functions of the Bureau of Federal Supply in the matter of making purchases for various agencies of the Government. The reason for consolidating the two agencies is to make sure that one agency of the Government is not disposing of certain articles of property while another agency of the Government is attempting to buy the same things.

Mr. PEPPER. Does this bill put the War Assets Administration out of existence on the 1st of July?

Mr. AIKEN. The functions of the War Assets Administration are transferred to the Federal Works Administration. The Administrator of War Assets recommends that action. That is one administration of Government which has come before the Congress and recom-mended that it be abolished. The provisions of law now pertaining to the War Assets Administration will carry over for the length of time which is provided by the law, which is next year.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Is it not a fact that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments went quite fully into the problem and were unanimous in the opinion that the proposed change would be to the benefit of all concerned?

Mr. AIKEN. That is quite true This is a committee bill. It was worked over for several weeks with the Federal agencies involved and was reported as a committee bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask that this bill go to the foot of the cal-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INCORPORATION OF VIRGIN ISLANDS CORPORATION

The bill (S. 1183) to incorporate the Virgin Islands Corporation, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHERRY. Over. Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, there was objection made to the consideration of the bill on the previous call of the calendar, but that objection has been removed.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] asked me to

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Delaware has withdrawn his objection and filed a statement in the Appendix of the RECORD of yesterday, explaining his position.

Mr. WHERRY. Then I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. there objection to the consideration of Senate bill 1183?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1183) to incorporate the Virgin Islands Corporation, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, The Virgin Islands Company shall continue as an agency of the United States until the close of business June 30, 1949. It is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall loan to it upon the request of its president, such sums as may be required to carry out its operations until such date, not exceeding in the aggregate $950,000. Each loan shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the making of the loan.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to know if The Virgin Islands Company is to be a permanent corporation, or whether there is any time limit set?

Mr. BUTLER. The time for a permanent extension for the life of this corporation was dropped entirely. The bill is merely a limitation agreed upon by the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate in order to legalize the operations of the corporation for a term of 1 year.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to continue The Virgin Islands Company as an agency of the United States."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 286) to authorize the construction of a research laboratory for the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, at or in the vicinity of Boston, Mass., was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2680) to enhance further the security of the United States by preventing disclosures of information concerning the cryptographic system was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHERRY. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, referring to Calendar No. 1479, Senate bill 286, I have amendments I desire to offer. At the last call of the calendar the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Ferguson] objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the Senator is speaking of the wrong number.

It was Calendar 1480.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both bills have gone over.

DISCLOSURES OF INFORMATION OF THE CRYPTOGRAPH SYSTEM

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate do return to the consideration of Calendar No. 1480, Senate bill 2680.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2680) to enhance further the security of the United States by preventing disclosures of information concerning the cryptographic system.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, at the last call of the Calendar the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Ferguson] objected to the consideration of the bill. Since that time we have worked out a series of amendments which meet with his approval. I should like very much to have those amendments considered, unless there be further objection to the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, is the Senator speaking of calendar 1480?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina is correct. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2319) to provide for a survey of physically handicapped citizens was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONVEYANCE OF TRACT OF LAND TO JOHNSON CITY, TENN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2580) to authorize the Administration of Veterans' Affairs to convey a certain tract of land in the State of Tennessee to the city of Johnson City.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President. I offer an amendment in the following language:

Provided, That Johnson City shall pay 50 percent of the appraised value of its property, to be determined by the Veterans' Administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair notes that Calendar 1611, House bill 6443, is a similar bill. The Chair inquires whether it is the desire of the Senator to consider the House bill and that his amendment be offered to the House bill.

Mr. MORSE. That is the desire of the Senator from Oregon, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. there objection to considering House bill

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6448) to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to convey certain land in Tennessee to the city of Johnson City.

Mr. MORSE. I offer my amendment to the House bill. The amendment is as follows:

Provided, That Johnson City shall pay 50 percent of the appraised value of its property, to be determined by the Veterans' Administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to H. R. 6448. The PRESIDENT pro tempore.

amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 23, it is proposed to strike out:

SEC. 2. It shall be made a condition of the deed of conveyance that the tract of land so conveyed shall be maintained by such municipal corporation only for fairground or other recreational purposes. If such municipal corporation ceases to maintain such tract for such purposes or attempts to alienate all or any part of such tract, title thereto shall revert to the United States. The deed shall reserve to the United States the interests in fissionable material as provided in Executive Order 9908, dated December 5, 1947.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 2. The tract of land authorized to be transferred by the first section of this act shall be used by the grantee for fair grounds and recreational purposes; and the deed of conveyance of such lands shall contain (1) the provision that all such property shall be used and maintained for the purposes for which it was conveyed for a period of not less than 20 years, and that in the event such property ceases to be used or maintained for such purposes during such period, or is alienated or an attempt is made to alienate such property during such period, all or any portion of such property shall in its then existing condition, at the option of the United States, revert to the United States; and (2) such additional terms, reservations, restrictions, and conditions as may be determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to be necessary to safeguard the interests of the United States. shall reserve to the United States the interests in fissionable material as provided in Executive Order 9908, dated December 5, 1947.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2580 is indefinitely postponed.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (H. Con. Res. 197) to continue the Joint Committee on Housing beyond March 15, 1948, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

REPEAL OF OLEOMARGARINE TAX

The bill (H. R. 2245) to repeal the tax on oleomargarine was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, is the bill objected to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. Mr. FULBRIGHT. I wish to be recognized under the 5-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words regarding the bill. I think that the Policy Committee, in refusing to place the bill on the agenda, must assume full responsibility for killing the bill, if it is killed at this session. It was reported unanimously by the Finance Committee. I want to read for the RECORD the last sentence of the report:

In the opinion of the committee, the bill (H. R. 2245) is in the public interest and should be enacted without delay.

As the Senate well knows, after long discussion of this bill on the question of referral, its past history, and the way it had been bottled up by one committee after another in the House, and had been refused a hearing in the Senate because such a bill must originate in the House, finally now we have the bill on the calendar, after some 62 years, and we have an opportunity now to vote on Yet the majority of the committee, although the chairman of the committee has approved the bill in committee, refuses to let the Senate vote on it on its merits.

Apparently the only way a vote can be had is by having the bill offered as an amendment to some other bill, and I suggest now to the policy committee, and the majority leadership, that I assume, in view of the statement made a few moments ago, there being no hope of getting a vote in any other way, the bill will have to be offered as an amendment to the long-range farm bill.

I dislike to offer this bill as an amendment to any bill, because on its own bottom it has passed the House by better than a 2-to-1 vote, the vote being 260 to 106, and in the Senate it received a vote of 47 to 30, which I think could be interpreted as a vote on the merits in many respects, the vote being on the question of referring the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, this whole matter has been very erroneously interpreted by the margarine people. What is happening is that the margarine manufacturers are profiting greatly by the favorable publicity that has arisen from the controversy in the Senate and the House. The only ones who are suffering are the housewives, the ordinary citizens, who, because of the great demand, because of the refusal to give relief from the taxes, are having to pay more, while at the same time the production of margarine has doubled within the past 3 or 4 years. It is not to the interest of the margarine manufacturers particularly, in fact, I doubt if at all, that the bill be passed, but it certainly is to the interest of the millions of housewives and ordinary citizens.

I think it is disgraceful, after all the effort which has been put on this bill in the House and in the Senate, that it should be simply shoved aside in this manner, and the Senate prevented from voting on it on its merits. Twice before in recent years, notably in 1944, the same proposal was before the Senate, and we could not get a vote on the merits. It had to be offered as an amendment to a bill. I well recognize that Senators are loath to vote a bill of this kind as an amendment to another bill in which they have an interest, because it does add a controversial feature, and it may very well deter some Senators from voting on it because of its effect on the main bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator should take the course he has suggested, I would say the amendment would be germane to the agricultural bill, because, after all, the distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate, as the Senator will recall, decided definitely that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is where the oleomargarine repeal bill belonged. While the Senate on an appeal overruled the decision, nevertheless the bill has agricultural features.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I agree with the Senator that it would be germane to the farm bill. My only reservation about attaching it to that bill is the probability that in conference the conferees of the House would be the same members of the Committee on Agriculture who have bottled it up, and who have recently bottled it up by a vote of 16 to 10. The House later evidenced its approval of the bill by a vote of 260 to 106. The action in bottling it up for so long a time is perfectly indefensible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, should like to add my approval to what the Senator from Arkansas has said. This bill was called up last week and was objected to. It was called up again today and objected to, and I imagine every time it is called it will be objected to.

I have come to the conclusion that the oleomargarine manufacturers do not want the bill passed. I have come to the further conclusion that the dairy interests are rather foolish not to let the bill pass. Every time the bill is called, every time a statement is made in the Senate about it, millions upon millions of dollars worth of publicity is given free to Nucoa and to oleo and other products made from soy beans, cottonseed, and other agricultural products.

So, Mr. President, in view of the fact that this bill is objected to, I intend to object to all the other bills on the cal-

Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Has the suggestion of the absence of a quorum been withdrawn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No;

it has not been withdrawn.

Mr. AIKEN. If the Senator from Mississippi will withhold his request I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I want to ask how long consideration of the oleomargarine bill may continue before reverting to the unfished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until

"SEC. 203. Whenever a lynching occurs, any member of the lynch mob who conspires with any officer or employee of the United States or of a State or governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or possesses the authority as such officer or employee to prevent the lynching or to protect the person lynched, and any such officer or employee who conspires with any member of the lynch mob, to commit, instigate, incite, organize, aid, or abet the lynching shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 20 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"PUNISHMENT UPON STATE OFFICERS AND EM-PLOYEES FOR WILLFUL FAILURE TO PREVENT LYNCHING

"SEC. 204. Whenever a lynching shall occur, any officer or employee of a State or any gov ernmental subdivision thereof, who shall have been charged with the duty or shall have possessed the authority of such officer or employee to prevent the lynching, but shall have willfully failed or refused to make all reasonable efforts to do so, and any officer or employee of a State or governmental subdivision thereof who, under authority or duty granted or imposed by the law of such State, shall have had custody of the person lynched and shall have willfully failed or refused to make all reasonable efforts to protect such person from lynching, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprison-

"PUNISHMENT UPON FEDERAL OFFICERS AND EM-PLOYEES FOR WILLFUL FAILURE TO PREVENT LYNCHING

"SEC. 205. Whenever a lynching shall occur, any officer or employee of the United States, (1) who shall have been charged with the duty or shall have possessed the authority as such officer or employee to prevent the lynching, but shall have willfully failed or refused to make all reasonable efforts to do so; or (2) who, under authority or duty granted or imposed by the law of the United States, shall have had custody of the person lynched and shall have willfully failed or refused to make all reasonable efforts to protect such person from lynching; or (3) who. in violation of his duty as such officer or employee, shall willfully fail or refuse to make all reasonable efforts to apprehend, keep in custody, or prosecute any person who violates section 3, section 4, or this section, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"DUTY OF ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

"SEC. 206. Whenever a lynching of any person shall occur, and information on oath is submitted to the Attorney General of the United States that any officer or employee of the United States or of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who shall have been charged with the duty or shall have possessed the authority as such officer or employee to protect such person from lynching, or who, under authority or duty granted or imposed by the law of the United States or of such State, respectively, shall have had custody of the person lynched, has willfully failed or refused to make all reasonable efforts to protect such person from lynching or that any officer or employee of the United States, in violation of his duty as such officer or employee, has willfully failed or refused to make all reasonable efforts to apprehend, keep in custody, or prosecute any person who has violated section 3, section 4, or section 5 of this act, the Attorney General of the United States shall cause an investigation to be made to determine whether there has been any violation of this act. The duty imposed by this section shall be in addition to all other duties of the Attorney General.

"CIVIL ACTIONS BY INDIVIDUALS LYNCHED

"Sec. 207. (a) Any individual who is lynched as defined in this act, and who suffers injury to his person or damage to his property as a result of the lynching, or the next of kin of any such individual if such injury results in death, shall be entitled to maintain a civil action for damages for such injury, damage, or death against any person violating section 3 section 4, or section 5 of this act with respect to such lynching: Provided, That the satisfaction of judgment against one person who may be liable shall bar further proceedings under this section, by the individual who has obtained satisfaction of his judgment, against any other person who may also be liable.

"(b) Actions provided by this section shall be brought in the United States District Court for the judicial district of which the defendant is a resident. Any such action may be brought and prosecuted by the Attorney General of the United States or his authorized representative in the name of the United States for the use of the real party in interest, or, if the claimant shall so elect, by counsel employed by the claimant, but in any event without prepayment of costs. If the amount of any such judgment shall not be paid upon demand, payment thereof may be enforced by any process, and to the extent, available under the State law for the enforcement of any other money judgment against the defendant. The cause of action occurring hereunder to a person injured by lynching shall not abate with the subsequent death of that person before final jurgment but shall survive to his next of kin. For the purpose of this section the next of kin of a deceased victim of lynching shall be determined according to the laws of intestate distribution of the State of domicile of the decedent. Any judgment under this section shall be exempt from all claims of creditors."

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, is it in order to move to dispense with further reading of the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such a motion is not in order, because the reading is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It does not require unanimous consent to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asked that the amendment be read at the desk. The Journal does not disclose unanimous consent to that effect, but the Chair states that the reading is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Is there no way, under the ruling, to dispense with the further reading of the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator could object to its present reading. Of course, when it is brought up for consideration by the Senate, it will have to be read.

The Chair suggests to the Senator that if he wishes to object to the continuation of the reading of the amendment, he can do so at the present time.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I object to the continuation of the reading of the amendment at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether it would be appropriate to hear the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first committee amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, beginning in line 15, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 3. (a) The Congress hereby finds and declares that the sale of colored oleomargarine without clear identification as such or which is otherwise adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Federal Food. Drug, and Cosmetic Act depresses the market in interstate commerce for butter and for oleomargarine clearly identified and neither adulterated nor misbranded, and constitutes a burden on interstate commerce in such articles. Such burden exists, irrespective of whether such oleomargarine originates from an interstate source or from the State in which it is sold.

(b) Section 301 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended (21 U. S. C. 331), is amended by adding a new paragraph as follows:

"(m) The serving of colored oleomargarine in violation of section 407 (b)."

(c) Chapter IV of such Act, as amended (21 U. S. C. 341 and the following), is amended by adding a new section as follows:

"COLORED OLEOMARGARINE

"Sec. 407. (a) Colored oleomargarine which is sold in the same State or Territory in which it is produced shall be subject in the same manner and to the same extent to the provisions of this act as if it had been introduced in interstate commerce.

"(b) No person shall serve colored oleomargarine at a public eating place, whether or not any charge is made therefor, unless, (1) each separate serving bears labeling identifying it as oleomargarine, and (2) a notice that oleomargarine is served is displayed prominently and conspicuously in such place.

"(c) Colored oleomargarine when served with meals at a public eating place shall at the time of such service be exempt from the labeling requirements of section 403 (except 403 (f) if it complies with the requirements of subsection (b) of this section.

"(d) For the purpose of this section colored oleomargarine is oleomargarine having a tint or shade containing more than one and six-tenths degrees of yellow, or of yellow and red collectively, but with an excess of yellow over red, measured in terms of Lovibond tintometer scale or its equivalent."

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I inquire if this opera bouffe ends at 1 o'clock?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whatever it is, it ends at 1 o'clock. [Laughter.]

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

TIME FOR A CHANGE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, after coming to the Chamber a few moments ago, I recalled a statement made by Abraham Lincoln, and I quote it at this time:

The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present. * * * As our case is new, so we must think anew and act anew. We must disenthrall ourselves.

That statement was made by Abraham Lincoln in his message on December 1, 1862. Those words of a Republican President point the way to the American people today to the solving of some of their problems.

THE NATION NEEDS AND WANTS REPUBLICAN LEADERSHIP IN THE ADMINISTRATION AND IN THE CONGRESS

History teaches us that the very worst thing that can happen to a nation is for it to fail to make a change in leadership when such a change is long overdue. The election in November 1948 presents the American people with a challenge to make such a change, which has been so long overdue. America must disenthrall itself; it must think anew and act anew, with courageous Republican leadership. America must reject a fifth term to the Democratic Party.

Since March 30, 1933, the Nation has been burdened by a Democratic administration which has boasted of looking forward, but which in large measure has really looked backward to the days of the regimentation of man by the state. For 14 years, up until January 1947, the Nation had also been burdened by a Democratic Congress. Fortunately, the past 2 years have seen a long-overdue replacement of Democratic control of the Congress by Republican leadership.

NATIONAL WELFARE REQUIRES CHANGE

Mr. President, I do not make this plea now for a change in the national administration and for continuation of Republican control of the Congress merely on the basis of partisan feeling or as a partisan matter. Of course, I am a Republican, and I am proud of it. However, I appeal not only to Republican voters but also to Democratic voters and, most important, to independent voters, to assure Republican leadership during the next fateful period of American history. My appeal is not only on the basis of the aspirations of my party but on the basis of the needs of our country.

NEED FOR A NATIONAL AUDIT

Mr. President, why should there be a change? The first reason is because we feel that there should be a national audit, an audit of every bureau and agency in the Federal Government, an audit of its operations and of its personnel. There can be no such audit until there is a Republican in the White House and Republican leadership throughout the administration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I prefer not to yield at this time, please.

Mr. President, during the past 2 years, when we Republicans have nominally been in charge of the Congress, where we have had a slim majority, we have been confronted again and again by opposition and obstruction on the part of the administration to our demands for cleaning out the dry rot in the Federal Government. We cannot clean out that dry rot unless the Republicans are given the helm of the national administration.

Mr. President, what I have to say on this point is far more important than some of the subjects which recently have been interjected into the proceedings on the floor of the Senate.

TOO LONG A RULE BY ONE PARTY MEANS RUIN

Mr. President, the second reason for the need for a national change is the one which was given by Franklin Roosevelt himself when he was campaigning aginst the Republicans in 1932. I wish Senators to pay particular attention to the language he used at that time. In 1932 Mr. Roosevelt quoted President Calvin Coolidge as follows:

For one reason or another even a wisely led political party, given a long enough tenure of office, finally fails to express any longer the will of the people, and when it does so fail to express the will of the people, it ceases to be an effective instrument of government. It is far better for such a political party—and certainly better for the state—that it should be relegated to the role of the critic and that the opposing political party should assume the reins of government. This condition appears to have arrived in America.

After referring to that statement by Calvin Coolidge, Mr. Roosevelt said:

That, my friends, is the sober conclusion of a cautious public man, not long ago President of the United States, Calvin Coolidge. With every word of it I heartly agree.

Mr. President, I wish to assure the Senate that if oleomargarine or butter or a contest between the two becomes an issue on this floor, I shall have something to say on that subject, too. I am hoping that what I am interjecting here will be a little oil on the troubled waters.

Let me say at this point, parenthetically, that I have quoted Franklin D. Roosevelt and I have quoted President Coolidge. I ask Senators to bear in mind that the very heart of that salient statement was that any party, I care not which it is, that has possession of government over a long term of years becomes literally debilitated so far as performance is concerned and so far as doing a good job is concerned. That was the consensus of the two ex-Presidents.

GIVE OPPORTUNITY TO NEW LEADERS

A third reason for a change in the administration is to give opportunity for the new leadership which has developed in the Nation since 1933, but which has not had the chance to express itself because of the Democratic monopoly in the administration. During these 16 years, the overwhelming proportion of appointments in the executive branch and in the judiciary have been assigned to Democrats. While some few of the President's appointments during these years have been on a merit basis, most of them have been on a spoils basis. Many appointees have been cheap political hacks from corrupt Democratic municipal machines. It is time for a change to a merit basis. I do not have to refer simply to Republican criticism. Democratic Members of the Senate, time and time again, have mentioned the conclusion that I have just stated, that civil service has been corrupted. There is no longer a question of a constructive operation of the civil-service rules. And we have seen it demonstrated here on the floor of the Senate in relation to postmasters before the Republican Party came into control. We have had to fight on the floor of the Senate, and the Senator who is speaking has had to fight, to see to it that civilservice rules were not violated in the interest of political hacks. It is time to allow efficient Republican leadership to assert itself, to allow the new gen-eration of leaders the opportunity to work out its constructive role for the good of the Nation, not on the basis of spoils but on the basis of proven merit.

PROUD RECORD OF GOP CONGRESS

There is another reason, Mr. President, the next reason for a change. The next reason for a change is the Republican record. I say to you, Mr. President, that in spite of the impediments, in spite of the road blocks, in spite of the obstruction, that record stands. You and I know that each of us has ideas about some particular bill or project which we might have hoped this Republican Congress would pass, but which hopes have not been realized. It is almost impossible to satisfy everyone, and yet we know that the Republican Party has conscientiously tried to satisfy the needs of the Nation by its record during these last 2 years in the Congress. I need only mention a few of the laws which we have passed as an indication of our constructive work:

The tax-reduction law. The Taft-Hartley labor law. Overseas-information law.

Commission on reorganization of the executive branch of the Government.

Portal-to-Portal Pay Act.

Bill for increasing subsistence allowances for disabled veterans.

Bill for increasing on-the-job training ceilings for veterans.

Terminal Cash Pay Act for enlisted men.

The unification bill for the armed forces.

Many foreign-aid measures to control communism and prevent a third world war in addition to a number of other bills.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the purpose of a motion?

Mr. WILEY. For what purpose?

Mr. BRICKER. For the purpose of making a motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILEY. No; I desire to finish this talk at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, while the Senator is interrupted, would he yield for the purpose of my proposing a unanimous-consent agreement to return to the calendar for the remainder of the morning hour?

Mr. WILEY. No. I want to finish. I was caught unawares by certain activities, which is apparent, and I am going to talk until after 1 o'clock.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. No.

Mr. WHERRY. Would the Senator yield for an announcement, please?

Mr. WILEY. I will yield for a question, providing I do not lose the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not want to take the floor away from the Senator, but Senators have asked what is the program when 1 o'clock arrives. I should like to say, if the Senator will permit, that at 1 o'clock the unfinished business, which is the longrange agricultural program, will then automatically be laid before the Senate. It will be our purpose to get unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the farm bill and take up and conclude consideration of the Covernment corporations bill.

I thank the Senator for yielding. I should like to say in conclusion, there will be a session of the Senate tonight.

Mr. WILEY. As I say, there are many bills on which action was not completed and which I personally would have liked to see pass, just as my listeners and readers would. We recognize, however, the staggering burden on this first Republican Congress in over 14 years in trying to set a new path of economy, of efficiency, in place of the Democratic mismanagement which characterized the previous decade or more. Anyone who has ever tried to clean up a dusty attic which has been untended to for 14 years knows the job we Republicans faced.

NEED FOR ECONOMY

Another reason for change is that the Republican Party needs to take the helm if we are to achieve true Government economy. I know that many of our citizens feel that the expenditures in the Eightieth Congress have been excessive. and in many instances, I am inclined to agree with them. But Mr. President, we have a 50-cent dollar. As I said the other day on the floor of the Senate, I think that by and large when we come to analyze the expenditures of the Congress in the light of the 50-cent dollar, in the light of pressure from foreign parts, and in the light of pressure internally upon our national income and capacity, history will record "well done." though I voted against some of the appropriations, my associates felt they were justified. I feel that the strength of America is not in our being able unanimously to agree to everything, but rather, that the strength of America is to be found in the fact that strong men can meet and exchange ideas in this forum, and then agree that to the majority the spoils do not belong, but the victory.

Some Republicans have, unfortunately, caught the spending fever. We recognize, however, the heavy financial costs imposed upon us by the need to combat communism abroad and the need to build up our national defense. All of the money that we are using in this national defense program consists of 50-cent dollars—costs of construction have increased all along the line, and that has served to increase the cost of Govern-

Still the Republicans have made great advances, have watered down some of the administration's bloated budget requests, have balanced the budget, and have assured several billion dollars to reduce our national indebtedness.

Another reason for a change—a change that is necessary—in addition to the reasons set forth in the five previous points, including the statements of President Coolidge and President Roosevelt—that after a long period of political domination by one party conditions arise requiring a change—there is the sixth point.

VIGILANCE REQUIRED IN ATOMIC AGE

Another reas n for a change is that the Republican Party can assure for the Nation the vigilance at home and abroad against every menace, particularly the menace of communism. The Democratic Party, with its record of secret diplomacy, its record of the appeasement of communism and of building up the forces of communism at home and abroad, cannot assure for the Nation that adequacy which is so indispensable in this atomic age. America has been precipitated to leadership among the nations of the earth and she must be vigilant in the careful exercise of that leadership.

CARRYING THROUGH GOP PROGRAM

Continued Republican leadership of the Senate and House of Representatives is necessary if we are to carry through on the constructive program which we have begun in this Eightieth Congress, and in order to carry through on those items for which time was not available to complete. The question of high prices is still with us; the question of labor difficulties and of many other problems are still to be solved. The fact that these were not solved during the brief time that we have had available to us is not an indication that we were inadequate to our responsibility, and that from every angle it appears will be thrust upon the party next January; rather it is an indication that we need more time, plus leadership of the national administration, in order that we might complete the job that the Nation has assigned to us. have been working night and day on thousands of bills; we have not shirked our responsibility in any sense.

The Republican Party does not appeal to the Nation on the basis of making glib promises about accomplishing the millennium. We know that our national economy is so complicated that Congress alone cannot do the job and cannot, by itself, assure national prosperity. The Republican Party does promise the Nation, however, that it will create a climate, an atmosphere of freedom which will give to the farmer, the businessman, the laboring man, to commerce, to transportation, and to every other segment of our economy that freedom, that encouragement, which they have so long missed during the last 16 years of Democratic control-the era of bureaucratic bossing, of crisis psychology, of planned emergencies.

Mr. President, what I have said today expresses my earnest personal conviction as to why I think there is a need for a change. I have just returned from a visit to my own State, where I attended the Republican convention. I talked to many persons representing a fine cross section of the people who represent the grassroots of that great State, which produces 50 percent industrially and 50 percent agriculturally. It is a State filled with the common people, of whom Lincoln said, "God Almighty must have loved them, he made so many of them.' I have come back encouraged, because I find that much of the fear, the doubt, and the worry we hear expressed on the floor and elsewhere regarding the future of this great Nation is not lodged in the breasts of the men and women of my State who produce, build, and construct. They have a hope, and they are equal to the task which is before them. have faith that we shall come through the crisis and meet the problems of today and tomorrow as we have met every problem and every crisis which have arisen in the history of this great coun-They are the people who build the Nation. Back in the grassroots sections they are working. They are not striking. They are aware of the fact, Mr. President, that from the villages, small cities, and farmsteads will come the direction which will guide us. Were I to listen to all the fears and doubts expressed through the press and over the radio I would think this country were going to hell. But when I listen to the voices of the commen men and women. I am strengthened and encouraged to face, without doubt, the problems which we have to solve.

I learned a little philosophy in politics while I was at home, Mr. President. I heard of a Scotchman who went from the Isle of Ayr to London. When he returned, a friend said to him: "Sandy, how did you like it in London?" Sandy replied, "I didna like it. I don't like those Londoners. Mon, they are a queer people, a very queer people." His friend said, "What do you mean, Sandy?" Sandy said, "I went up to my room in the hotel at night. I had my bagpipes along, of course. But those Londoners are queer people. They pounded on the ceiling, on the floor, and on the walls." His friend inquired, "What did you do, Sandy?" Sandy replied, "I didn't let them upset me. I didn't pay any attention to the knocking; I just kept on playing my bagpipes."

Mr. President, I think that both parties might very well, in this election campaign, as they go out through the country, play their own bagpipes. If they do so, they will make a great contribution to the thinking of the American people. From my own little experience in politics I have found that never to mention my opponent is good politics. Never to indulge in personalities regarding individuals is good politics. I found it to be so, because the common people know it is so. They do not like folks who indulge in manure-spreading. They do not like that kind of tactics. The people are looking for more light. Light is what they want. It was Goethe who, when he was about to die, uttered the words, "More light." A friend who was standing by his bed said, "He wants a candle." Another friend said, "No. He is passing through the vestibule between this existence and the next existence, and wise men say that when a man goes through that vestibule he can look both ways.' Goethe was looking both ways and saw that what the world needed was more light. Yes, Mr. President, more light. That is also what the grass-roots people want. They do not want our Executive or our candidates to go about spreading murkiness. They want to know the facts; they want to become acquainted with the light.

I respectfully submit, therefore, that when the voters go to their voting booths on November 2, 1948, they should cast their ballot for a Republican President, for Republican Senators, and Republican Representatives. Where they feel that they cannot vote the straight party ticket, because there are some individuals in the Democratic Party who merit their support, I fully respect their judgment. But I do feel that it is the Republican Party to which the Nation must look for the vision and leadership that is so necessary during these chaotic and confused times, but also glorious times.

It is time for a change, Mr. President. It is time for GOP leadership of the national administration and for continued GOP guidance at the helm of Congress.

America must disenthrall itself from the Democratic clutch. We must think anew and act anew, as Lincoln advised us.

The choice is before us, freedom under Republicans or regimentation under Democrats; economy or extravagance; merit or spoils; constitutional Americanism or alien collectivism.

I am sure America will make the correct choice,

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the pending bill will be returned to the Calendar and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business which will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK, A bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS AND INDEPENDENT EXECUTIVE AGENCIES, 1949

Mr. WHERRY, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of order No. 1673, House bill 6481, the Government corporations appropriations bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6481) making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it has become very clear that there will not be time at this session of Congress for favorable action on Senate Joint Resolution 200, which is a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment so that in electing a President and Vice President the electoral votes shall be counted in proportion to the popular vote. This proposal has been unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress, and is an extremely meritorious legislative proposal. It would prevent such a situation as has arisen three times in our history, when the candidate who received the largest popular vote was not elected.

Mr. President, if we shall return after the session on Saturday, I serve notice now that I shall attempt to bring the joint resolution up. In any case, I shall renew my effort to get it before the Congress at the next regular session.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield? Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I regret very much to hear the Senator from Massachusetts state that he does not think the joint resolution can be considered at this session. I know of no more important legislative proposal, and I hope the circumstances will permit the Senate to consider the joint resolution at an early date.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator, I am glad he feels as he has stated.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Record several articles and editorials which have been printed in support of this very important reform, an editorial from the Recorder-Gazette, of Greenfield, Mass., an editorial from the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram, one from the Lawrence (Mass.) Tribune, an article by Blair Moody from the Boston Globe, an editorial from the Jamestown Shopping Guide, of Jamestown, N. Y., and an article from the Philadelphia Inquirer.

There being no objection, the editorials and articles were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Greenfield (Mass.) Recorder-Gazette of May 4, 1948]

"ELECTION MACHINERY"

The 1948 campaign will decide who will be President of the United States for the next 4 years. It also has provided impetus to make drastic changes in both Federal and State election machinery. The Federal change would increase the degree of democracy; the State would reduce it. However, those values are not the measure of Government efficiency or effectiveness under the two proposals.

The State proposal is to end direct Presidential primaries and to return to the convention system of electing delegates to the national-party conventions, as was done prior to 1912. Theoretically, the direct primary gives the people direct and decisive voice on who shall rule them. It might be actually so if, as in some States, delegates ran pledged to specific candidates or if they were bound to follow an order of preference expressed by the voters.

Under the Bay State system the direct primary has been a farce. The legislature would not permit voters to express a choice for President. Such delegate contests as appeared reflected local political rivalries rather than national issues. So the great majority of voters, and even of those enrolled in parties, stayed away from the polls.

Even in a three-way contest for delegates at large, as the Democrats had this year, there was not even a suggestion of nominating anyone other than President Truman. The convention system is at least inexpensive to the taxpayers, even if it reflects no more of the people's choice. It would be interesting to know, incidentally, if Mayor James M. Curley (seeking his first political post since his liberation from jail) would have placed second on the slate from a Democratic State convention as he did in the direct primary.

The Federal change, if effected, would be vastly more important. It would end the solid South. It would end such landslides as swept Hoover and F. D. Roosevelt (among others) into the White House.

Now a State's representation (proportionate to the number of its registered voters) in the electoral college is bound to vote for the man who attains a majority of the popular vote, even if the majority consists of a single vote in a million ballots. The decision has never been so close, but 40 or more electoral votes have several times been delivered by popular majorities of only a few thousand.

It is now proposed that the electoral vote of each State be counted for candidates in the proportion of the popular vote they receive. A bill to accomplish this has been approved by the House Judiciary Committee and is awaiting admission by the rules committee. An identical bill, submitted by Senator Lodge, was approved 6 to 1 by the Senator Lodge, was approved 6 to 1 by the Senator Judiciary Committee yesterday, and Lodge is pressing the Republican policy committee for early floor action. But even if Congress approves, it must be ratified by 36 States.

/ [From the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram of May 24, 1948]

"ELECTORAL REFORM"

Thus far the opponents of Senator Lodge's plan for reforming the Electoral College have not produced any weighty arguments against it. Under his proposal, the electoral votes of a State would no longer be cast as a unit; instead, they would be divided in proportion to the popular votes. This has caused alarm among the advocates of so-called State sovereignty. They argue that a State ought not to be compelled to split its electoral votes; that it ought to give them all to one party if it wants to do so.

That, however, is not really an appeal for State authority. The voters in a State are not worried about its "sovereignty" in regard to Presidential elections. They are thinking in terms of advantage for their own political parties. A Democrat is not going to burst with State pride because all of the electoral votes of his State go to a Republican nominee even if the popular majority in favor of the Republicans is very small.

Further, our party system has turned our Presidential electors into mere party agents or rubber stamps. Thus there is a wide gap between theory and practice, and this gap ought to be closed.

Full debate may show the need of some changes in the Lodge plan itself. But Americans have long been too complacent about electing their Presidents by one method while solemnly pretending to do it by another.

[From the Lawrence (Mass.) Tribune of May 18, 1948]

PRACTICABLE SUGGESTIONS

In the past year, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., of Massachusetts, has taken leadership in two moves of outstanding importance in connection with the office of President of the United States that unquestionably appeal to innumerable Americans regardless of the political parties to which they belong. They seem so sound and sensible as to merit substantial support.

Under the provisions of the Constitution all the electoral votes of a State are credited to the candidate whose electors get the largest number of votes at the polls on the day of the Presidential election, no matter how small their winning margin may be. The minority of the electorate that barely loses gets no credit whatever for its vote and that definitely does not seem fair. Senator LODGE has a bill before Congress to correct that condition by dividing the electoral vote of a State proportionately on the same basis as the popular vote is cast and that seems sound and just. The measure has a long way to go, because if approved by Congress it would have to be submitted to the legislatures of the various States for action as an amendment to the Constitution. The proposal merits acceptance, however, and ultimately should be accorded the approval it

A special commission led by ex-President Herbert Hoover is making a study of the possible reorganization of the executive branch of the Government and Senator Longe has called its attention to the fact that while the Constitution clearly and efficiently outlines the procedure to be followed in the event of the death of a President, there is nothing there regarding the course to be taken if the President is incapacitated by illness. He urged the Commission to study this serious situation most carefully and make a recommendation for its correction.

Although the Bay State Senator cited the poor health of the late Presidents Woodrow Wilson and Franklin D. Roosevelt toward the end of their final terms of office to support his contention, the case of the former probably provided the strongest argument for specific procedure under such circumstances. In the closing months of his administration, President Wilson made no public appearances for a prolonged period and was kept closely guarded in such complete seclusion that even delegations from Congress were unable to get any information to support or refute prevailing rumors regarding the serious nature of his illness. A situation of that sort is much too dangerous to the best interests of the United States and its people to be risked indefinitely. Most Americans will agree that official procedure should be established to enable Congress to determine if or when a President is physically incapable of performing the duties of his office and then to follow the course of action prescribed by law.

NEW SYSTEM OF ELECTING PRESIDENT GAINS MOMENTUM

(By Blair Moody)

Washington, May 8.—A proposal for drastic and fundamental reform of the system of electing the President of the United States, is gaining momentum in Congress as the possibility of a 1948 electoral college mess begins to take shape.

begins to take shape.

Judiciary Committees of both Senate and House have now reported favorably a revolutionary constitutional amendment on which Senator Henry Cabot Longe, Jr., Republican, of Massachusetts, and several House colleagues have been quietly plugging for several months.

This scheme would wipe out the system under which all the electoral votes of a State are plunked for the candidate who wins the State, however narrow his margin.

Instead, an automatic system of splitting the electoral vote of each State, in proportion to the actual popular vote cast, would be substituted. It would be tantamount to a direct popular election of President, but retain the electoral-vote device as a protection against a situation where fraud in one State nullified honest votes in other States.

The whole system of adding up the votes that actually elect a President would be changed. The electoral college itself would be abolished. There would be no opportunity for an "elector" to cast the votes of several hundred thousand people according to his individual whim.

Here is how the change would work:

In 1944, Michigan cast slightly over 2,200,-000 votes for President, with Roosevelt getting 22,000 more votes than Dewey. In electoral college, Roosevelt got 19 votes, Dewey none.

Under the Lodge amendment, Roosevelt would have won 9536 votes from Michigan, Dewey 9343.

Massachusetts cast about 2,000,000 votes giving Roosevelt a margin of 114,000. Instead of all 16 Bay State votes going to F. D. R., Lodge would have split them 8448 to 7618.

The 1944 nation-wide vote was 25,602,505 for Roosevelt, 22,006,278 for Dewey. The electoral vote was 432 to 99

The new scheme would have made the electoral vote exactly in proportion to the popular vote—300,726 for Roosevelt and 223,529 for Dewey.

CITE ALABAMA ELECTION

The Senate Committee acted following this week's election in Alabama, where 11 Democratic Presidential electors were chosen who, had pledged themselves to vote against President Truman or any other "civil rights" nominee.

If this pattern is followed in other Southern States, as expected, there is strong prospect that the Democrats will lose 60 electoral votes which otherwise they would surely get under the South's one-party system.

In a close election, this could take the

In a close election, this could take the election out of the hands of the people entirely and throw it into the hands of the House of Representatives. The electoral college chooses the President only if it casts a majority for one man.

Few observers think this will happen this year because of the anticipated Republican Presidential victory. To vitiate the popular election, Mr. Truman would have to carry the country by a margin less than the total electoral votes of which rebel electors were depriving him.

Only if the President reversed all the forecasts through an uexpected show of strength or the nomination of a GOP candidate the people would not accept could this situation develop this year.

PRIED OUT OF COMMITTEE

But the Alabama high light of the antiquated electoral system gave Lodge his opportunity not alone to pry his amendment out of the Senate Judiciary Committee, but to get a promise of serious consideration from the GOP Senate Policy Committee. Representatives Gosserr, Democrat of Texas and LEA, Democrat of California had already obtained a unanimous vote from the Judiciary Committee.

Longe argues his amendment will not only assure the people's votes of being counted as they are cast, but would eliminate many evils long considered inherent in our politi-cal "game," which in fact are based on the system itself.

It would, for example, end the balance-ofpower system in which a narrow margin of votes in a big State can mean more in an election than many more votes cast in less pivotal States.

Longe says, it would also end the system under which minority votes in a State are disenfranchised. It would make a vote in a small State as potent as one in a big State. would end the situation where Presidential candidates are drawn almost invariably from large doubtful States where their local appeal will help tip a big electoral bonus into the party basket.

It would, above all, end any danger that the candidate receiving a popular majority might be shut out in the electoral college. This happened three times in our history— when John Quincy Adams was counted in over Jackson in 1824, Hayes over Tilden in 1876, and Harrison over Cleveland in 1888.

RANKIN AGAINST IT

No one of influence in Congress has come out against the Lodge-Gossett proposal, its easily audible opponent being Representative John Rankin, Democrat, of Mississippi. Several Republican leaders, however, are looking on it with skepticism.

Senator Taff and House Majority Leader HALLECK suspect it might have an adverse effect on the Republican Party, since big Northern States would ordinarily split their electoral votes almost evenly while Southern States ordinarily cast an overwhelming vote for the Democratic candidate.

Longe is endeavoring to lift consideration above the partisan level. He suggests to his party leaders, whose support is needed to pass the measure, that while Texas would cast a more lopsided electoral vote than New York, and South Carolina than Massachusetts, a system of making every vote count might ultimately smash the one-party sys-tem in both heavily Democratic and heavily Republican States.

[From the Jamestown (N. Y.) Shopping Guide of May 13, 1948]

"REAL DEMOCRACY AT HOME"

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, of Massachusetts, has returned from the wars overseas to his own private war to do away with the electoral college and let total majority votes do the electing of President and Vice President. Such a change, of course, would require a constitutional amendment, and up to now it has been thought impossible to get an amendment ratified, because all or most of the small States would refuse. Their argument would be that since each has as many electors as it has Senators and Representatives, each small State, which has just as many Senators as each large State, really has more votes in the college in proportion to population than a larger State.

There is pending before the Committee on the Judiciary a joint resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution so that in future Presidential elections the electoral votes of the States shall be counted in proportion to the popular vote. remedy one of the most serious defects in our present system of electing a President.

It would make the popular vote decisive. In the 1944 Presidential election Governor Dewey carried Ohio. He received 1,582,293 President Roosevelt received 1,570,votes. 763 votes. That was a difference of only 11,530 votes. Yet Governor Dewey chalked up all of Ohio's electors. In other words, 11,530 voters determined the election so far as Ohio was concerned, and more than one and one-half million Democratic voters were in effect disfranchised.

If 2,000,000 people in New York State vote for one candidate for President, and 2,000,500 vote for another man, there is no reason why 500 votes should swing the whole 2,000,000 votes to the other man. But that is the way it now stands, and it is high time to change it, since we are out to wet nurse the world on democratic breakfast food.

IMAGINE! REAL GOP VOTES CAST IN THE SOLID SOUTH!

(By Herman A. Lowe)

Washington, June 4.—Picture the Republican nominee for President of the United States campaigning for electoral votes in deepest Alabama and Mississippi—and get-

Picture his Democratic opponent confi-dently stumping Maine and Vermont for votes in the same election race—and getting Picture Negroes voting in large numbers in the South-and their votes counting.

Picture it, because it can happen hereand because the chances are better than you think of its happenings in the next few vears.

Senate Joint Resolution 200 is the little known piece of legislation which would break down once and for all the solid South and the one-party monopoly States of the North.

It actually has gotten as far as approval by the Senate Judiciary Committee, while a companion measure has been approved by the House Judiciary Committee. Its sponsor is Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts.

The legislation will get no further this time but maybe next year, in the Eighty-first Congress, it will catch fire and roll through to passage. Sentiment for it has been growing strongly in Congress, even among southern Democrats.

In a Presidential election year, Senate Joint Resolution 200 is a mighty interesting piece of legislation. It proposes a constitutional amendment to wipe out the archaic electoral college system, which today is no more use to the body politic than an appendix is to the human body.

Unlike other proposed repealers of recent years, the resolution would not wipe out the 531 electoral votes and throw the election open on a national across-the-board basis, depending upon the total popular vote. (That proposal would never get anywhere because the small States say they would lose their importance completely.)

Here is what it would do:

It would continue the present 531 electoral votes. They would be divided among the States as at present—one for each Member of the House and one for each Member of the Senate from the State.

But they would be divided proportionately depending upon the division of the popular vote among the candidates. In 1944, for example, Pen. sylvania cast 1,940,479 votes for Franklin D. Roosevelt. It cast 1,835,048 votes for Thomas E. Dewey. Yet all of Pennsylvania's 35 electoral votes were given to Roosevelt. But in the State of South Dakota, in which he received 135,265 votes, Dewey got the 4 electoral votes. Thus, Dewey got more electoral votes in South Dakota than he re-ceived in Pennsylvania which gave him about twelve times as many popular votes.

Under the provisions of Senate Joint Resolution 200, the 35 Pennsylvania votes would be divided as follows: Roosevelt, 17.897 electoral votes; Dewey, 16.924 electoral votes. In South Dakota, on the basis of the vote cast, Dewey would have received only 2.333 electoral votes: Roosevelt would have received be the man with the most. Go back to 1944 again. Nation-wide, Roosevelt received 25,602,505 popular votes which brought him 432 electoral votes. Dewey, with 22,006,278 popular votes, received only 99 electoral votes.

Under Senate Joint Resolution 200ing through the State by State break-down-Roosevelt would have gotten 300,726 electoral votes. Dewey's share would have been 223,529. The small discrepancy between these figures and 531 total is taken up by the small third party votes.

Here is what would happen in the South.

Whether Mississippi cast 250,000 popular votes in a general election for President or only 60,000, it would still have the same number of electoral votes—nine.

But for the first time since it became a one-party State all of whose fights are setin the primary, there would be real incentive to turn out a big vote in the general election. The moribund Republican Party of the State would come alive. Even though its vote were small, it would count for something toward the total electoral votes of the Republican nominee. And, in order to keep the Democratic ratio very large, the Demo-crats in their turn would turn out a bigger

The same would be true in all the other Dixie States. And the Democrats there who have fought to keep Negroes out of the Democratic primaries would watch Southern Negroes march to the polls in the general election to vote the Republican ticket knowing that every vote so cast would help the GOP nominee. Southern Democrats fa-vor the plan, too. They say their party would no longer take them for granted, but would have to woo them.

Of course, in solidly Republican Maine and Vermont, the reverse would be true, with the Democrats the gainers.

Hence, for the first time, everybody's vote would count. No territory would be sure territory. Candidates would pursue voters in places where the nominees have never bothered to go before.

Democracy would really be in action in our Presidential elections.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1274. An act conveying all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in Wilkinson County, Miss., to the heirs, assigns, and successors in title of William Collins;

S. 1275. An act conveying all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in Warren County, Miss., to the heirs, assigns, and successors in title of Moses Evans;

S. 1303. An act for the relief of Lydia A. Thompson;

S. 1337. An act for the relief of Hou Chung

S. 1409. An act for the relief of Markoto Iwamatsu, Atsushi Jun Iwamatsu, and Tomoe Iwamatsu: and

S. 1606. An act for the relief of Wladyslav Plywacki.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6556 to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to each of the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1853. An act to authorize the Coast Guard to establish, maintain, and operate aids to navigation; and

S. 2122. An act to authorize the Coast Guard to operate and maintain ocean stations.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6628) to provide for a program in the field of lighter-than-air aeronautics under the direction of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6705) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JENSEN, Mr. FENTON, Mr. STOCKMAN, Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma, Mr. KIRWAN, Mr. NORRELL, and Mr. GORE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 4663. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the middle district of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claims of the owners of the fee-simple titles and leasehold interests in lands leased to the United States by the city of Macon, Georgia, for the use as a part of the site of Camp Wheeler, Ga.;

H. R. 6430. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6556. An act to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6716. An act to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to transfer a portion of the Veterans' Administration center at Los Angeles, Calif., to the State of California for the use of the University of California: and

H. R. 6726. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for, foster, and aid in coordinating research relating to dental diseases and conditions, and for other purposes.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS AND INDEPENDENT EXECUTIVE AGENCIES, 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6481) making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BALDWIN. I understand that the Senate is now considering the committee amendment to House bill 6481, which is in effect an amendment to increase by $4,000,000 the appropriation in the bill so as to provide for the construction of one steam plant at New Johnsonville. Tenn. Am I correct in my understanding?

PRESIDING OFFICER. The The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The CHEFK CLERK. On page 2, line 7, after the word "vehicles," it is proposed to strike out "$27,389,061", and insert in lieu thereof "$30,972,061."

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, when the Tennessee Valley Authority was created in 1933 it was established to improved the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River, to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley, to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley, to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes.

The President's budget message for the fiscal year 1948 contains language summarizing the specific congressional authority granted to the Tennessee Valley Authority, and I read from that message:

To accomplish these purposes the corporation was specifically authorized to construct such dams and reservoirs in the Tennessee River and its tributaries as will provide and maintain a 9-foot channel in the river from Knoxville to its mouth, and will best serve to promote navigation on the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and control destructive flood waters in the Tennessee and Mississippi drainage basins.

Then the statement goes on further to say:

Insofar as may be consistent with these navigation and flood-control objectives, it was directed to provide and operate facilities for the generation and sale of electric energy.

In other words, at all times the generation of electric energy as a result of this great public work was of a secondary and incidental consideration.

I would be the last one to say that in development so gigantic as this we should not use every advantage we can obtain from it. In other words, when the Federal Government enters upon the task of developing a great natural resource it seems to me altogether proper that we should develop that resource to the ultimate use to which it can be put, that is, as a natural resource.

In this particular situation—and there are many others like it throughout the United States-there are natural resources which cannot be developed by private capital, which cannot be developed in any other way than by the Government stepping in and providing funds for the development. That was done in the case of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. President, my objection to the committee amendment is based upon the fundamental proposition that it is now proposed by the amendment to go further than was ever originally intended. It seems to me that we have reached the place where we must make a very important decision in the matter of policy. It is perfectly proper for the Federal Government to develop the Nation's natural resources and use them to their utmost advantage. But the proposition now appears to be this: There is in prospect the probability that there will be a demand for electric power over and beyond what can be provided as originally intended in the act. There is in prospect a demand for more than the ordinary and proper development by the Government of these natural resources, can provide. It was essentially considered that the hydroelectric energy generated would be developed exclusively and entirely as a result of the construction of the various dams and the improvement of the rivers; but now it is proposed to go a step further. It is proposed to take the step of supplementing with steam plants, built at Government expense, the deficiencies in the waterpower potential.

The result of such a policy is bound to be that the Government having undertaken to develop a natural resource when it is found that the cheaper power provided is in great demand, and that the demand exceeds the potential of the hydroelectric development, the Government will then take Federal funds and proceed to tax all the taxpayers in the United States in order that the companies which are attracted to the Tennessee Valley by cheap power may enjoy the subsidy of cheaper power.

It seems to me that that is a very marked departure from what was the original intention. It is a marked departure from the apparent and announced purpose of the act in all the years from the time the enterprise was first conceived up until now. It puts the Government into the field of supplying public power, no matter how it may be supplied, whether by the development of a natural resource or by the development of a steam plant at tremendous expense.

This is only an initial appropriation of $4,000,000. I understand that the total will reach an additional $54,000,000 for the steam plant. So eventually we shall have invested there a very substantial

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield. Mr. HAWKES. In addition to the $54,000,000, does not the project involve an expense of many million dollars more, which would bring the total up to approximately $85,000.000?

Mr. FERGUSON. $84,000,000. Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in accord with what the Senator from Connecticut is saying. I am not against this appropriation because I believe that some other part of the country ought to have it instead of Tennessee. I would not be standing here on that basis. There may be a good argument on that basis; but I am against the proposal as being a fundamental invasion of the private enterprise system of the United States. To me it means the very thing which Chief Justice John Marshall had in mind when he said that the power to tax is the power to destroy. I think that is what the Senator from Connecticut is talking about. If we can tax the people all over the United States and put the Government in business in one section with that tax money, and putting it in business in that section interferes with the free competitive enterprise system, we are getting away from what made America. Is that what the Senator had in mind?

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the Senator for his comment. This is a deliberate step in that direction.

The proponents of this measure say that those who oppose it are protecting the power interests. But the issue goes a good deal further than that. It goes to the extent of providing cheaper-power subsidies at the expense of the Federal taxpayers, subsidies which I believe will have the effect of taking industries from other parts of the country and moving them to this particular area.

It appears from the record in this particular case that the demand for power in this area, so far as industrial use is concerned, is not a demand from a great many small industries. It is a demand from several large industries which have gone there.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield. Mr. HAWKES. Last night I had in mind a point which I did not have an opportunity to bring up. I believe that the distinguished junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Stewart], a very dear friend of mine, stated that the TVA power had not attracted any new industry. He asked anyone to name the new industries which had been attracted.

I invite the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the fact that even if it did not attract any new industry, but made the industries which are there grow and develop at the expense of other industries in competition with them in other parts of the Nation because the industries in the favored section obtained power more cheaply than anyone could furnish it at any other point in the United States because of the use of the taxpayers' money in producing power at a cheaper cost, that would not change my position.

No one in the world knows exactly what the cost is. I have heard the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] argue that the books and accounting records did not tell us what the cost of the power was in the TVA. I have heard him argue that point time and again.

So I say that in justice to the rest of the Nation, we should support what I believe is the foundation upon which the whole country rests, the protection of the right of the private individual to invest his funds in private business and serve the people in competition with other private individuals, rather than in competition with the Government, which takes tax money out of the pockets of the people through the power to tax. That is the thing which the Senator and I must protect if we are to preserve the American system, the greatest system in the world, to which system th whole world has come twice in the past 25 years for relief from slavery.

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator is correct, and I thank him for his comment.

Mr. President, I was saying that those who propose this amendment, and those who object to the position which the junior Senator from Connecticut has taken, are prone to cry that we are trying to protect the power interests.

The issue goes much deeper than that. We are not primarily concerned in protecting the power interests of our State or any other. They have done a great job for the economy of the country. They have been well able to take care of themselves. What I am primarily in-terested in is this: If the industries in any section of the country-in Connecticut, other States of New England, the Northwest, or any other part of the countryare attracted away from those areas by cheap subsidized power in any other part of the country, then the people in the territories from which those industries are withdrawn, or in the territories to which no new industries come, will be without employment. In my own State we are now faced with the prospect in my home town of the removal of a large industry to another part of the United States. We recognize that because of the nature of this industry and its requirements, it probably will have to go to some other part of the country as a matter of policy. But the result will be to leave 7,500 people in that small community without employment which many of them have been accustomed to have over a period of 20 years. So many of those people will be out of work; they will lose their jobs, or else they will have to pull up their roots and move to some other part of the country.

I am primarily interested in that phase of the matter, Mr. President.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield. Mr. HAWKES. From what I heard the Senator say last night, and also from what he has said today, I believe he is no more interested in protecting the private power industry per se than I am. The Senator from Connecticut wishes to see the power industry, as a part of the American free enterprise system, get a square deal.

Mr. BALDWIN. That is correct. Mr. HAWKES. And the Senator wishes to see the people generally get a square deal, by not having taxes taken from all over the Nation and used in only one locality in a way that is opposed to the people's fundamental interests.

Mr. BALDWIN. That is correct. Mr. HAWKES. I agree with the Senator as to that. I hold no more brief for that industry than I do for any other segment of the economy of the United States.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey is correct. The private power companies employ hundreds of thousands of people, and they represent the investments of literally millions of people.

So we have great conflicting interests here. When the Government steps in. as is proposed to be done in this case. under the guise of developing a natural resource, and then after that development is made, propuses to subsidize something really incidental to the development of that natural resource, the Government is going too far.

There is no more reason why this amendment to make an appropriation for a steam plant in Tennessee should be made than there is that the Congress should enact a bill providing an appropriation for a steam plant in any other part of the United States where additional power is needed; and there are other sections of the United States where the power load now is too heavy for the facilities at present provided.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me say that his observation, which has been repeated several times, that there is a possibility that industry will be drawn from other sections of the United States into the Tennessee Valley is, I think, based upon an improper predicate, because of the fact that, as I am advised, there is nothing on which he can base such a statement. I inquired rather carefully whether the presence of cheap power, as we call it, in the Tennessee Valley, by reason of the TVA, had attracted outside industries; and I was advised that that had not occurred.

As has been pointed out by the Senator from New Jersey, no doubt there has been some growth of industry in the valley by reason of the establishment of new industries, starting from scratch, so to speak. The Senator has pointed to that several times. I agree with the Senator that I do not wish to see the United States Government indulge in any activity which will give any section of the United States an undue and improper advantage over any other section. But I do not believe that will be the case in this instance.

Mr. President, for the past 25 or 30 years, and, indeed until the advent of World War II, it has been historically true that in the part of the Southland now served by the TVA, and also in other sections of the South, the youth of our land have been attracted to the large, highly-industrialized centers of the East. They have gone there by the hundreds of thousands. Those whom we had hoped would be our future citizens, those whom we had hoped would build our communities in the years ahead, have left our part of the country, and have gone to the industrialized sections of the East, because in those highly industrialized sections, employment existed in a manner and to an extent not common in the South.

In the South we have come up from an utterly impoverished state to a sort of mediocre industrial activity, and now we are beginning to taste just a little of the better things related to industries. But for 25 or 30 years we saw the youth of the South, both white and black, go to the industrial centers of the East, because of the fact that sufficient industrial employment was not available in the South.

I wish to state one of the reasons for that situation, and it is one of the inequalities which has existed for 25 years. I have fought it with all the power and ability at my command, and many others have fought equally hard to have that situation corrected. Today we are just beginning to see it corrected. I refer to the inequality of the freight rates in the South and Southeast and in the area generally south of the Ohio River. We paid a freight rate on manufactured goods approximately 30 or 40 percent higher than the rates paid in the industrial East. In other words, in Chicago there is a great market for shoes and in New York there is a great market for shoes, because there are more people there. However, a shoe factory in Nashville, Tenn., could not sell to the people in those areas in competition with a factory located in Ohio or in a place as far from that market as Ohio is, for the freight charges from Nashville were approximately 30 percent more on that manufactured article. That was an unfair condition. It was a subsidy to the manufacturers in the industrial East.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. That has been corrected; has it not?

Mr. STEWART. It is in the process of correction, and I understand from the Interstate Commerce Commission that possibly 60 to 70 percent of that condition has already been corrected.

I prefaced my remarks with the statement that I do not believe in subsidies and I do not believe in one section of the United States being given by its Government an unfair advantage over another section. Of course, we are certainly entitled to take advantage of natural conditions which exist.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. STEWART. I yield. Mr. BALDWIN. Let me say to my distinguished friend the Senator from Tennessee that I have no objection whatever to having the Government take advantage of natural conditions which exist, and the Government already has taken advantage of the natural conditions which exist there, to the tune of millions upon millions of dollars. What I do object to is having Federal funds used to add artificial, mechanical means to supplement the natural ones; and that is what this proposal is.

If we adopt this policy in connection with the development of every natural resource, eventually we shall supplement our natural resources with artificial, mechanical supplementation, until finally we shall have made that which was at first incidental of primary importance and have completely subsidized the power business in the United States.

If we wish to do that as a matter of policy, of course, it can be done; but I wish to point out to the Senate that that is the direction in which we are about to set out, under the provisions of this amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President. I say to the Senator from Connecticut that I do not seek any unfair or unjust advantage at all. I do not wish to have the Government subsidize the power interests in that valley.

In order that we may find a common ground on which to stand, let me ask this question of the Senator: He agrees, does he not, that there is proper justification for the improvement of the valley by the building of these dams?

Mr. BALDWIN. I absolutely do. Mr. STEWART. They are built, of course, for multiple purposes-for flood control and navigation; and, as the Senator pointed out a moment ago, power is incidental.

Then it seems to me that the Government and the people are entitled to have manufactured at those dams such amounts of electrical power as can be manufactured by the hydroelectric elements there.

Mr. BALDWIN. I agree as to that. Mr. STEWART. Suppose in norm Suppose in normal times, by the erection of these dams, we can supply 18,000,000,000 kilowatts, or whatever the number might be, of power; but suppose a drought comes along and cuts down to 15,000,000,000 kilowatts the amount of power which can be generated. That makes for an uneconomical condition; does it not?

Mr. BALDWIN. As I read the charts which were submitted at the hearing, there is yet a tremendous margin of possibility for the development of the hydroelectric potential there. I would say that if we have to have more development of a hydroelectric nature there, let us have it along those lines, but let us not step in with a steam plant to supplement it.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, last night it was suggested that in order to make an economic balance-I believe that is the way it was expressed-the relation of steam power to hydroelectric power should be about 25 percent, in order to come out on the proposition and make it economically practical. At least that is the way businessmen figure it.

Mr. BALDWIN. Exactly. Now, let the businessmen treat it that way. Let it be dealt with that way, because we went into this undertaking, not primarily for the purpose of developing hydroelectric energy; we went into it primarily for the purpose of a navigation program, of a flood-control program, and things of that kind. Those were the primary purposes of the project.

Mr. STEWART. But it has become a business, and we are now confronted with the proposition of only 17 percent steam power, and with the completion of other cams, I am advised this merning it will te cut down to about 12 or 13 percent.

Mr. BALDWIN. I understand there is a steam plant down there now standing idle. It could be very well used.

Mr. STEWART. Yes. That was brought out I understand. I endeavored to find that testimony, but the Senate was about to adjourn at that time, and I did not inject myself into the argument because I was not sure about it. That is an old antiquated steam plant which would not produce enough electricity to burn half a dozen old Mazda bulbs, speaking figuratively. It is at Memphis, practically ready to be dismantled. Sixty percent of its output, at the least, I believe, was sold to the electric power company in Arkansas, and I think it has about 40 percent more, but it is not practical to use that plant at all. It is an out-of-date plant located in the heart of the city of Memphis. It could not be expanded. It would not be practical to use it, and I do not think it ought to play any part in the consideration of this suggestion at all, because it could not generate enough electricity even to begin to relieve the situation. The TVA is getting 20 percent of its capacity now.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, to finish my statement in connection with this subject, I should first like to have the correct figures in the RECORD as to the amount of money it would cost. The appropriation is $4,000,000. The total ultimate cost is estimated at approximately $84,000,000. The justification offered for the construction of such a generating plant, as testified in the hearings by the chairman of the TVA, is based upon alleged obligations of the TVA to supply all power demands no matter how great, of the Tennessee Valley area. There is where we have got to make a decision, Mr. President. Are we going to invest Federal funds to furnish all the power for the Tennessee Valley, no matter how great the demand for it may be?

The testimony of the officials of the TVA further indicates that the Authority recognizes that although substantial additional power can be generated by the installation of new hydro genera-tors, it is approaching the limit of the amount of electricity which can be generated by water power harnessed primarily for purposes of flood control and navigation. Therefore, Mr. President, the original purpose, the original intention for which millions of dollars of Federal funds have been poured into this Authority, is going to be changed, it is going to be diverted, it is going to be enlarged. It is something else than we intended originally it would be.

The proposal to construct this steam plant is based upon the recognition of these two factors, and is intended to provide additional generating capacity to meet the currently estimated requirements of the foreseeable future for electric power in the Tennessee Valley area.

That last paragraph I read directly from the House committee report.

It was originally contemplated that the electric energy generated here would be sold to municipalities and private users and people who were listed as preferred customers, and I think, Mr. President, that is a perfectly laudable thing in the development of a natural resource of this kind.

The point I make is that the reason why the present capacity is overloaded now is because of some big industries that are going there and some other big industries that may very well be attracted there, that will leave people in other parts of the country without employment or else require them to move into this section of the country and compete for jobs with the people already there.

The report goes on to state:

There is no necessity whatsoever for the installation now or in the foreseeable future of the proposed steam plant so far as the preferred class of customers is concerned.

Reading still further from the report:

In fact, at the present time less than a third of the power generated by TVA is used by the preferred customers. The balance is sold to industrial users and private public utility companies, including such companies as the Aluminum Co. of America, the Mon-santo Chemical Co., Victor Chemical Works, Reynolds Metal Co., etc.

Mr. President, I strenuously object to taking money from the taxpayers in other parts of the country, particularly from my own New England, and my own Connecticut, to subsidize power to be sold at cheap rates to these tremendously large corporations, and that is why I am speaking in opposition to the provision in the bill

Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. COOPER, Mr. McKELLAR, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. If I may say to the Senator from Michigan, I should like to be permitted merely to finish my remarks.

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield at this time?

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Connecticut does not have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor, and he has yielded to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator evidently did not hear the testimony taken in this very case. The statement was made time and time again that we would take into the Valley business and industries from other parts of the country. Then the witnesses would be asked the question, "Whom do you know that has gone from your State or from anywhere else down to the Tennessee Valley? Who is it? What business has been lost to your part of the country? Can you name a single one?" Without exception, and I ask those who are on the committee to confirm what I saythe witnesses replied they did not know of a single concern that had moved to the Tennessee Valley from another part of the country. The Senator from Connecticut is mistaken in his facts. The testimony is not that way. The testimony is the other way.

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the Senator

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I know the Senator from Connecticut wants to make a speech, and I hesitate to transgress, but the Senator is reading a report from the House committee, which report I very earnestly submit was based on misinformation, on untruths and half-truths submitted by the power companies through their representatives here in Washington, Mr. Purcell Smith, and others. Mr. Smith. himself, in a meeting of the Senate committee, with the charts and graphs which he had presented to the House committee, and which he brought to the Senate committee, admitted they were not true, were not accurate. On page 269 of the hearings, the Senator will find that admitted when I asked Mr. Smith some questions. I merely want to read this question, addressed to Mr. Smith:

Senator Hill. Then the truth is these graphs that you have here really-may not be your fault—but they do not present a true picture. do they?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly not.

I suggest to the Senator that he, in my time, analyze the graphs and charts presented by the power people. He will then see wherein they are misleading, wherein they are not true, wherein they are false. I submit that the report from which the Senator is now reading was based upon those misleading and untrue charts, and, therefore, the report is not a correct report, because it is based on incorrect information.

Mr. BALDWIN. What is right and what is wrong is often a matter of opinion, but the fundamental fact remains, Mr. President, that when at the expense of customers who pay the rates and stockholders who advance the money and others who are willing to invest in the enterprise, all the facilities have to be built by private means in one part of the country, and then like facilities are constructed out of public tax funds in some other part of the country, the price of the power which is generated by the investment of public funds is bound to be cheaper. It is just as simple as that. That is exactly the direction in which we are moving here. We are moving in the direction of subsidizing power. If we want to do that, it is a matter of policy. We can do it, but we should know what we are doing before we undertake it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield. Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I always have great admiration for the logic Senator, but in this instance I submit that his argument is based upon a misapprehension and an unjustified assumption. He assumes that Congress is being asked to appropriate money to build this plant solely for the purpose of supplying anticipated demands in the Tennessee Valley. I know the Senator is a good lawyer, and I want to ask him if it is not true that Congress has authority to appropriate money to build this plant if its construction is necessary to balance and firm the power generated by the dams in the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. BALDWIN. I think the Government has the power to spend the taxpayers' money for any reasonable public purpose. The question with which we are concerned is not a question of legal power. I am not attacking this amendment on the ground of constitutionality. but on the ground of national policy. I say that when we subsidize power in one part of the country, eventually we shall retard the development of other parts of the country where the people generate their own power and its generation is not supported by Federal funds.

Mr. COOPER. I address the Senator now upon the question of policy. Would the Senator say that it is good policy to authorize the Tennessee Valley Authority to construct dams and to develop hydroelectric power, and yet to deny it the authority to construct sufficient steam plants to firm and sell efficiently the power developed at the dams?

Mr. BALDWIN I would say that when the Federal Government embarks upon the appropriation of millions of dollars for the ostensible purpose of flood control, improvement of navigation, and incidentally supplying hydroelectric power to municipalities and private owners, and then embarks upon another tremendous program of constructing steam generating plants in order to supply electricity to some other part of the country, it is a marked departure from what was originally intended.

Mr. COOPER. I submit that the Senator has not answered my question. I asked the Senator if he thought it good policy to appropriate money to build dams and permit the distribution of power from the dams, and yet deny the Authority the power to build sufficient steam plants to market efficiently the power developed at the dams. I think the Senator will admit that private companies producing hydroelectric power find it necessary to build steam plants. Does the Senator think that it should not be done by the Tennessee Valley Authority?

Mr. BALDWIN. I say, very definitely, that as a matter of policy it should not be done. The Tennessee Valley Authority started as a navigation proposition, a reforestation proposition, a flood-control proposition. The power-generating feature was incidental. If, in order to make the power element efficient, we have to appropriate Federal funds, there will be no end to it. If a steam-generating plant costing $84,000,000 will not supply sufficient power, we will have to have another $84,000,000 plant, and then another, ad infinitum, to supplement the hydroelectric development. I have no objection to a steam plant being erected, but let it be paid for in the same way it is done in other sections of the country.

Mr. COOPER. I again submit that the distinguished Senator has not answered my question. The point I am making is this: The courts and the Congress have said that money can be appropriated to build dams and that there is authority to dispose of the power developed at the dams. If there is the right to dispose of the power, there is authority to do so efficiently, and of electric energy developed there, it follows that we should appropriate sufficient money to build such steam plants as will enable the Tennessee Valley Authority to efficiently dispose of the power. There is a distinction between my point and the statement of the Senator from Connecticut a few minutes ago.

Mr. BALDWIN. There is nothing in the bill which says that.

Mr. COOPER. The facts developed show that the steam plant is to be constructed to secure sufficient power to balance and firm the power produced at the dams. There is a great difference between such an objective and the objective of supplying large industries, which the distinguished Senator states is the purpose of the appropriation.

I desire to correct my good friend on his reference to $34,000,000 as the cost of the project. If he will study the testimony of Mr. Clapp, he will find that Mr. Clapp makes it clear that the cost of the steam plant is $54,000,000, to be expended on three sections, and that the first section to which the pending appropriation would apply will cost $22,500,000.

Mr. BALDWIN. The amount is not of primary importance; so far as the principle is concerned, it is more or less incidental. I took the figure of $84,000,000 from page 12 of the House report on the

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield. Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to reply to the Senator from Kentucky. As I understand his argument, it is that if the United States Government erects in a river valley a large dam for the purpose of flood control, and there is a flood, the maximum amount of water in the dam at the peak is used as a basis for the computation, and if for 2 or 3 days power is generated at that peak, after that they are entitled to erect steam plants or oher plants to generate that amount of power the remainder of the year until the next flood comes. That is exactly the argument here.

Mr. BALDWIN. That is exactly it. Mr. COOPER. I disagree. I say there is a second question involved: Is it good policy? In the case stated by the Senator from Michigan, no one would say it is good policy to construct steam plants.

Mr. FERGUSON. In what part of the year do they generate the peak?

Mr. COOPER. In the case of TVA, we have spent millions of dollars. We have appropriated year after year money to construct dams. It is evident that the construction of this steam plant is required to balance the production of pow-er in the valley, and it is good policy in

Mr. FERGUSON. I heard the testimoney and I have read it. The testimony does not bear out that statment. The testimony is the cities intend and expect to grow in the next 2 or 3 years, and if power were generated from the steam plant it would be available for the industry that is coming in.

Mr. COOPER. I do not want to disagree with the Senator as to what he heard. I suppose it is written down in the record. I should like, however, to read what Mr. Clapp said on this point. Mr. FERGUSON. We have had experience with Mr. Clapp's testimony. I want to relate to the Senate at this time that last year the Authority was given approximately $3,000,000 in connection with the South Holston and Wataguga Dams, and Mr. Clapp, as manager of the TVA, used the money, not on the dams, but for what he called resource development. That is shown by the official record. So the record is clear as to what they want to use the power for.

Mr. HILL rose.

Mr. COOPER. I should like to read, if the Senator will permit-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Tobey in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield; and if so, to whom? Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Is it not true that there was a disagreement or misunderstanding between the Senate conferees and the House conferees about the expenditure of the $3,000,000, and the TVA did spend that money, as the Senator has said, but in accord with what was the view of the House conferees?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, this is what happened. Mr. Clapp had some friends in the House who were favorable to it, and he went to them and got an opinion. He then went to the Bureau of the Budget and received an adverse opinion. He never came near the Senate conferees until after they discovered what he was doing, and then they called him in for an examination. That is what Mr. Clapp did. That is the way Mr. Clapp has treated the Senate of the United States.

In this connection I submit an extract from a letter from Mr. F. S. Lawton, Acting Director of the Budget, to Mr. Gordon Clapp, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXTRACT FROM LETTER DATED OCTOBER 3, 1947, FROM BUREAU OF THE BUDGET TO MR. GORDON CLAPP

This leaves for consideration the following allocations from the new appropriations: (a) Investigations, future proj-

(b) South Holston-Watauga (c) Chemical plant 2.320.000 3, 243, 000 (d) Resource development____ 5, 490, 000

The budget provided $90,000 for item (a) Investigations. The record indicates that this figure was acceptable to both House and Senate. The allocation of $299,000 to this work, despite a congressional cut of 30 percent in the total new appropriation requested for TVA would, in the absence of extraordinary justification, be at least questionable.

In justifying your budget before the Congress you urged the necessity of $5,254,000 new appropriation as an addition to $12,056,000 of carry-over funds, or a total of $17,310,000 to carry forward the work on the South Holston and Watauga Dams according to schedule in fiscal year 1948. The House, assuming a $12,056,000 carry-over, cut the new appropriation item to $3,254,000. The Senate eliminated provision of new funds for these projects. The conferees restored the

$3,254,000. You have allocated $2,320,000. Your Miss Owen informs us that while the conferees were at work on the bill she, in response to a request for the minimum sum necessary to continue the work on the two dams on schedule, gave the House Clerk serving the conferees a figure of $13.910,000. This with a carry-over allocation of $12,056,000, of which the conferees were doubtless aware, would have required new funds in the amount of $1,854,000. The conferees, nevertheless, provided $3,254,000, and the bill as enacted specifies "not to exceed" this sum for these two projects.

Miss Owen has also informed us that two minority Members of the House conferee group have assured her that it was the intention of the conference committee that, if TVA had any funds not necessary for the dam construction work, such funds could be used for resource development work and other features of the agency program. Accepting all this, the fact remains that the $18,700,000 finally appropriated included "not to exceed $3,254,000" for these projects, and there is nothing in the record to indicate that less than that sum would be necessary. In addition, you had urged, in presenting the budget to both House and Senate, that $5,254,000 would be necessary, plus carry-over, or a total of $17,310,000. Even though this entire sum were available for 1948, additional funds would be necessary for 1949, 1950, and 1951. Obviously the more done in 1948 the less needed in subsequent years.

It is, therefore, most difficult for us to find any basis for advice to anyone that less than the budgeted amount would be necessary in 1948, or for a finding by you that of the $3,254,000 earmarked for these projects in the appropriation act, any amount could be regarded as "left over" or "not necessary for 1948 construction."

The budget as submitted to Congress provided for chemical plant new money in the sum of $8,686,000. The House cut this to $6,686,000. The Senate, aware of the probability that your carry-over would be $15,-000,000 instead of $12,056,000, cut this item $3,000,000. The conferees restored it to $5,000,000 and the bill earmarked "not to exceed" $5,000,000 of the new appropriation. You have allocated $2,216,000 of carry-over plus $3,243,000 of the new appropriation, or a total of $5,459,000 to this project. This allocation is $3,227,000, or 37 percent below the budget, and $1,227,000 below the Houseapproved figure. Apparently there has been no statement or suggestion by anyone, except as inferred by your allocation, that your budget request of $8,686,000 did not represent the minimum necessary for 1948.

With respect to resource development, the budget provided $6,000,000. The House approved $5,500,000; the Senate, $3,000,000. The conferees' intentions with respect to this item are not entirely clear, but by eliminating the items which are not in dispute between the Houses of Congress, and consider-"not to exceed" $3,254,000 earmarked for the South Holston and Watauga Dams and "not to exceed" $5,000,000 for the chemicalplant project, there would remain $3,328,000 for resource development. Your allocation is $5,490,000-within $10,000 of the House figure, $2,490,000 above the Senate figure, $2,-162,000 above the conference figure indicated by the record, and only 9-plus percent below

Again, without questioning the statements given us of the intention of the conferees that any of the new funds appropriated found not necessary for dam construction in 1948 might be used for resource development or other features of your program, it is still contrary to all established precedent and practice to assume that the Congress, in specifying "not to exceed" $3,254,000 of the new appropriation for the dams and $5,000,000 for the chemical plant, entertained any feeling that these allowances were materially larger than actually necessary for the purposes stated, or that other than minor amounts would be diverted from these projects.

Quite aside from the legislative history and intent with respect to these matters, your fund allocations as they now stand bring into question the soundness of the executive budgetary process. This is illustrated by the fact that in applying the congressional cut in new appropriation proposed, the great burden of that cut is placed upon the dams and chemical plant for which additional money must sooner or later be provided, while resource development, and administratively controllable activity, is reduced but slightly, and the allocations for investigations, sim ilarly controllable, is more than triple the amount contemplated by the budget transmitted by the President to Congress.

In view of the President's budget recommendations and the subsequent action by the Congress, it appears that the $3,254,000 maximum specified in the appropriation act for the South Holston and Watauga Dams, and the $5,000,000 similarly earmarked for the chemical plant would be required to meet the minimum needs of these projects either this year or in 1949 and, therefore, should be so applied. If circumstances have arisen which now make it impracticable to proceed with these projects at the rate which these sums make possible, the unusable portions of the funds appropriated for these projects should be placed in budget reserve, at least until your 1949 budget estimates have been reviewed here. It is requested, therefore, that the Form 1 given temporary approval last month be reconsidered by you; that the un-derlying fund allocations be appropriately adjusted, and that a Form 2 be submitted to modify the existing apportionment and re-serve pattern. We should also appreciate your furnishing a revised supplemental statement of your fund allocations. Sincerely yours,

F. J. LAWTON, Acting Director.

HON. GORDON R. CLAPP, Chairman, Board of Directors Tennessee Valley Authority, Knoxville, Tenn.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for a moment? Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Clapp went to the chairman of the House subcommittee, Representative PLOESER, on this matter, and got the understanding from Representative Ploeser that the money could be expended just as TVA did expend it. There was some misunderstanding, I understand, between the House conferees and the Senate conferees, and Mr. Clapp did go to Representative PLOESER, the chairman of the House conferees.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, if the situation was as it is claimed it was, that it was necessary to get more power to firm up the hydroelectric power, then why did Mr. Clapp get an appropriation of some $3,000,000, and not use it in the construction of dams, from which he could have obtained hydroelectric power, but use it on resource development? They would not need this power until about 1949, 1950, 1951, or 1952. They did not ask for the money last year to start this steam-power plant, because they did not need it. They did not need it, as shown by the fact that they did not use the money on the Holston and the other dams. No; Mr. Clapp wants an empire of his own, and when it comes down to the record, the record speaks volumes as to what Mr. Clapp has been doing.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. In drawing my already overly extended remarks to a close, there are just two things I should like to add. I should like to read briefly from a letter which was written by the Connecticut Development Commission. through its chairman, Mr. Willard B. Rogers, to Hon. Walter C. Ploeser, chairman of the subcommittee in the House, in charge of the hearing on this appropriation bill. He said:

The Connecticut Development Commission, whose purpose is to encourage the economic development of the State of Connecticut, is greatly concerned over the implications involved through further Federal sub-sidies to the Tennessee Valley Authority, such as the one now proposed involving construction of a steam-power plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn.

We understand that the present and future shortages in power output are caused by the additional needs of large manufacturers which have been encouraged to locate in that area because of the low power rates made possible through Federal sub-

Then he proceeds further to say:

If it now becomes a Federal policy to subsidize steam power plants in direct competition with privately owned utilities and if the resultant lower rates are to be used as an incentive to attract industries away from present industrial regions, such as Con-necticut, we feel that this is not only unfair competition to the industries now providing the bulk of the taxes-

And, I may incidentally add, the bulk of employment in our own State-which make Federal subsidies possible but it is particularly unfair to their employees whose continued employment and wages depend upon their profitable operation.

Mr. President, I ask that this letter from the Connecticut Development Commission be printed in the Record at this

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

HARTFORD, CONN., April 1, 1948. Hon. WALTER C. PLOESER, Chairman, Subcommittee on Government Corporations,

House Appropriations Committee, House Office Building, Washington, D. C .:

The Connecticut Development Commission, whose purpose is to encourage the economic development of the State of Connecticut, is greatly concerned over the implications involved through further Federal subsidies to the Tennessee Valley Authority, such as the one now proposed involving construction of a steam power plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn.

We understand that the present and future shortages in power output are caused by the additional needs of large manufacturers which have been encouraged to locate in that area because of the low power rates made possible through Federal subsidy.

It is our further understanding that such use of TVA electric power is definitely at variance with the original concepts of TVA and the act of 1933 which required TVA to give preference to States, counties, municipalities, and cooperative organizations not organized for profit.

If it now becomes the Federal policy to subsidize steam power plants in direct competition with privately owned utilities and if the resultant lower rates are to be used as an incentive to attract industries away from present industrial regions, such as Connecti-cut, we feel that this is not only unfair competition to the industries now providing the bulk of the taxes which make Federal subsidies possible but it is particularly unfair to their employees whose continued employment and wages depend upon their profitable operation.

If the large industrial users of that region need more power than is currently available through the hydroelectric plants operated TVA, why is it not in the interests of national economy and fair dealing to insist that such needs be supplied by privately owned and financed enterprises rather than inflict further financial demands on an already overtaxed public?

If in the interests of national defense, as well as in the interests of maintaining a strong economy throughout the country, we feel that private enterprise and the investment of private funds should be encouraged rather than discouraged. It is our further feeling that the competitive effect in other of the country should be carefully weighed in each instance.

We can see no essential difference between a federally operated enterprise and a privately operated enterprise where the Government guarantees such a company against loss. Either type of operation is bound to promote inefficiency and can only be justified at a time of national emergency CONNECTICUT DEVELOPMENT COM-MISSION, By WILLARD B. ROGERS, Chairman.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, as a further evidence of how the whole conception of this Tennessee Valley Authority has changed I should like to read a brief excerpt from what is represented to be the testimony given on January 8, 1937, which appears in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals Record, the Sixth District, at the time when the constitutionality of the TVA Act was being challenged. This is the statement:

It is true that by the terms of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act the steam electric generating plant located at Sheffield, Ala., near Wilson Dam, was turned over to the defendant Tennessee Valley Authority. But the defendants allege that the said steam electric generating plant has not been and is not being operated and that there is no plan or intention to operate such plant now or in the future, or to construct or operate any other steam electric generating

There was a representation made in 1937 that there were going to be no steam generating plants in this area to supplement this particular development of a natural resource. Yet as the demand for increased power has come, there has been a demand for steam plants, and as a greater demand for power comes from the cheaper rates, there will be an increased demand for steam plants, until the Federal Treasury will be pouring in literally millions of dollars to supplement by steam generated electricity that was originally intended to be supplemental to a navigation development and reforestation plan.

Mr. President, that is not a policy which we as a government should develop. We should devote Federal funds to the development of those natural resources which can be developed with public funds, and in no other way, for the use of the people in a particular locality, but when the full potential of such a development has been absorbed, and the question comes as to how we are going to increase that potential, then I submit that every part of the country should be on the same basis as to the manner in which these facilities are provided. If we are to provide power with public money in one part of the country, then let us provide it with public money in all parts of the country, but we will be departing from the course we have hitherto followed with great success.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut vield a moment?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator referred to some language in connection with a decision in 1937. Is the Senator familiar with the act which Congress passed in 1939 amending the TVA Act?

Mr BALDWIN. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator is not familiar with the act of 1939, I can understand how the Senator may perhaps see this situation as he does. The 1939 act, I will say to the Senator, was the act passed by Congress which authorized the TVA, through mutual arrangement and mutual negotiation, to buy out the private power companies in the TVA area.

By that act Congress authorized and made the TVA the monopoly power generator and distributor in the Tennessee Valley. When we did that, the situation changed entirely in the Tennessee Valley, so far as power was concerned. No longer were there private power companies serving cities, towns, industries, REA's, or anybody else. Then and there, by that act, TVA became the one, sole and only generator and distributor of power in that area. That changed the situation very greatly. The people in that valley today have but one source of power available to them, namely, the TVA

Congress was wise in doing what it did in establishing the TVA.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield. Mr. BALDWIN. I may say to my friend from Alabama that the argument he is now making bears out exactly what I have said, that we started in on the TVA as a reforestation, navigation, and flood control project, and then in 1939 we changed it into something else. How? By legislative enactment. Now it is proposed that more law be enacted to change it, and to pour millions of dollars of Federal funds into the Authority. That is exactly what I am talking about.

Mr. HILL. The Senator will find that in the original act we provided for the development of the Tennessee Valley Authority to be a coordinated and integrated development of all the resources of that valley predicated, of course, on navigation, on reforestation, on flood control, on power, and all those things. But we envisioned the very thing that has transpired, and it finally came to pass when we enacted the law of 1939.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I wonder if the Senator from Alabama has an answer to the query that runs in my mind. If the proposed appropriation fails to be approved do we have adequate reason to assume that the Tennessee Valley Authority has authority to go ahead and build the facility anyway? So far as I know the Tennessee Valley Authority is not accountable to Congress for the way in which the Tennessee Valley Authority spends its earnings. The Tennessee Tennessee Valley Authority reports to the Congress on an annual basis, on the basis of what it has spent, but not on the basis of what it intends to do in the future. So I am wondering to what extent the Tennessee Valley Authority will go ahead and do what conceivably might be denied by the Senate?

Mr. HILL. I would say that no matter how much the TVA feels that it is wise and prudent and necessary to build the plant, i' would not attempt to build it if the Congress by its action said it should not do so.

Mr. CAIN. I merely raised the question, and I am very much pleased by the answer of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. K.IOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President and Members of the Senate, I intend to take but little of the time of the Senate in a discussion of the matter of the TVA steam plant in the Tennessee Valley. However, it happened to have been my privilege about a year and half ago to go down into the Tennessee Valley area. I went there in somewhat of a skeptical frame of mind because-like many Members of the Senate-I had heard arguments on both sides of the question, and wanted to go down and have a look-see for myself. It has been contended in some areas that the TVA is a vast experiment in State socialism. I want to say that what I saw in the various States and cities that comprise the Tennessee Valley area convinced me that it is no such thing, but rather it is a great encouragement to the American free enterprise system. It is true that by act of the Congress of the United States we have set up a Tennessee Valley Authority and have given it certain powers in the matter of the distribution of electric energy, and certain other powers granted it by the Congress of the United States. But by the use of that power, by the use of the transportation facilities made available to the Authority, by the flood-control projects which we have built there. I think we have made a great investment in the future of America.

Mr. President, I happen to be one of the Members of the Senate who believe that something that is beneficial to one section of our great country is ultimately beneficial to all sections of our country.

During the past few years this Nation has made great investments in other areas of the world, and I think that it was fitting and proper that we should do so, because we have learned that we live in one world, and when there is chaos and war and revolution we cannot be unconcerned thereby.

By the same token, Mr. President, I believe that when we add to the economic advancement of the great Tennessee Valley area we are adding to the wealth of our Nation in every section of our Nation.

I listened very carefully to the arguments which were made today and last night on the subject, and I sat through most of the committee hearings, and have read those hearings when I could not attend some of the sessions. It strikes me that we have, as President Cleveland once said, a condition, and not a theory confronting us.

Some of the arguments which have been made in opposition to the TVA might well have been made perhaps in 1937-at least if one has that point of view-they might even have been made in 1939. But the fact remains, Mr. President, that we have established this Authority. We have said that the Authority has the power facilities down there for the generation and the distribution of electric power. So as a very practical matter, no private power company is going to go into the middle of the Tennessee Valley area and build one steam-generating plant for the firming up of electric power. It just is not going to be done. What does that mean, Mr. President? It means that if we do not advance the Authority the fundsloan it the money, so to speak, to build this steam plant, and the money will be repaid to the Federal Government-the Authority will not have the plant which good business judgment indicates it should have in order to firm up the electric power energy in that vast area of the Tennessee Valley.

Consequently, Mr. President, I say that we have a heavy responsibility upon us on the floor of the United States Senate today, because it is my judgment that if we deny the Authority the right to build this power plant in the Tennessee Valley area, we in effect put that vast area in chains as far as its future development is concerned.

I think the situation there is entirely different than it is in other sections of the Nation, because in no other section of the Nation have we set up a TVA. Men can quite properly question the advisability of having set up that TVA, or of setting up any similar agencies elsewhere in the Nation, and men may honestly differ as to the public policy involved. But in the Tennessee Valley we have already done it. It is an accomplished fact. It is not a theoretical discussion. We have created such an agency there, and now to deny the Authority the right to have the facilities it needs properly to serve that area is, I repeat, to put that area in chains. do not think the Senate of the United States should do that.

What are the facts of the situation? As of the present time the percentage of steam capacity to total generating capacity of TVA is down, as I remember the figure, to about 16 percent of the total hydroelectric capacity. would happen in this vast area of the Tennessee if this were a privately owned public utility? Well, we fortunately have some figures in the record which will indicate what would be done. Senators will find on page 47 of the record that as far as the privately owned companies are concerned their "steam plants as approximate percentages of total generating capacity" are as follows: The Alabama Power Co., 43 percent; the Carolina Power & Light Co., 34 percent; the Duke Power Co., 51 percent; the Georgia Power Co., 53 percent; the Niagara-Hudson, in New York State, 48 percent, and the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 38 percent.

If we let the TVA build this generating plant which it needs to firm up its power, and we provide the funds, it will only bring that percentage up approximately 20 percent, which will still be far below what any well-operated privately owned public utility would require in the United States.

Mr. President, I think we should carefully consider the situation. I happen to come from an area of the country which has recently suffered a brown-out as far as electric power is concerned. Like the Tennessee Valley, our section of the Nation is growing. Yet with all the power facilities which could be provided by the privately owned utilities and the power facilities which could be provided by the publicly owned utilities, we have been still short of an adequate power Criticism is made for the directors of TVA that they are coming here and doing some advance planning. I do not believe that they should be criticized for that. I believe that they should be congratulated for doing it. Unfortunately over a period of years private power companies in my area of the country have come before the Congress of the United States and have attempted to block the development of hydroelectric power and transmission lines in the State of California. I regret to say they have had some success. By so doing they contributed to the brown-out we had this year, which adversely affected industry in California, which in turn adversely affected employment, with a resulting adverse effect upon the tax revenues which flowed into the Federal Treasury.

The fact of the matter is that, according to the testimony before the committee, in 1934 the Tennessee Valley region contributed roughly 3.3 percent of the tax revenues. Because of this investment we have made in the Tennessee Valley area, by 1949 that percentage had increased to 6.2 percent. I think that is a fine contribution to the future of our country.

If we were managers of a business concern, if we had the responsibility for this vast power development, and if the facts were as they are here today I am convinced that we would make this steam-plant investment in that vast area of our country. Unless we permit this plant to be built, no one else is going to build it. Our failure to build it may in turn lead to a vast power shortage in the Tennessee Valley area.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield. Mr. STEWART. I think the Senator has made a wonderful statement. His argument is a 100-percent high-class contribution to the discussion.

I should like to ask the Senator one or two questions. Did it not appear in the hearings, and is it not a fact as a matter of law anyway, that an amortization plan has been devised by which the Government is being reimbursed for its entire investment?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. On a 30- or 40-year basis.

Mr. KNOWLAND. On a 40-year basis,

Mr. STEWART. Is it not a fact that the earnings of the Tennessee Valley Authority were about $97,000,000 last year? Does the Senator remember the figure?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not recall the figures.

Mr. STEWART. At any rate, it is a going concern. It is making money. It is not in the red. It is not being subsidized.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the Senator that when we make an investment in an area like that and part of it is chargeable to flood control, part to navigation, and part to power development there will always be arguments, and men will honestly differ as to what percentage should be applied to each. The earnings will vary, depending upon what the percentage is. But so far as being an investment for the good of America is concerned, regardless of what the allocation is. I believe that the return will be one hundredfold, in comparison with the return on a great many investments which we have made elsewhere in the world.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President—
Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I should like to make one further point. Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. Of course, the guestion which is being considered here is whether or not this steam plant can be justified chiefly upon the basis of firming up the power which now exists or is latent in the hydro development. I invite the Senator's attention to the statement at the bottom of page 45 of the hearings, at the conclusion of Mr. Clapp's statement:

The virtue and the necessity for this steam plant, therefore, is to firm up and help us make more useful the water power that we can generate from the river.

Senator KNOWLAND. You are only recommending here what any well-run privately owned public utility would recommend in running a business, and that is that you be able to serve your customers with a firm supply of power regardless of what the weather conditions might be in a year. If you are not able to take that, you are not able to

Mr. CLAPP. That is correct, sir.

Does not that practically sum up the entire testimony in the hearings?

Mr. KNOWLAND. In answer to the question raised by the Senator from Tennessee, let me say that if I had not been convinced at the hearings that this plant was legitimately needed for firming up power, I would not have supported the amendment in the committee. After all, spending an additional $4,000,000, which is merely the first installment on a larger investment, would not be justified, in my opinion, if this were a small and extraneous addition which was not needed, and could be better handled otherwise. I believe that the overwhelming weight of the evidence shows that, based upon good business judgment, if a privately owned utility were in the same position as TVA, it would long ago have started to make plans and to lay the foundations for the steam plant. Obviously a number of years will be required to construct it. A private utility company with a progressive outlook would have begun to plan years ago, rather than run the danger of being caught short, as we have been caught in the State of California. Other sections of the country have been faced with power shortages.

It is planned to have an adequate supply of power when it is needed. I do not need to tell the able Senator from Tennessee that if we had not had this source of power available in the Tennessee Valley the war effort of this country would have been greatly handicapped.

I happen to be a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. great atomic plant at Oak Ridge is there primarly, in my judgment, because this source of power existed. The other great plants, which contributed to the war effort by supplying aluminum needed in the Air Forces, are there because there is an adequate supply of power.

We talk about national defense. Should we ever be challenged again from any section of the world, we shall need an adequate supply of power. In my judgment if war were to come tomorrow, one of the weakest links in our entire industrial situation as related to our national defense would be a shortage of electric energy.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield. Mr. FERGUSON. Is there anything in the record to show that any power from the hydro plants in the Tennessee Valley was used at Oak Ridge? Is not the record void of such evidence?

Let me ask a second question. there anything in the record to show what Mr. Clapp said was the amount of power which needed to be firmed up?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I believe that a set of charts was exhibited to the committee, indicating that, based upon the present situation, to say nothing of the situation as it will appear in 1952, there will be a shortage of firm power in the TVA area.

Mr. FERGUSON. But today there is no shortage of firm power. It is the anticipated industrial development which will demand more power.

Mr. KNOWLAND. No; I do not think that is correct, as I read the testimony and the charts.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I believe the Senator made the point a few minutes ago that the ratio of power produced at steam plants to power produced at hydroelectric dams, is larger in the case of private companies throughout the country, than in the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct. Mr. COOPER. Would the Senator say that this disparity is evidence of the fact that there is a lack of balance in TVA today between steam and water power?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think there is no question about it. A properly operated utility company—I do not care whether it is a private company or a public company—cannot operate efficiently if it sells to its customers merely based upon the peak-load capacity, so to speak. That fluctuates. But when a utility signs a contract, it must be prepared to deliver the power, both during good times of production and hard times of production. If it is not able to do that, obviously it cannot satisfy its customers, whether they be industrial plants or private consum-

Mr. COOPER. Is it not true that two additional dams are now under construction, and that their completion will increase the imbalance between steam-generated power and hydroelectric power in the TVA system?

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. I should like to ask an-other question. The Senator stated that. in his opinion, failure to construct this plant will result in a deprivation of power to customers in the Tennessee Valley. The arguments made by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] and other Senators who oppose the construction of this steam plant. are based almost entirely on the assumption that this plant is being built to supply certain large industrial consumers. Was there testimony at the hearings to the effect that there are many rural electric cooperatives in the Tennessee Valley in Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, and North Carolina?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not recall the exact number.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a very large number.

Mr. KNOWLAND. But I know there are a large number of such customers.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are a large number of them.

Mr. COOPER. Is it the Senator's opinion that a failure to build this plant will deprive the atomic energy plant at Oak Ridge of needed power in time of Mr. KNOWLAND. If anything should cut off the fuel supply to the steam plant there, the availability of a source of adequate power would be of tremendous interest and, I think, would be an absolute necessity to the plant at Oak Ridge.

Mr. COOPER. A few moments ago, I think, the Senator from Michigan said he did not recall any testimony about deliveries of power to Oak Ridge. I should like to call his attention to page 59 of the hearings. Mr. Wessenauer, power manager of the TVA, stated as follows, speaking in regard to certain charts which had been introduced:

The sales shown on that chart, however, are actually sales to the municipalities and cooperatives. The total shown by the utilities did not include sales to the Government for its own use, the largest use being at the atomic-energy plant at Oak Ridge.

Further down on that page we see that he said the following:

Because it may disclose energy deliveries to the Atomic Energy Commission, we can-not put this chart in, but I do have some others which can go in.

Mr. FERGUSON. Then there is no record that any power actually went

Mr. COOPER. There was the flat tatement that the largest use by the Government was for the atomic-energy plant at Oak Ridge.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield. Mr. SPARKMAN. I am sure the Senator from California will remember, in connection with the statement about nothing being shown in the record about Oak Ridge, that when I appeared before the subcommittee and made a statement. I urged the subcommittee to hold an executive session in order to go into that very question; and I said it was something that ought not be spread on the public record. I also suggested that the subcommittee go into the whole question of the defense requirements down there.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I recall the situation. As I have stated, I did not want to go into a detailed discussion on that point.

I know a chart was presented, and I know a specific request was made that it not be placed in the record.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?
Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.
Mr. SPARKMAN. A few moments ago the Senator from Michigan, I believe it was, stated that the additional power to be provided by this proposed steam plant would be used primarily to supply industries which were expected to develop in that area. As a matter of fact, I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Michigan and the attention of other Senators to the chart appearing on page 62, in which it is shown that the great increase over the past years and the great increase in the years ahead lies with preference customers; and they are defined—as a matter of fact, they are defined in the act itself, by the wording of Congress-as Government agencies, municipalities, and rural cooperatives.

The chart shows virtually no increase whatsoever to private industries.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to say one word, if the Senator will permit me, before I yield the floor. There has been considerable discussion in regard to taxes. It is true, and we might as well face it, of course, that no government agency pays income taxes. But I wish to call attention to the fact that when I went through the Tennessee Valley, I talked with many public officials, and also with many businessmen, some of whom had been very bitterly opposed to the original creation of the TVA, when it was first considered. I believe I can say that almost without exception, regardless of their partisanship or their economic station in life—and I talked to bankers, businessmen, farmers, employees, employers, public officials.—all felt that the TVA was making a great contribution to that area of the country. In every community where I went, if I had a chance to do so I asked whether the TVA and its related organizations were paying local taxes, because I was concerned, as a great many of us are, with that question as it affects the various States where properties will be taken off the tax rolls, with a resultant adverse effect on the local agencies of government. In every case where I made inquiry-I do not say this applies to every part of the Tennessee Valley, but it applies to every place where I was able to make my inquiry—I was told that the TVA was paying, as in lieu of taxes, as much or even more than what had been paid by the privately-owned public utilities in the days before they were taken over. So to that extent, at least, the TVA is making a contribution to the local agencies of government.

Mr. HILL. Mr President, will the Senator yield in that connection?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield. Mr. HILL. Is it not true that no private power company or private utility ever amortizes out its capital investment: but it goes on, year after year, without any amortization; whereas, under the law, the TVA is required to amortize out within 40 years the funds the Government puts into the TVA projects?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Frankly, I am not in a position to say that no private utility company ever amortizes out; but I understand it is a general practice in many areas of the country for them not to amortize out the capital investment.

Of course in the TVA area, that is being done in a period of 40 years.

Mr. HILL. In that connection it is interesting to note, let me say, if the Senator will yield further, that the TVA has made approximately $92,000,000 in net profits, and of that $92,000,000, $23,-000,000 has gone into the Federal Treasury, $11,000,000 went to pay off bonds which had been issued in connection with the purchase of the properties of the private power companies by TVA and $59,000,000 went into capital investments-new projects-which, of course, today are the property of the Government of the United States.

To come back to the point regarding the industries about which we hear so much, does not the record show that, so far as the large industries that we hear so much about are concerned—the Aluminum Co. of America, the Reynolds Metals Co., the Victor Metals Co., and so forth-some five or six of them-this year, in 1949, those big industries will not use more than 10 percent of the firm power capacity available in the Tennessee Valley from the TVA? Is that not true?

Is it not true also that if we were to cut off all those large industries from the TVA power, and if the TVA did not supply a single kilowatt of power to those large industries, there still would not be sufficient power to meet the estimated growth in the demands for power in the next 2 years?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. LUCAS. In regard to the point that perhaps industries move into the valley, does the evidence disclose that this quest for an appropriation is based on the theory that industries will move there?

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is not my interpretation of the testimony I read and heard. I think primarily new industries may develop there rather than that industries will pick up and move there-lock, stock, and barrel-from some some other area of the country.

But I say to the Senator from Illinois that, if such a movement does occur, it will not disturb me because from the point of view of national defense in this atomic age, if we have some diversification of our great industrial centers, I think ultimately we may be adding to the potential national defense of the Nation.

Mr. LUCAS. I wholeheartedly agree with the statement made by the able Senator from California.

Let me ask the Senator one more question with respect to the industries located in the Tennessee Valley producing for instance aluminum and other metal. As I understand, they do not manufacture the finished product, but produce certain products in the raw, which are shipped or transmitted to practically every State in the Union, where the products are finished. So, it seems to me, to those who argue that the Government is subsidizing the Tennessee Valley Authority to the extent that certain people may be receiving a benefit out of it, the reply may properly be made that the whole industry of America that uses the products which go out of the Tennessee Valley and are ultimately finished in the factories in other States of the Union, are equally getting the benefit of the facilities of TVA.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the able Senator from Illinois I think he is exactly correct. Not only are they furnishing raw materials which are put into finished products elsewhere in the Nation, by which process the Tennessee Valley area is making a great contribution to the industries in other sections of the country, but in turn as the standard of living increases due to some development down in the Tennessee Valley area the people, the employees who get better wages have more purchasing power to buy the automobiles that are manufactured in Michigan or the products manufactured in Connecticut or Indiana or these other States of the Union. I might include dried fruit products and other items from the Pacific coast. So I think it has a two-way effect in being beneficial both to the Nation and to the Tennessee Valley area.

Mr. President, will the Mr. HILL. Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. To illustrate the question raised by the distinguished Senator from Illinois and the splendid answer of the Senator from California, on page 64 of the Senate hearings there appears a letter addressed by Mr. R. M. Ferry, manager, Tennessee Operations, of the Aluminum Co. of America, at Alcoa, Tenn., to Mr. G. O. Wessenaeur, manager of power, Tennessee Valley Authority, Chattanooga, Tenn. In that letter Mr. Ferry has this to say:

The great proportion of the aluminum and basic aluminum products made by Aluminum Co. of America at the Alcoa works-

That is the plant in Tennesseegoes outside the State of Tennessee for final manufacture into end products. In the first quarter of 1948, for example, 98.8 percent of the various aluminum products produced at the Alcoa works was shipped to 47 States, other than Tennessee, for further processing, involving great amounts of additional work on the basic or semifinished aluminum materials before they are ready for final use.

Not only are the aluminum products from Alcoa shipped to other States as shown, but also other States than Tennessee provide most of the raw materials for the production of aluminum at Alcoa.

So, of course, the project at Alcoa, Ala., is not a Tennessee project. is what I may call a very important link in the whole chain of our domestic economy. It is a very important wheel in the whole economy of the 48 States of the United States.

Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. LUCAS, and Mr. BALDWIN addressed the Chair.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator from Indiana has been on his feet. I had agreed to yield to him.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, perhaps I had better get the floor in my own right, because I have a little more than a question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Very well. Then if I could finish with these questions, I shall yield the floor to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, should like to have it appear in the RECORD here what I believe to be a repetition of the statement made by the chairman of the subcommittee when we first began the discussion of this bill. which was to the effect that the Senate committee, as I recall the statement, relied in great part upon the record that was made in the House, as there were very extended hearings held on the appropriation bill in the House, to the tune of 1,111 pages as compared to some 517 pages in the Senate. The reports are likewise correspondingly different in the extent to which they go into the matter, and that is why it seems to me, the House having made such a thorough study of the whole project, that the House record is of great importance and should be given considerable weight, because obviously the House committee went much further into it than did the Senate committee. In fact, it was the duty of the House to go thoroughly into the subject, because, under the Constitution, the House is primarily concerned with appropriation bills.

The House report very distinctively savs this:

Testimony of officials of TVA further indicates that the Authority recognizes that although substantial additional power can be generated by installation of new hydro generators, it is approaching the limit of the amount of electricity which can be generated by water power harnessed primarily for purposes of flood control and navigation.

The proposal to construct this steam plant is based upon the recognition of these two factors, and is intended to provide additional generating capacity to meet the currently estimated requirements of the foreseeable future for electric power in the Tennessee Valley area.

I have no quarrel at all with the Federal Congress using Federal funds. develop a natural resource, and if this undertaking has been, as I think it has been, of tremendous value to the Tennessee Valley, then I am glad of it, and I agree with my friend from California that that benefit is ultimately spread all the way across the country.

My difficulty is this: If the Federal Government used Federal funds to develop a natural resource, and the full potentiality of that natural resource is developed, and if it is put to its full use as the development of a natural resource, then should the Federal Government, because of the cheaper facilities thus provided, add artificial resources, artificial means to expand that natural resource, at the expense of all the taxpayers of the country?

It seems to me there is where we come to a parting of the ways on a question of policy, because once we step in to develop a natural resource to its full potentiality, then it seems to me we ought to use Federal funds in developing some other natural resources, and not pile Pelion on Ossa in an attempt to develop one great area where the development in the first place was mainly concerned with a natural resource, but has finally worked into a federally-subsidized project in competition with all the others in the country.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point? Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I merely want to say that I recognize it is an easy selection to pick between black and white. Where one gets into difficulty is when he gets into the gray field, in between. course the argument the Senator makes that instead of merely the development of natural resources, when a steam plant is established or constructed, it is getting a little out of that field and I think there is considerable merit and weight to the Senator's argument. But if we take the next step, on transmission lines, we are also getting out of that field, and if that is carried on through to its logical conclusion, it would mean merely the dam being built to hold the water, and perhaps a power house itself being built by the privately owned public utilities, taking the power at the dam rather than at the bus bar as some now advocate, and transmitting it over their lines.

Arguments can be made pro and con over that. My chief point is that depending on the way one looks at it, for either good or evil, that question is a moot question in the TVA area. The Congress has already established a valley authority there. Now, Congress may never again want to establish another valley authority. They may want to, in the future. No one has a crystal bill to enable him to know that.

I certainly think we should proceed with great care before we establish another valley authority as such. But in the Tennessee Valley area we have one. Having taken the responsibility, having made the people dependent for their power supply directly upon TVA, my only point is that when any well-operated privately owned power utilities have an adequate steam stand-by service in order to firm up power, Congress should not do something which, in my judgment, would ultimately strangle the further development of the great Tennessee Valley area. For my part, I do not want to take the responsibility of withholding from them something which I believe they need in their economic development.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator from California still claiming the floor?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes, Mr. President; to answer some questions.

STEWART. Mr. President, I the suggestion made a few moments ago by the Senator, concerning the importance of this measure as part of a possible defense program, is one which merits considerable exploration. I think it was well expressed. I believe the building of the plant is justified on the basis of national need for national defense. I explored the question somewhat during the hearings, by correspondence and conversations with some of the various agencies of the Government. I am advised that there is approximately a 35 percent anticipated shortage of electric power in the next year or two in the entire United States. Since the plant has been requested by TVA, plans have been drawn, the location has been selected in close proximity to an adequate supply of cheap coal, and since an adequate supply of water will be afforded, I think we should proceed with the project. Its location has been chosen at a point at which it can be most economically operated. With the unsettled conditions which exist in the world today, I think we should turn more than ordinary attention to this project as an aid, not only for economic reasons, but for reasons of national defense.

During the recent World War, as the Senator has acknowledged, the Tennessee Valley was a perfect beehive of inmanufacturing dustry. constantly munitions of war. I am told that at one time, when demand was made by the President for the building of 50,000 airplanes, Tennessee Valley electric current was utilized in manufacturing more than 51 percent of the aluminum which went into our fighting planes. Tennessee Valley made a great contribution, as the Senator has pointed out, to the war effort. If we had not had that great supply of power, there is no telling how much longer the end of the war might have been delayed. I think we should take notice of the unsettled, chaotic conditions in the world. We do not know at what moment we might need to place an order for a large supply of products, such as aluminum, which might be manufactured by the utilization of electric power.

I think that, at least, should help influence the votes of other Members of the Senate who may not feel quite certain with respect to the situation from an economic standpoint.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Tennessee had risen. I want to apologize for not having yielded to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have the floor in my own right.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The observations which the Senator has made are, so far as I am concerned, conclusive and almost unchallengeable. There is no way to limit the potential amount of power which can be developed in the Tennessee Valley, and consequently the products which may be made by the utilization of the power. Some Members of the Congress, before the Tennessee Valley Authority was ever created, tried to bring about the very result which we are seeking today. Some of the same individuals, when we were confronted by a very serious situation during the war, went before the Appropriations Committees and asked for an additional $50,000,000 for further development of the Tennessee Valley, and many persons who, in the beginning, were fighting the improvement of the valley through the Tennessee Valley Authority, joined in the request.

I, for one, solely on the theory of national defense, would support this project, if for no other reason. As has been pointed out time and again by able Senators who have made a study of the entire proposition, by Senators who live in the valley and know it, by Senators who understand world conditions, we cannot invest $4,500,000 more wisely at this particular time than in the development of steam plants in the Tennessee Valley, because no one knows what will happen tomorrow. What happened during the last war, so far as our needs were concerned, may in the next war be a mere bagatelle.

The Tennessee Valley Authority, as the able Senator from California has so well pointed out, has already been developed and redeveloped. It has the facilities for further development, from the point of view of national defense. Certainly the Congress should not let down at this hour on a small appropriation for the further development of the valley.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President— The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from California [Mr. Knowland] for the splendid speech he has made. He heard all the testimony, and it evidently made an impression upon him, as it should have.

I shall talk but a short time this afternoon, Mr. President, but I want to give a little history of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

I was unexpectedly elected to the House of Representatives in 1911. That has been a long time ago. I came to Washington on the 4th of December 1911. Fourteen days after that I introduced a good-roads bill. Approximately a month later, in January, I introduced a bill to construct the Muscle Shoals Dam at Muscle Shoals, Ala., on the Tennessee River. Very little progress was made. The House was very much opposed to building a dam at that time. We made very little progress until the First World War occurred in 1917, when the project for producing needed power for war purposes was sponsored by the later Senator Bankhead. I do not mean John H. Bankhead, Jr., but John H. Bankhead, Sr., who was a Senator from Alabama when I entered the House of Representatives.

When the war came on Senator Bankhead and I went to the White House and interviewed President Wilson, and asked him if he would not recommend the building of a dam at Muscle Shoals in order to get the water power from that The President said he would, and I believe he did. A short time later we got an appropriation, and with that appropriation we built the first dam at Muscle Shoals, and no dam was built thereafter until 1933. I had been a Senator for some 15 years before another dam was built. Senator Norris got a bill passed to build another dam on the Tennessee River, but President Hoover vetoed the bill and it did not become a

When Mr. Roosevelt became President he was tremendously interested in the building of dams. Senators can see that I have been with this proposition a long time. It has been a long time from 1911 to the present. I introduced the first Muscle Shoals bill in the House of Representatives, as I have said, in 1912. When Mr. Roosevelt became President he was very much interested in the matter of building dams, and he came down in a private car from New York before he was sworn in as President and invited three men to go with him to Muscle Shoals to see the dam which had already been completed under a former administration. Senator Norris, supposedly representing the Missouri River, was one of those who was invited to make the trip in the private car of President-elect Roosevelt. The second gentleman was Senator Clarence C. Dill, of the State of Washington, and Senator Dill went along as a representative of the Columbia River. The President was good enough to invite me as the representative of the Tennessee River, as he said at the time, the Tennessee being a river flowing mostly in my State, beginning in upper east Tennessee and flowing through upper Alabama, and then north into the Ohio through Tennessee and Kentucky.

Senators may see a picture in my office of the Presidential party, with these three gentlemen, and Governor Miller, of Alabama, and his wife, who met us. After spending a most pleasant day seeing that great dam, which had been completed, we returned on the train after dinner, and the President had his secretary bring out some bills for the improvement of the Tennessee Valley. One of the bills is now substantially the law as it was enacted soon after that. After reading the bill aloud, the President took one copy of the bill and handed it to George Norris and told him that he was going to ask him to introduce it in the Senate. He told his secretary to mail a copy of it to LISTER HILL, who was at that time a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Alabama, and that he would have LISTER HILL introduce the bill in the House. It seemed to me that that was rather unusual, as Senator Norris was supposed to come from the Missouri Valley; but I was very anxious to have the dam built and the project started, and therefore, said nothing about it.

The bill was introduced by Senator Norris, and a copy of the same bill was introduced by Senator Hill, then a Member of the House, as I have said. The bill passed the House, and came to the Senate. In the meantime the Senate had passed the Norris bill, the bills went to conference, and in the conference the Hill bill was accepted, as I recall, and the Norris bill was merely one of those which had been passed, but so far as the outside world was concerned, the newspaper world especially, it was the Norris bill that developed the Tennessee Valley, though it was the Hill bill that was actually passed. I am bringing this matter forward for the purpose of showing the Senate my long history with this project

Not much progress was made until President Roosevelt became President and the first two dams were built, the dam now known as the Wheeler Dam and that known as the Cove Creek Dam, now called the Norris Dam.

Were those dams built in the ordinary way? Quite the contrary. The House of Representatives would not appropriate the money to finance the building. It takes money to construct dams, and therefore the dams were not built.

I presume all the Members of the Senate remember the PWA legislation, which came in 1933, the first year Mr. Roosevelt was President. It was legislation providing work for people who were out of employment. The same Senator Bankhead to whom I have referred went with me to see Mr. Roosevelt to get him to allot some of the civil-works money, people-out-of-employment money, to bebing the two dams on the Tennessee, one in Alabama and one in Tennessee. had to do that because the Senate was willing to appropriate the money, but the House had not done so. The House would not appropriate the money. So legislation was enacted authorizing construction of the dams, but no money was available to build them, and we induced President Roosevelt to allot a certain sum out of the money provided for civil works in 1933, the first year he was President. The two dams were then begun.

The next year the WPA legislation was passed. Out of money provided for WPA we secured an allotment to do more work on the two dams.

During the next year, 1934, I was sent to the Philippine Islands. The late Senator McAdoo; the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings], who now sits near me in the Senate Chamber; the late Senator Gibson, of Vermont, a good Republican and one of the finest men I ever knew; and I were appointed members of the committee to make an investigation of the situation in the Philippine Islands and report to the Senate. We went west via San Francisco, the Hawaiian Islands. Japan, and China. We traveled all over the Philippine Islands and came back by way of the Indian Ocean and the Red Sea. Remarkable to state, on the return trip through the Red Sea our ship passed Mount Sinai. It was a very interesting experience to the four of us. The captain of our vessel-it was a Dutch vessel-told us we could see the mountain, and made arrangements so we could have a good view of it. That naturally brought up conversation respecting Jerusalem, and we concluded that when we arrived at Alexandria we would arrange to go to Jerusalem by bus and catch next week's boat for France.

The morning after we had made that agreement I received a radiogram from President Roosevelt. I was at that time a member of the Appropriations Committee, and had been a member of it for many years. Carter Glass was chair-man of the committee, and I was next in rank following him. The President in his cablegram said:

The Senate Committee on Appropriations yesterday, by a tie vote, defeated an appro-priation to complete the two dams, one in Alabama and one in Tennessee. Hurry home and break the tie.

The vote was 8 to 8. I thereupon canceled my plan for going to Jerusalem. I told my friends I was obliged to return. I felt it my duty to do so and returned. They also concluded to return home.

On my return I found that Carter Glass was ill. I went to see him. He told me he was one of those who had voted against appropriation of money to build the dams in Tennessee and Alabama. He said he thought he had made a mistake, and would give me his proxy. and I could vote it in favor of the appropriation, and asked me to call a meeting of the committee. I called the committee together, as the record in the committee room downstairs will show. At the meeting I voted Senator Glass as favoring the appropriation. The appropriation was voted favorably by the committee by a vote of 14 to 5. There were two members of the committee absent. The appropriation thereafter was made. and the first dam was built.

I then introduced a bill providing for the building of a second dam, and have since introduced bills providing for all the dams that have been built. The House was not in favor of the project primarily, and it was only as the result of amendments placed on appropriation bills in the Senate that I was able to obtain the money to build all the dams along the Tennessee River and also along the Cumberland River.

That, Mr. President, is a short history of how the dams happened to be built.

At that time the private power companies had control of power in Alabama and Tennessee. They had large investments in those States. They saw the dams being built and felt that the work was inimical to them, and it was not long before they undertook to sell out to the TVA. Many negotiations were conducted, and finally the private power companies sold out to the TVA. They had large investments in all the big cities. The Chattanooga Power alone was sold for $10,800,000. The company operating in Memphis was sold for $17,360,000. Every large city in the State purchased, through the TVA, the private power companies' property virtually at the private power companies' own price. The TVA did not fix the price. The Government did not fix the The power companies wanted to get out of Tennessee and did get out of Tennessee.

There is no longer a fight between the private power companies and the TVA. That fight has been ended for 10 or 12 years or more. The TVA has paid the full price, over $150,000,000, for the private power companies as they previously existed. The private power companies have never been dissatisfied with the transaction. I have never heard of any complaint because of the sale of the properties. A great many of the employees of the private companies were kept in employment. No hardship was worked on the power companies.

I want to assure my distinguished and handsome friend, a man I admire very much, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Baldwin], a former Governor of the great State of Connecticut and now a United States Senator from that State, that the private power companies were not mulcted in that deal. They had the advantage. They received virtually their own price. They sold what they had after the price had been fixed and agreed upon. There has never been a rumor of any trouble at all respecting the sales.

Now, what is the fact since the TVA has taken hold down there? The TVA built many dams. As I recall, thirty-odd dams have been built by the TVA. The Government has furnished the money for the building of the dams. The Government permitted bonds to be issued in some cases, but mostly furnished the money. So the fight is not between the private power companies, as my distinguished friend seemed to think earlier today, and the TVA. It is a fact that already been established. This thing has already been done.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield. Mr. BALDWIN. One unhappy thing about my position on this question is that I find myself on the opposite side of an important question from my distinguished friend from Tennessee, whom I have come to admire and hold in real affection. I look back upon his record with admiration.

I assure the Senator from Tennessee that my interest in this question is not primarily from the standpoint of the power companies. I think they are well able to take care of themselves, and they have done so. There is certainly no claim that I have ever heard that the power companies did not get a perfectly fair deal. They were paid for their properties what they were worth, and the transaction was satisfactorily closed. Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely.

Mr. BALDWIN. My difficulty is with the question whether, as a matter of policy, we should use Federal funds to subsidize the implementation of a natural resource the full potentialities of which have already been reached. The natural resource having been developed as it should be-and properly so-Federal funds for the benefit of the State, and its full potentiality now being in prospect, should the Federal Government now step in with Federal funds and subsidize the expansion of a natural resource by artificial means? Hydroelectric development having reached its ultimate, should the Federal Government now step in and supplement it by subsidizing an artificial plant? That is my difficulty with this question.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is mistaken about its having reached its ultimate. It has not. We are building two of the largest dams. They were started about 10 years ago, and they have been developed to a remarkable extent, but we are still making appropriations for They are still in the course of construction. They will be completed in the next 2 years.

In addition, we have built a number of dams on the Cumberland River. The new dams will require additional steam power-what is known in power parlance as firming up power for the water

There are many other dam sites. There are dam sites along the tributaries of the Tennessee River in Alabama. I am not sure that there are any in Mississippi. I should have to ask the Senator from Mississippi. I do not believe there are any. But in Tennessee and in North Carolina there are tributaries of this river where there are excellent sites. The Cumberland River in Tennessee empties into the Ohio just above the point where the Tennessee empties into the Ohio River. That river has tributaries upon which are other dam sites. The territory has been developed. A wonderful work has been done.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in that connection?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield. Mr. SPARKMAN. I am sure that the able Senator from Connecticut would not consider any hydroelectric development fully developed to its ultimate if it were being operated by a private utility, until and unless the private utility incorporated into the system a sufficient amount of steam power in order to firm it up to its maximum efficiency. They all do it. Then why should he argue that the Federal Government should not do likewise? The practice is efficient, effective, and economical.

Mr. McKELLAR. Knowing the Senator from Connecticut as I do, I believe that if he had been before our committee he would have taken exactly the same position, after hearing the testimony, that the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. Knowland] has taken. The Senator from California is the son of an old-time friend of mine from California who was a Member of the House when I was there, nearly 40 years ago. He is a grand man, just as his father before him, W. P. Knowland, was a grand man when he served in the House.

I recommend to the Senator from Connecticut that he read the Senate committee hearings. I am not as familiar with the House hearings. I did not go through those as closely, perhaps, as I did the testimony of my own witnesses. I brought some of the witnesses here. They are some of the finest men in Tennessee or in the United States. They came here to testify. Among them were Democrats as well as Republicans. It made no difference. I remember Mr. Bruce, one of the most distinguished Republicans in my State. Many others came with him to testify to the facts as they were, and to show what a wonderful thing was being accomplished not only for Tennessee, but for the entire United States through this great development of water power in the Tennessee Basin, and the firming up of power in the proper way with steam power.

The Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. FERGUSON] is a fine man. I am sorry that he has taken the position which he takes. He will remember that the very best men came here to testify to what was being done. The operation has been a success.

I remember when people said that our efforts to develop the Tennessee Valley from an economic standpoint would not be a success. We have been at it for some time. A great deal of money has been invested in power alone-probably between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000. The other moneys which were spent were spent for navigation, and for development of the entire valley.

Let us see whether the United States is losing anything. In 1940 we had not developed the dams to such an extent that we were making much out of the operation. In that year we made only $3,294,000; in 1941, $3,992,000; in 1942, $6,117,000; in 1943, $7,962,000; in 1944, $4,047,000; in 1945, $5,247,000. Remember that the last figure which I have given is a little more than $3,000,000. In 1946 the income from this great development, after paying all expenses, was $18,301,000; for the year 1947 it was $21,950,000. I understand that this year it will be in excess of $25,000,000.

While we have developed a great State, and brought the best kind of government to the people of that State and the surrounding States, have we done so at a loss? Have we thrown our money away, as may possibly be the case with the money which we are sending to Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia, and various other parts of the world? Senators will notice that I use the word "possibly." So far as the Tennessee Valley is concerned, we are getting a first-class rate of interest on every dollar of money that is invested

Mr. President, I turn to my distinguished friend the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd], whom I have known ever since he was a boy. I knew his uncle, and I served in the House of Representatives with him. I think one of the first times I ever saw the Senator from Virginia was when he and I were groomsmen for Henry D. Flood, of Virginia. When I think of what we have down in Tennessee, with a little careful management, and when I think how Representative Flood helped with it, how disappointed I am this afternoon when, rather belatedly, I hear from my distinguished friend the Senator from Virginia that he cannot go along with such a wonderful development and such wonderful progress. It is disappointing to hear that statement from him-he who has been so successful in life, and has one of the most beautiful homes the eyes of mortal ever beheld. Senators who have traveled approximately 100 miles to the west of Washington have no doubt seen his beautiful home in Virginia and his wonderful apple orchard, the greatest apple orchard in all the world. Senators who have been there have seen what a wonderful success he has made in something besides politics, for politics is not the only thing he has succeeded at. He has succeeded in everything. If he were a kinsman of mine, I would not have felt more injured than I was in not having him go along with me in endorsing a great project; in fact, in my judgment, the greatest governmental project I was ever connected with. I am proud of it.

I have a statement from my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] was one of them; and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], good, splendid CARL HAYDEN, than whom there is not a purer, finer, more gracious man in all the world, was another member of the committee who joined in that statement: CARL HAYDEN is one of those who said that I had gotten from the Congress the money to build all those dams and to buy the rlants from the private power companies when it was found that they could not work in harmony in Tennessee with the TVA. They were purchased, and the plan works splendidly.

In January 1912, if I remember correctly-and I know it could not have been later than February 1912-I distressed my brothers who were in the railroad business in Memphis, Tenn., where they were working for the Southern Railway, and they were located in the old offices of the Southern Railway there, when I told them I wanted to improve the Tennessee River and improve the navigation on it and develop hydroelectric power along the bed of that river, beside which they had their railroad-one of the great railroads of the country. When I told them that, my statement certainly created consternation in my They thought I was doing something awful to advocate developing that river, when they were running a railroad along its banks. They did not want any opposition. But I finally lived to see the day when they agreed I was correct about it, and it worked out all right so far as my family was concerned.

In the 40 years since that time, I have lived to see practically everyone in Ten-nessee in favor of it. But some of my friends on the other side of the aisle here in the Senate Chamber say that is because we are getting from the Government something we should not get. Mr. President, do the available figures support such an argument? The TVA has made money; it is making money all the time, and it will continue to make money, if properly managed. If we take the advice of my young friend the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]and certainly he is a disinterested manand let this bill be enacted as now proposed, that development will be one of the greatest development any State has had. Today other States have such developments and other States will have similar developments. I refer to the States through which the Missouri River, the Colorado River, and the Columbia River flow. Some of those develop-ments already have been made, and of course they should be made.

Now, Mr. President, let me recapitu-

First. The TVA is the one and only light plant in the State of Tennessee.

Second. There is no question of competing private plants in the State. Whether that is right or wrong that is the situation that exists in the State. The Tennessee Valley Authority is the one and only source of power. There are no private companies unless in the extreme eastern end of the State in or near Bristol

Third. The Johnsonville power plant is absolutely necessary to firm up the water power so that no city and no town and no farm and no factory in the State or surrounding States that need power and light can be without them.

Fourth. It is absolutely necessary that this be done to give the manufacturers and others a steady and uninterrupted flow of power and light.

Fifth. There has been a tremendous growth of manufacturing and business in our State since we have had the water power and the needs are tremendously increasing in city, town, and county.

Sixth. It is absolutely necessary that we know in advance there will be no shortage of power and light.

Seventh. The plant is absolutely necessary for defense purposes. The Oak Ridge atomic energy plant, the plants of the Aluminum Co. of America, and the plants of the Reynolds Metals Co., which will be called upon to produce aluminum for the 70-group air force Congress has just voted will need this additional steam power. Aluminum production requires enormous quantities of power.

Eighth. The municipalities and cooperatives which distribute TVA power in the Tennessee Valley have experienced a 60-percent increase in demand since the war and expect another 65-percent increase on top of that; and the TVA is not only short but the whole Nation is short of power.

Ninth. The growth and prosperity and development of our State, the capacity of her many plants, and the development of her many farms and especially of the war plants now existing in the State will all be put in jeopardy if we fail to have a proper supply of power and light. Page 2 of the hearing.

WITNESSES

The witnesses who testified for this plant were:

Mr. Frank Ahlgren, the editor of the Commercial Appeal of Memphis, Tenn .pages 3 to 18.

The Honorable Tom Stewart-pages 18 and 19.

Mayor Jim Pleasants, of Memphis, Tenn.-pages 20 to 24.

Senator STENNIS from Mississippipages 24 to 25.

Senator John J. SPARKMAN, of Alabama-pages 26 to 35.

Mr. Gordon R. Carl.
TVA—pages 36 to 58.
Wassenauer, TVA power engi-Mr. Gordon R. Clapp, Chairman of the Mayor Hugh P. Wasson, mayor of Chattanooga-pages 71 to 76.

Mayor Tom Cummings, mayor of Nashville-pages 76 to 89.

Knoxville-pages 91 to 104.

Mr. C. Arthur Bruce, of Memphis, Tenn., who has a hardwood-lumber manufacturing business and who has a private plant of his own-pages 105 to 109.

Mr. Thomas H. Allen, president of the Memphis Light, Gas & Water division-pages 109 to 127.

Mayor R. J. Murray, of Huntingdon,

Tenn.-pages 127 to 132.

Mr. Ken G. Whitaker, Electric Power Board of Chattanooga, Tenn.—pages 133

Mr. James N. Bloodworth, Decatur, Ala.-pages 135 to 138.

Mr. Charles E. Shaver, of Huntsville, Ala .- pages 138 to 140.

Mr. C. H. Jackson, executive secretary, Florence Chamber of Commerce, Florence, Ala.-pages 141 to 142.

Telegrams and letters from mayors, businessmen, and laboring men from all over my State to me-pages 143 to 161. Congressman Statement by Cong FAUVER—pages 161 to 162.

Senator LISTER HILL—pages 162 to 168. Mr. James L. Mattox, superintendent Municipal Light & Power Department. Columbus, Miss.—pages 168 to 171.

All these witnesses made out a splendid case for the building of this additional dam.

They showed it would be necessary in national defense because of the war plants in east Tennessee.

Because of the great atomic-energy plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

Because it is necessary for the manufacturers, the laboring people, and all others in Tennessee and those several nearby States.

They showed that in 1940 the increase was $3,294,255; 1941, $5,992,083; 1942, $6,117,464; 1943, $7,962,533; 1944, $4,-047,005; 1945, $5,247,666; 1946, $18,301,-494; 1947, $21,950,985—page 511.

Practically everybody in the Tennessee Valley wants to continue it and build

They showed beyond a doubt that if properly managed it will pay good interest on the money the Government has got invested in it.

THE PRIVATE COMPANIES

The private companies then put on their proof.

Mr. James H. Greene, executive vice president, Chamber of Commerce, Pittsburgh, Pa. He objected to it largely because the private companies had to pay Federal taxes and the TVA did not have to-pages 171 and 176.

Mr. Elton Kile, president, National Associated Businessmen, Kileville, Ohio. He thought the stand-by plant was unnecessary and thought the steam plant was unauthorized although the TVA has five steam plants already and that they were asking for monopolistic privileges-pages 176 to 179.

Mr. Grey Dresie, secretary, Kansas Independent Businessmen's Association, Wichita, Kans. Thought substantially the same thing—pages 179 to 185.

Mr. Frederick A. Kimmich, vice president, Ostendorf-Morris Co., Cleveland, Ohio. He was opposed to the project as 'an unnatural and arbitrary rearrangement of the economic forces that apply in the selection of plant location." thought it was an attempt to "subsidize industry"-pages 185 to 188.

Mr. John H. Bream, lawyer, Harrisburg, Pa. Felt that it was unfair not to have the TVA taxed like other power companies-pages 188 to 189.

Mr. Garner M. Lester, president, National Tax Equality Association, Jackson, Miss.-pages 189 to 193.

Mr. H. A. Stansbury, managing director, Virginia Chamber of Commerce, Charleston, W. Va. He complained of migration of industries although all the testimony showed there has been no migration of industries-pages 194 to 197.

Mr. George T. Holmes, secretary, Kentucky Tax Research Association, Louisville, Ky .- pages 197 to 198.

Mr. Edward J. Bachman, president, Minnesota Associated Businessmen, Minneapolis, Minn. Took the position that this was "subsidized power"-pages 199 to 201.

Mr. N. W. Kelley, president, Virginia State Chamber of Commerce, Roanoke, Va. He complained of movement of industrials to Tennessee. He could not give any names at all-page 202.

Mr. Charles Eaton, executive vice president, New Jersey State Chamber of Commerce, Newark, N. J. His complaint was unfairness in taxes—pages 203 to 207.

These witnesses did not really know anything about the particular situation or the particular plant and though some of them were researchers I do not believe that anyone would claim their evidence was important one way or the other. All of them were nice gentlemen. I have no doubt.

I next come to the two principal witnesses offered on the other side. They were Mr. P. L. Smith, president of the National Association of Electric Companies, at Washington, D. C., and Mr. Raymond T. Jackson, attorney for this association, living at Cleveland, Ohio. In a way their evidence was along the same lines as the others but in one respect it was important.

Mr. Thomas H. Allen, one of the TVA witnesses, was asked what he received for his services and his answer promptly was $12,500 a year. Mr. Allen was also asked for whom he appeared and he answered he appeared for the city of Memphis. Now, when Mr. Jackson went on the stand I asked him for whom he appeared and he said he appeared for the National Association of Electric Companies. I tried my best to find out whether he was on a salary or fee but he would not tell me.

Mr. Jackson also further said:

I told you exactly what I am doing, Senator. I don't know anything about power lobbies, and to me they are no different—when any-body comes before the Congress, I don't know whether they are a lobby or not '(p. 256).

I then said:

Let me proceed with reading this article: Power companies fight building of TVA stem Pursell L. Smith, head of the Na-Association of Electric Companies tional (here there was an interruption) and the head of the private power lobby which is fighting against an appropriation for the TVA Johnsonville steam plant is being paid $65,000 a year as the head of this private power lobby. Some of the arguments of this lobby being advanced in opposition to the proposed construction (pp. 256-257).

I then questioned Mr. Jackson.

Senator McKellar. You were employed, were you not, by Mr. Smith?
Mr. Jackson. No; I just stated that I was not.

Senator McKellar. Who did employ you? Mr. Jackson. I said I have been employed on special matters by American Gas & Elec-

He came with Mr. Smith and Mr. Smith, on pages 208 and 209 suggested that he be examined first and later on Mr. Jackson said he was not employed by Mr. Smith but he was an employee of the American Gas & Electric Co., the Appalachian Electric Power Co., the West Virginia Power Co., the Ohio Power Co., and a number of others.

I then asked:

All private power companies?

Mr. Jackson. Oh, yes. We have no Government subsidy—they don't. They are not in partnership with the United States Treas-ury or anything. All they have to do is pay taxes (p. 257).

Later Mr. Smith said:

Inasmuch as Senator McKellar has raised the question of my salary, I would like to make an explanation, please Senator McKellar. It was raised yesterday on Mr. Thomas A. Allen, and that is why.

Mr. SMITH. You quoted from a newspaper

Senator McKellar. Yes, sir, I did. I would be glad to have you do it.

Mr. SMITH. I just want to say this, so there will be no misunderstanding. I am not paid $65,000 a year by the National Association of Electric Companies for the purpose of opposing the TVA as such. I am employed by the association for many duties in connection with the activities of the association, one of which is the question of the interest of the utility companies in matters involving TVA and many related subjects. We also handle problems with respect to Southwestern Power Administration, the Bonneville Power Administration, the Central Valley project in California and many other situations, and I would like to emphasize that because it is so important and comes out here so frequently.

Senator McKellar. You live in Cleveland? Mr. SMITH. I live in Washington, D. C.

Senator McKellar. You represent all these companies here?

Mr SMITH Yes.

Senator McKellar. In what capacity? Mr. SMITH. I am president of the association (p. 261).

Then again:

Senator McKellar. Was this paper mistaken about the amount of your salary? Mr. SMITH. My salary is $65,000 a year by contract.

Senator McKellar. You represent all these electric companies here at that salary? Mr. SMITH. That is correct (p. 262).

I suppose Mr. Smith is probably the highest-paid lobbyist in the world. I have never heard of anyone getting quite so much salary. Just $10,000 less than the President of the United States. These private companies are not being injured by the Government if they are able to pay $65,000 a year for lobbying in Washington. I do not believe even as high-paid lobbyist as he is that Mr. Smith made very much of an impression on anyone as a witness, or Mr. Jackson, either, for that matter, as he would not say what fee he was going to charge.

The Chattanooga Power Board paid $10,800,000 for the facilities at Chatta-

The TVA and 38 distributors paid the Tennessee Power Co., which was the private power company owning most of the property, $78,500,000.

TVA, $44,949,400; municipalities and corporations, $33,650,000.

The Memphis Power Board and the TVA jointly paid $17,360,000 for the Memphis plant.

The city of Knoxville and the TVA paid jointly $8,274,000. Nashville paid about $8,000,000 for its property.

They paid over $100,000,000 in the State of Tennessee alone.

In Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, and Georgia, a total in the neighborhood of $125,000,000.

Mr. President, I am a little regretful that a man as able and as handsome as my attractive friend the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Ferguson], the chairman of this subcommittee which has had charge of this matter, does not go along with this great project. It is a great project for our State; it is a great project for the entire country.

There are several reasons in support of the appropriation that I wish to state. although I shall be brief and shall hurry along as fast as possible. The Senate, and particularly the members of the committee, will recall that the testimony before the committee was of a peculiar nature. Mr. James H. Greene, of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., testified; and thereafter, probably a dozen witnesses who were secretaries of What Were chambers of commerce testified. did they know about this matter? they engineers? Oh, no; they were chamber of commerce men. Of course, chamber of commerce men are good men; I do not mean to criticize them. But I do not believe they have the same sort of knowledge and the same kind of judgment that the businessmen we submitted as witnesses on the other side of the question showed they had.

The testimony on that side was by Mr. Kimmich, from Cleveland, Ohio; Mr. John H. Bream, from Harrisburg, Pa.; Mr. Garner M. Lester, Mr. H. A. Stansbury, Mr. George T. Holmes, Mr. Edward J. Bachman, from Minnesota; in fact, testimony was presented by a Virginian, too, the secretary of a chamber of commerce in Virginia. They were nice men and they made very interesting witnesses; but we cannot depend on testimony of that kind for what we wish to know. This is a practical matter. Proposals of this sort must be based on facts, and so we must obtain the facts. I omitted the two most important witnesses on the other side, Mr. Jackson, a lawyer from Cleveland, Ohio, and Mr. Smith, the greatest representative of the power interests in this country, or in any country, I suppose. They both made very intelligent witnesses. They should have. Mr. Jackson did not tell how much he got from the private power companies for coming down here and making an argument, but Mr. Smith very promptly stated he got $65,000 a year for managing transactions of this kind. We are all familiar with that. He was a nice man. I have no criticism to make of a man who can make that much money. Just think of it. He can represent here in Washington companies that desire favors from the Government and get $65,000, which is but $10,000 less than the salary of the President. He is a pretty good man. I compliment him on his ability as a businessman, on being able to be the leader of his profession in all the world. No other representative around the Government or the Congress, or a part of it, ever was known to get that much money before. I compliment Mr. Smith upon it.

What sort of proof did the people in Tennessee and Alabama produce? I tell Senators in the long service I have had here, now nearly 40 years, I never had as many fine witnesses from my State on any matter of importance, as on this.

I shall ask a Senator on one side of the question and a Senator on the other side to confirm what I am about to say. I am sure the chairman of the subcommittee on the one side and the distinguished Senator from California, who took the other view of it, will say that Mr. Allen and Mr. Bruce and the various other gentlemen presented by the people of Alabama and Tennessee and Georgia. and the neighboring States, were men of the highest type and made excellent witnesses. I take it by the silence of Senators, they agree with that statement. I felt sure they would.

Just a few more remarks, and I shall leave the matter with Senators. Mr. President, we are all aware of the great success the TVA has achieved and the fine example it has been to the rest of the country. If there were such an organization in Oregon, California, Washington, Idaho, or Colorado, or on the Missouri River, or on any other river in our country, what a wonderful thing it would be.

I may say to the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], that TVA has been a wonderful success. Mistakes have been made. Those in charge have not always done just what I should have liked to see them do, but taking it as a whole they have made a success of the proposition and it has paid the Government. All Government projects do not pay off in money, but this one does, some $20,000,000 a year, and yet it has been in real operation only the last 2 or 3 years. It is engaged in some things probably it ought not to be engaged in, such as developing the farm industry. I doubt if TVA ought to be in that. I will join other Senators at any time in restricting that activity, because I do not think it ought to be done. I think this enterprise ought to be conducted as a genuine, honest, straight organization. It has been a great success. It has made money. It has built up our State. The Government will not lose anything at all by it, but will make money on the investment, because the investment is worth exactly what it is represented to be on the books of the Authority today. If mistakes have been made, they should be corrected.

Mr. President, if there is anyone who wants to ask any questions that I can answer, I shall be glad to answer them. Otherwise, I have said all I want to say at this time.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KEM. The point is based on rule XVI, section 2, reading as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations shall not report an appropriation bill containing amendments proposing new or general legislation.

The amendment under consideration-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair interrupt the Senator to say we have not reached the amendment to which the Senator is addressing his point of order.

Mr. KEM. If the Chair will permit me to say, on examination of the amendment it seems to me the amendment now is the appropriation of some $30,000,000 for certain construction, including one small plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn. The Chair, with his ready and quick perception, I think foresees that the particular language to which the Senator from Missouri objects is the "one steam plant, New Johnsonville, Tenn."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the Chair's understanding.

Mr. KEM. If the Chair will permit me to say, it seems to me the point goes to the amendment now under consideration. because we are considering the amendment proposing the appropriation of some $30,000,000 for certain construction, including one steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn. If the Chair feels that the discussion of the point I make should be deferred, I shall be glad to defer it under the ruling of the Chair. I should like the Senate to know I have in mind that this is new legislation which should not be introduced into the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wants to be quite sure the Senator from Missouri does not misunderstand the Chair. If the Senator from Missouri desires to address his point of order to the appropriation figure, as well as to the language, it certainly is in order at the moment.

Mr. KEM. I should like to do so, if the Chair will bear with me, in view of the fact that it seems the two are intermingled and connected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well

Mr. KEM. As has just been said, we are dealing with an amendment that proposes the appropriation of some $30,-000,000 for certain purposes. One of the purposes for which the $30,000,000 is to be devoted is the construction of one steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn. The point of order, Mr. President, is predicated on the proposition that the construction of a steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn., is entirely new legislation. • It has not previously appeared on the statute books. It is improper to introduce such legislation for the first time in an appropriation bill. Of course the question involved is a simple one, namely, whether the TVA Act as amended contains authority or authorization to construct a steam plant. I have examined the act with some care. It seems to me that the purposes of the act are summarized in section 23. Those purposes are enumerated as follows:

(1) The maximum amount of flood control; (2) the maximum development of said Tennessee River for navigation purposes; (3) the maximum generation of electric power consistent with flood control and navigation; (4) the proper use of marginal the proper method of reforestation of all lands in said drainage basin suitable for reforestation; and (6) the economic and social well-being of the people living in said river basin.

In carrying out those general powers, steam plants are referred to in various places. The Corporation which is created by the act is authorized in section 7. subsection (a), to purchase certain nitrate plants, including steam plants located, respectively, at Sheffield, Ala., and Muscle Shoals, Ala. Certainly that does not cover a steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the following provision of the act, which will be found on page 3:

Except as otherwise specifically provided in this act, the Corporation-

That means the TVAshall have power to construct dams, reser-

The bill provides for the construction of powerhouses, and it has been complained that they cost too much money.

I read furtherpowerhouses, power structures, transmission lines, navigation projects, and incidental works in the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and to unite the various power installations into one or more systems by transmission lines.

It is also provided that it shall have power to acquire real estate for the construction of dams, reservoirs, transmission lines, powerhouses, and other structures and navigation projects at any point along the Tennessee River, or any of its tributaries.

Fuller authority to construct power-houses could not be given than this power which Congress has given by the act.

Mr. KEM. I have in mind the language to which the Senator from Tennessee directs attention. It is perfectly apparent from the context that what the Congress had in mind when the act was passed was powerhouses connected with hydroelectric development. It is con-stantly used in that way in the act. When Congress meant steam plants, as I shall show the Senate in a few minutes, Congress knew perfectly well how to express that idea. There was no confusion in the mind of Congress as to what was meant by a powerhouse and what was meant by a steam plant. When Congress meant a hydroelectric powerhouse, it said hydroelectric powerhouse. When it meant a steam plant, it said steam plant.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wanted to ask the able Senator what Congress meant when it referred to power structures?

Mr. KEM. Where does that phrase appear?

Mr. SPARKMAN. In section 4 (j). What did Congress mean when it said: in the construction of any future dam, steam

Mr. KEM. If the Senator will ask me the questions one by one, and direct my attention to the section of the act, I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the Senator will yield twice to me, I shall be glad to ask him the questions.

Mr. KEM. Very well.
Mr. SPARKMAN. Section 4 (j) of the original act provided, among other powers enumerated, that

The Corporation-

Meaning the TVA-

shall have power to construct dams, reservoirs, powerhouses, power structures, transmission lines, navigation projects, and incidental works.

Mr. KEM. The Senator has just picked out a few words from the section. The Senator should read the entire language. The language is perfectly

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the Senator will permit me, I will read the entire section.

Mr. KEM. I am capable of reading it

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator asked me if I would read it.

Mr. KEM. The Senator chose to read certain part. If the Senator will read the entire section, I shall be glad to have it read.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Different powers are enumerated. One series of powers is enumerated in section 4 (j). Let me read all of section 4 (j). Of course it starts by saying "the Corporations," referring to TVA "Shall have power to construct dams, reservoirs, powerhouses, power structures"-

Mr. KEM. The Senator is not reading the language correctly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, yes, the Senator is reading the language correctly.
Mr. KEM. The Senator omitted the words "such dam."

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is where the Senator from Missouri falls into a fatal argument, because he is reading from the 1935 act, and not the original act.

Mr. KEM. I am reading from the original act, as amended. That is what governs the procedure today.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Not at all. If the Senator wants to construe what Congress meant when it passed the act, he must go back to the original act. The original act of 1933 did not contain the language upon which the Senator is depending to make his argument. I have read the entire section as it is given in the original

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I submit that the statute which governs proceedings today is the TVA Act as amended, and the question as to whether the acquisition or construction of a steam power-plant is authorized under existing law depends not upon what the law was when it was originally passed, but upon the law as it stands amended today.

I believe that the Senator from Alabama had another question, and I shall be glad to answer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair ask the Senator from Missouri whether it is his position that the amended act repeals the language to which the Senator from Alabama has referred?

Mr. KEM. No. My position is that the amended act reads as follows:

Shall have power to construct such dams and reservoirs in the Tennessee River—

The Senator from Alabama in reading it omitted the word "such"-

Shall have power to construct such dams, and reservoirs in the Tennessee River and its tributaries, as in conjunction with Wilson Dam, and Norris Wheeler, and Pickwick Landing Dams, now under construction, will provide a 9-foot channel in the said river and maintain a water supply for the same, from Knoxville to its mouth, and will best serve to promote navigation on the Tennessee River and its tributaries and control destructive flood waters in the Tennessee and Mississippi River drainage basins; and shall have power to acquire or construct powerhouses.

It is perfectly clear that it means powerhouses on these rivers-

Power structures, transmission lines, navigation projects, and incidental works in the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and to unite the various power installations into one or more systems by transmission lines.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me there?

Mr. KEM. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The last clause the Senator read is the identical language of the original act, and that is the only part that was in the original act. Therefore it could not possibly have depended on the first part of this amended section for its interpretation.

Mr. KEM. I take it that if there is any rule of statutory construction that is well known and universally followed it is the rule that the construction depends upon the four corners of the instrument, the four corners of the statute, and the statute which the President pro tempore is called upon to construe today is the statute as it was amended and stands on the books today.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the Senator will yield, of course, in order to ascertain what Congress intended from this whole instrument, one must go back and get the original expression of intent, and the original act merely contained a like provision, which shows clearly that it was not tied to the first part of the provision, as the Senator would have us believe now.

Mr. KEM. Will the Senator permit me to say that Congress frequently changes its mind, and that it has changed its mind with reference to the project it meant to authorize in the Tennesee Valley, not once, but several times? The question before the Senate today is, what authority exists as of today for the construction and ownership of works in that area?

I believe the Senator had some other question.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; I was quoting from section 15. This was in the original

Very well.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And it was in the act as amended in 1935.

Mr. KEM. Very well.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It reads:

In the construction of any future dam-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is page 10. Mr. SPARKMAN. Section 15.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It reads, "In the construction of any future dam, steam plant," and so forth. What did Congress mean when it inserted that langu-

Mr. KEM. I can tell the Senator in a very few words what it means as of today. I invite the Senator's attention to section 15 (a), which was an amendment inserted in the year 1939, by the Seventysixth Congress.

Section 15 as originally passed provided that in the construction of any future steam plant the Corporation, or the Board, was authorized and empowered to issue, on the credit of the United States, certain serial bonds, not exceeding $50,000,000.

In 1939 Congress amended that by inserting section 15 (a), and if the Senator will look at the last line in section 15 (a), he will see the following language:

The authority of the Corporation to issue bonds hereunder shall expire at the end of 5 years from the date when the section as amended herein becomes law except that such bonds which may be issued-

And so forth. In other words, Mr. President, in 1939 Congress provided that that authority should terminate and be at an end within 5 years from the date of that amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. KEM. The authority, therefore, to issue those bonds, to which the Senator from Alabama directs attention, expired in the year 1944.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the Senator

vield?

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to yield for a question, not for an argument.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like to make a comment on what the Senator has just said.

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to yield for that.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I well remember the act of 1939. As a matter of fact, I was a joint author of that act, from which the Senator has just quoted.

Mr. KEM. Was the Senator joint author also of the amendment?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Of the act he has just quoted.

Mr. KEM. Was the Senator author of the amendment?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; I am telling the Senator that that was an amendment of the TVA Act. I am telling the Senator that.

Mr. KEM. What intrigued me was that the Senator's recollection of the act seemed to be better than his recollection of the amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I remember the amendment quite well, and what I am saying refers to the amendment which the Congress adopted in 1939, to which the Senator has just referred. If he will read the last sentence again, the Senator will see that it took away from the TVA the power to pay for steam plants from the issuance of bonds, but it did not say one word about taking away the power to build steam plants.

Mr. KEM. The Senator is trying to lift himself up by his own bootstraps. He calls attention to section 15, which gives the power to issue bonds, then he says that power is taken away, but it remained. Let me ask the Senator, if the power conferred by section 15 was terminated in the year 1944, how can it be said that any vestige of that power remains in the corporation or the board?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wish to make myself clear. I do not contend that the power to construct steam plants is derived solely from section 15. As a matter of fact, section 15 recognized that the power existed to construct steam plants, and provided a way by which they could be paid for, that is, by the issuance of bonds.

Mr. KEM. Of course, I have already directed the attention of the Senate to certain steam plants which were authorized to be bought, a steam plant at Muscle Shoals, and another in Memphis, There is no question but that certain specific, definite, steam plants were authorized to be purchased. My point is, if the Senator will bear with me, that there is no blanket authority to go out into the Tennessee Valley, anywhere the corporation may elect to go, and purchase or erect a steam plant. In other words, the authority to buy a steam plant at Muscle Shoals does not carry with it by any implication, the authority to buy or erect a steam plant at New Johnsonville Tenn

Mr. SPARKMAN. I agree with the Senator in that statement, but let me ask him what this means in section 14, on the same page. It says, "In like manner, the cost and book value of any dams, steam plants, or other similar improvements hereafter constructed and turned over to said board for the purpose of control and management shall be ascertained," and so forth.

Mr. KEM. I was just pointing out to the Senator what those steam plants are. They are the steam plants referred to in section 7, the steam plant at Muscle Shoals, and other plants. There is no question but that certain specific steam plants are authorized. At the very outset of my remarks I pointed out the authority to buy a certain steam plant, that is, the steam plant at Muscle Shoals. The act proceeds and makes certain provisions for the handling and the financing of that steam plant. But the Senator misses the point of my argument entirely if he thinks that I am contending for a minute that no steam plants are authorized. My contention is that no steam plant is authorized at New Johnsonville, Tenn.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I hope the Senator does not contend that the act has set out in it exactly where every dam is to be built and every steam plant is to be constructed.

Mr. KEM. No. If the Senator will permit me to say it, that is the vice into which the Appropriations Committee has fallen. It has undertaken to authorize the construction of a plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn., which is entirely outside and extraneous to the proper office of an appropriation measure.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will

the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield for a question.

Mr. COOPER. Will the Senator cite to me the section of the act or amendment of the act on which he is basing his argument?

Mr. KEM. I am basing my argument on the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, Public No. 17, passed in the Seventythird Congress, first session; as amended by Public No. 412 in the Seventyfourth Congress; as further amended by Public No. 224 in the Seventy-sixth Congress; as further amended by Public Resolution No. 88 in the Seventy-sixth Congress; as further amended by Public No. 184 in the Seventy-seventh Congress; and finally as amended by Public No. 306 in the Seventy-seventh Congress.

Mr. COOPER. May I ask the Senator a question? I missed the first part of his argument.

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. COOPER. Is the Senator contending that there is no authority to construct a particular dam or a particular steam plant without the specific naming by Congress of such plant or such dam?

Mr. KEM. Not for a minute. I hope the Senator from Kentucky would not think I would make an argument of that kind Mr. COOPER. Is the Senator contending that there is no general authority in the act to construct such steam plants as are necessary for the efficient operation of the Authority?

Mr. KEM. Absolutely, and I challenge the Senator from Kentucky to point out such a general authority.

Mr. COOPER. I find in section 4 of the TVA act, which I understand the Senator does not now deem applicable an opinion which I think is subject to question—the following provisions:

Sec. 4. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this act, the Corporation—

(f) May purchase or lease and hold such real and personal property as it deems necessary or convenient in the transaction of its business, and may dispose of any such personal property held by it.

(g) Shall have such powers as may be necessary or appropriate for the exercise of the powers herein specifically conferred upon the Corporation.

(i) Shall have power to acquire real estate for the construction of dams, reservoirs, transmission lines, power houses, and other structures and navigation projects at any point along the Tennessee River, or any of its tributaries.

(j) Shall have power to * * acquire or construct power houses, power structures, transmission lines, navigation projects, and incidental works in the Tennessee River and its tributaries.

I call attention to the words "other structures" in subsection (i), also to the fact that it has been held that transmission lines could be constructed, and I would ask the Senator to draw the distinction between the construction of transmission lines needed for efficient disposition of power and the construction of plants needed for the efficient disposition of power.

Mr. KEM. I will be glad to do so, Mr. President. The transmission lines are physically connected with the distribution of power from a hydroelectric dam. Certainly the right to construct and operate those dams could be fairly said to be an incidental power when the authority was given to construct the dam and to market the power from it.

Mr. COOPER. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KEM. Yes, I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. COOPER. I point out that it was not absolutely necessary for the Tennessee Valley Authority to construct transmission lines to the dams in order to dispose of power. It could possibly be done by private companies. It was necessary to efficiently dispose of the power. It can as reasonably be argued that steam plants can be constructed to efficiently dispose of power developed at the dams.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, the courts have held that the construction of the transmission lines from the hydroelectric dam were reasonably connected; were incidental facilities the right to construct which was given in the power to construct the dams. For my part I think there is no reason to quarrel with that decision. I think it was clearly right and correct. But I ask the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Alabama or any other Senator if they know of any decision of any court of record which has held that the right to construct a hydroelectric dam and powerhouse carries with it the incidental right to construct a steam power plant.

Mr. COOPER. I think the Senator from Missouri is the first one who has questioned that power. I do not know that it has been decided by any court. I will say that a few years ago Congress appropriated money to construct a steam plant in the Tennessee Valley at Watts Bar. Congress did not question its power at that time. The Congress appropriated money for the Tennessee Valley Authority to purchase private utility companies which included steam plants. At that time the power was not questioned.

Going back to the matter of principle and not just the specific words, it seems reasonable to me that if a court would hold that it was necessary and essential to build transmission lines to make proper disposition of power taking into consideration the well-known fact that steam plants are needed properly to dispose of water power, it would follow that there would be authority to construct sufficient steam plants properly to dispose of power developed at dams.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I do not desire to wear down the patience of the Chair, but I do want to say that the argument of the Senator from Kentucky and the argument of the Senator from Alabama to an extent would carry us to the point where under this statute the TVA would be authorized to build or buy or operate power plants anywhere in the United States that the corporation thought were reasonably incidental to its efforts.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield for a question.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator a moment ago asked if either the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Alabama would point out to him any Supreme Court decision.

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not know of a Supreme Court decision, but I do have something here which I believe the Senator from Missouri would accept as being pretty close to it. This is taken from a complaint filed in a suit which went to the Supreme Court of the United States testing the TVA authority. The complaint was signed by the Honorable Raymond T. Jackson, an attorney of Cleveland, Ohio, who, by the way, testified befor the committee against the provision in the bill. I refer the Senator to a statement in that complaint signed by Mr. Jackson as counsel for all the power companies which were trying to overthrow the Tennessee Valley Authority Act. I read:

Under the Tennessee Valley Authority Act as amended the number and capacity of steam and hydroelectric plants for the generation of electricity which the defendants—

That is, the Tennessee Valley Authority—

may construct and operate in the Tennessee

And I agree that it ought to be confined to the Tennessee Basin—are wholly undefined. Said act as amended purports to vest complete and uncontrolled discretion in the defendants in relation to

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, that is the first time I have ever heard it seriously contended that the statement made by a lawyer in a pleading was an authority. I thought it was pretty generally recognized that we lawyers sometimes say as we are paid, that any qualms of conscience are salved by the tinkling jingle of our clients' gold. The proposition that a statement made in a pleading on behalf of a litigant by his counsel is an authorwhich the United States Senate should consider, or which the President pro tempore of the Senate should seriously consider in ruling on a point of order, is, indeed, unique.

Are there any further questions?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to make it clear that I was not citing the statement as authority upon which I recommended that anyone rely. However, this distinguished lawyer takes the same position today which the Senator from Missouri takes. But when he was fighting the case in the Supreme Court, this is what he said about it. He is a distinguished lawyer.

Mr. KEM. That is an admission against Mr. Jackson's interest. I take it it is hardly an admission against my interest.

Mr. HILL rose.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from Alabama have a question?

Mr. HILL. I desire to address the Senate in my own time.

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to advise the Senator from Alabama when I have completed my remarks.

Mr. President, as I was saying, steam plants are referred to in more than one place in this statute. They are referred to in section 15, in which the authority to issue bonds for the purchase of steam plants is expressly given. In a later amendment the authority was expressly terminated, so that it could be exercised only within 5 years.

It seems apparent that in 1939 the Congress looked at this statute and said, 'We have given a power to the Tennessee Valley Authority which goes pretty far. It is a power which we do not see now is directly connected with the generation of hydroelectric power and flood protection in the Tennessee Valley. If that power is to be exercised, it must be exercised within 5 years from this date."

time expired in 1944.

Let me get these references in order. In section 7, a steam plant is referred to. It is the plant at Muscle Shoals. I take it that it would be admitted by learned Senators that that does not authorize the construction of a steam plant at New Johnsonville.

The next section to which I wish to refer is section 15. That is the section in which authority was given to issue bonds. The authority terminated in 1944. In section 15 there is reference again to a steam plant:

The Board, whenever the President deems it advisable, is hereby empowered and instructed to complete dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, Ala., and the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals.

If the Congress intended that the Board should have the authority to construct steam plants anywhere at any time, why did it use printer's ink to give this specific authority to construct, own, and operate the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals? I think the question carries with it its own answer.

Mr. President, I should like to conclude as I started. I think the authority given to the TVA under the act is summarized as clearly and specifically as it is possible to do in words. That language is contained in section 23 of the act. There are set out six purposes which Congress says are the general purposes of the act. I submit that not one of them is the purpose to construct, maintain, or operate a steam plant.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President-Mr. KEM. I am glad to yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. KEM. No.

Mr. President, I believe that clearly, through an excusable omission in failing to consult the general act of authority, our committee has inserted in this appropriation bill a piece of general or new legislation, and that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I submit that the point of order is not well taken, because I think we must consider not only the whole TVA Act, but the common-sense principles upon which it must rest.

Certainly there is no question of doubt that the spirit of the TVA Act was not only to set up hydroelectric plants and multiple-purpose dams, but also to set up an integrated electric-power system in that area, to such an extent that authority was given for the TVA to take over the existing power system. Inasmuch as that was done, it is not common sense, in the judgment of the junior Senator from California, that they would set up an integrated power system and at the same time would eliminate the possibility of firming up power with a steam plant, when there is not a publicly owned or privately owned utility system in the country which does not have to depend upon steam plants for the firming up of electric power.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Let me finish this thought, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

During the course of the hearings the junior Senator from California, who presided at a number of them, raised certain questions as to the reason for the location at New Johnsonville. The reason will be found on page 42. A map of that area was submitted, showing that the New Johnsonville location is substantially in the center of the power load. The question occurred to me as to why it should not be located at Memphis or some other place.

Therefore I submit that the language in the bill, "one steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn.," is not in fact new legislation, but rather is merely a limitation in the appropriation act, so that they could not take the money which the committee desired to have appropriated for the purpose of constructing a steam plant and locate it either outside the TVA area-which, of course, they would not do-or in some area where they could not get the full economic use of the plant.

I am sure that the able Senator from Missouri knows the farther electricity must be transmitted—and this is true whether it be a steam plant or a hydroelectric plant—the greater the power losses are in transmission. It seems to me that it is good economics, and is a saving of money to the TVA-which in turn means saving money to the Federal Treasury—to have this plant located where it can receive the greatest economic benefit. Therefore, the language is merely a limitation in an appropriation bill, for which there is ample right and precedent, rather than in any degree being new legislation.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Did the Senator understand the Senator from Missouri to say that he was objecting to the location of the plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn., if such plant were to be built?

Mr. KNOWLAND. No; I did not. was merely pointing out to the able Senator that to that extent the language was a limitation by the Appropriations Committee so that the plant would be placed where the testimony showed it would render the greatest economic value to the TVA project.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I think the Senator is devoting his very respectable powers of argument to the point that New Johnsonville, Tenn., is a proper, fit. and apt location for this plant, which is entirely beside the point. I did not for a minute make the point that New Johnsonville is not a good location for such a plant, if such a plant is to be built, or that New Johnsonville is not a central location. I know nothing about that.

My point is that at no time has the Congress authorized the construction by the TVA of a steam plant at New Johnsonville, or at Knoxville, or at New York. or at Oakland, Calif., or at Kansas City, Mo., or anywhere else. Until such an authorization is made, I say it is improper, and subject to a point of order, for the Appropriations Committee to undertake to put such a law on the statute books.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I submit to the able Senator from Missouri that it is not at all unusual for the Appropriations Committee, in dealing with an authorized project-and I think there is no question that the TVA is an authorized project-to indicate in an appropriation bill that certain amounts of the funds to be appropriated will be for transmission lines or for power plants or, as in the case of the Central Valley project in my State, will specifically be allocated for the Friant-Kern canal, or the Delta-Mendota canal, or the Shasta Dam, or whatever it may be. It is well within the province of the Appropriations Committee, when recommending the appropriation of money for irrigation purposes, to place certain limitations on the money, so that it will not be misapplied by being used for power projects, or vice versa.

In this limitation we have tried to indicate that of that amount of money, a part of it-as we have set forth in our report and in the bill-shall be for the construction of a steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn., and shall not be used for some other purpose-for instance, let us say, for research work or for something else. I think that is well within the power of the Appropriations Com-

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, if the Senator from California will permit me to say so, I think he is assuming the point at argument, which is that the TVA is authorized to build or construct or own a steam plant. If the Senator from California will be kind enough to point out to us the place in the TVA Act where the ownership and construction of such a steam plant is authorized, then I shall be glad to take into consideration the argument he has made.

However, the point is not the good faith of the Appropriations Committee. Certainly, that has not been challenged. The point is not whether New Johnsonville, Tenn., is a proper or central location for the proposed plant.

The question is whether under the enabling statute the ownership or construction of a steam power plant anywhere has been authorized by the Congress.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I submit that when the act says "powerhouses," it is obvious that a powerhouse or power plant can be either a steam plant or a hydroelectric plant, and that the intent of the Congress and the language of the law are sufficient to cover either one, both of which would be necessary in order to carry out this integrated program.

For the Senator from Missouri to take a narrow interpretation of the phrase power plant" as meaning solely a hydroelectric power plant, I do not think is a realistic approach. I think a power plant can be either a steam power plant or a hydroelectric power plant-or, in fact, it could be an atomic-energy power plant. If, either in this case or in any other case, the law provided for a power plant, and if, 10 or 15 years later, we were to find that we could better generate power by means of atomic energy, I hope the Senator would not take the position that that narrow interpretation should be placed on that term-namely, that we could not make the fullest possible use of the technological developments which we hope to achieve.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, several rather interesting propositions have been advanced in the course of this discussion, but I think the one advanced just now by the Senator from California is perhaps the most interesting of all. That seems to be that if the TVA is authorized to construct a power plant for hydroelectric power, which we admit it is, or if it is authorized to own a steam plant at Muscle Shoals, which we admit it is, then by some hocus-pocus it has acquired the power to keep up with industrial and scientific developments, wherever they may lead.

As I understand the Senator from California, he is advancing the proposition that if the Congress authorizes the TVA to construct and own a steam plant at Muscle Shoals or to construct, own, and operate hydroelectric plants along the Tennessee River, then the TVA may also keep a weather eye on scientific development and may acquire an atomic plant at Kingsport, Tenn.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the language to which I called the Senator's attention did not refer to a hydroelectric plant or to a steam plant. It was "powerhouses." or "power structures." I submit to the able Senator from Missouri that it would be the duty of any well-run firm, whether privately owned or publicly owned-of course, this is purely a hypothetical question, as the Senator must realize, because we do not now have commercial production of atomic power for electric-generating purposes—but if in the course of years it should be established that it was possible more economically and more efficiently to generate power by means of atomic energy than by means of a hydroelectric power plant or a steam plant, I should say that probably every public utility in the country would be interested in that, if they could save money to their rate payers and also to the companies themselves. In that case, I think every privately owned public utility and every publicly owned public utility would be interested, and certainly they should not be foreclosed from participating in that development in the course of the years, if such a development occurs.

Therefore, I merely say that when power plants are mentioned in this connection, I do not think that specifically means hydroelectric power plants and I do not think it specifically means steam power plants, but I think it means power plants using whatever can be used best to do the particular job.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, the Senator from California is, then, of the serious opinion that under the TVA Act, the Tennessee Valley Authority could engage, today, in the generation of power by atomic energy created from fissionable materials.

Mr. KNOWLAND. No; I did not say that, because of course that would depend on the Atomic Energy Act itself and on the safeguards which might be set up by the Atomic Energy Commission, and whether in the judgment of that Commission it would be possible, without disclosing anything that might be of a military nature, to license—either to publicly owned or privately owned power companies-whatever type of plant might be necessary for the manufacture of electric power through the use of fissionable materials. I merely mention that as a possibility for the future. No man is wise enough today to know how quic!-ly such a future development might come upon us.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President. I do not know that I follow the Senator from California in the various ramifications of his argument. But so far as the Senator from Missouri is concerned, I say that if the TVA wishes to engage in the use of atomic energy, it should come to Congress for specific authority for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether he takes the position that the term "powerhouses" refers exclusively to hydroelectric power?

Mr. KEM. I think it does specifically so refer, in view of the context in which it is used. The President pro tempore has in mind section 4; does he?

As was pointed out in the colloguy with the Senator from Alabama, I think language authorizing the construction of the dams on the Tennessee River and its tributaries, as set out specificallythe Wilson Dam, the Norris Dam, the Wheeler Dam, and the Pickwick Landing Dam-specifically modifies the language of the entire section, and that the authority to construct power structures, as well as transmission lines, navigation projects, and incidental works on the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and to unite the various projects by one or more transmission lines, necessarily is so modified and qualified.

I shall tell the Chair why I think that is so. If it were not so, that would have created on the Tennessee River a veritable octopus that could reach out all over the United States and acquire all sorts of power plants. As the Senator from California has said, they could engage in the generation of atomic energy. They could come into my State and say, "We think in our judgment it is wise for us to come into Missouri, because your power plants could compete with ours. and you compete in our market." think the only reasonable construction of the language is that the power structures referred to are the power structures at the Wilson Dam, Norris Dam, Wheeler Dam, and the Pickwick Landing Dam, and incidental dams on the Tennessee River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to submit another question to some Senator who can answer it. The Chair would like to know whether the subject of justification arose in the committee in the consideration of the amendment. If it did, the Chair assumes the presence of the amendment in the reported bill would indicate the committee had resolved the matter in favor of the validity of the amendment. But the Chair has understood there was some discussion of the matter in the committee and would like to be advised what happened in committee in this connec-

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President. I recall no discussion at all as to whether this was legislation.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think the Senator will agree with me when I say-and it fits in with his explanation, which I agree is correct—that no point of order was raised against this amendment as being legislative and therefore inappropriate.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct. It was not mentioned, was it?

Mr. KNOWLAND. It was not mentioned as to that point.

That is what I Mr. FERGUSON.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Of course, the power plant at New Johnsonville was mentioned and there was considerable discussion concerning it, but the point of order was not raised.

Mr. FERGUSON. The point of order was not raised.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct. Mr. FERGUSON. We have an under-

the words "powerhouses and other struc-tures," in paragraph (i) subsection 4, and the words "powerhouses" and "power structures" of subsection (j) of section 4. I strongly contend that the use of those words meant any kind of powerhouse or power structure, whether it was a hydroelectric powerhouse or a steam powerhouse. A steam plant is as much a powerhouse as any other power plant, you get electric power from a steam plant as well as from a hydro plant. But if for the sake of argument there should be any doubt that "powerhouses and power structures and other structures' means steam plants, when we turn to the other sections of the bill, the other sections make it absolutely clear that those words mean a steam plant or steam powerhouse as well as a water powerhouse. I call the Chair's attention to page 22, section 14, of the TVA Act, the language of which has been quoted before. The last sentence in that section says:

In like manner, the cost and book value of any dams, steam plants, or other similar im-provements hereafter constructed and turned over to said Board for the purpose of control and management shall be ascertained and allocated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator state again where he is reading?

Mr. HILL. I am reading from page 22, section 14 of the TVA Act. Possibly I had better read the whole section. Section 14 reads:

The Board-

That means the TVA Boardshall make a thorough investigation as to the present value of dam No. 2-

We knew it then as dam No. 2. It is That now known as the Wilson Dam. was the dam under construction during World War I, in 1917-18. The dam was in existence, owned by the Government of the United States, at the time the TVA Act was passed in 1933.

The Board shall make a thorough investigation as to the present value of dam No. 2—

The Wilson Dam, in other words and the steam plants at nitrate plant No. 1 and nitrate plant No. 2-

Both those steam plants, the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 1, the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2, were built in 1917-18, during World War I, and were in existence when the TVA Act was enacted. Congress directed that the Board should estimate the value of the dam and of those two steam plants, and then, as to the cost of the Cove Creek Dam, which was a dam then under consideration for construction, now known as the Norris Dam-for the purpose of ascertaining how much of the value or the cost of said properties shall be allocated and charged up to (1) flood control, (2) navigation, (3) fertilizer, (4) national defense, and (5) the development of power. The findings thus made by the Board, when approved by the President of the United States, shall be final, and such findings shall thereafter be used in all allocation of value for the purpose of keeping the book value of said properties.

Up to that point, Mr. President, section 14 dealt with properties, steam plants, and a dam then owned by the Government of the United States, and which, under the act, were to be turned over to the TVA Board. The act did not stop there. It went further and said what?

In like manner-

That is, in the manner previously provided in section 14-the cost and the book value of the dams, steam plants, or other similar improvements hereafter constructed-

Showing it was the clear intent and purpose of the act that there would be steam plants, in the language of this section, "hereafter constructed."

So there can be no question but what section 14 confirmed the fact that it was the intent and purpose that powerhouses, power structures, and other structures should include steam plants as well as water plants. The statute was doing what? It was providing for the allocation of costs and book value of what? Of this very Johnsonville plant which is before the Congress today, if Congress appropriates the money and the steam plant is constructed.

I turn to section 15. What do we find in that section? Section 15 was a part of the original act, Mr. President. Section 15 says:

In the construction of any future dam, steam plant, or other facility, to be used in whole or in part for the generation or transmission of electric power, the Board is hereby authorized and empowered to issue on the credit of the United States and to sell serial bonds not exceeding $50,-000,000 in amount, having a maturity not more than 50 years from the date of issue

In other words, Congress provided not only for the construction of steam plants, but for the issuance of bonds with which to pay for them, the idea at that time being that it might be that the TVA would be financed not so much from appropriations out of the Treasury as from bonds issued by the TVA, and guaranteed by the Government, So Congress again clearly authorized the construction of steam plants.

As to section 15 (a), Mr. President, that section does not in any way, shape, fashion, or form, take anything away from section 15 or in any way repeal section 15. It simply adds additional power for the purchase of steam plants, dams, and power facilities. Section 15 (c) constitutes the language of the bill which Congress enacted in 1939, authorizing the TVA to purchase properties of private power companies in the Tennessee Valley. The question arose as to whether, under the act, the TVA would have the authority to purchase dams, steam plants, and other power facilities. There was no question raised that TVA would not have the power to construct steam plants, dams, transmission lines, and power facilities, but there was a question as to purchasing properties without some further authorization from the Congress.

That is how section 15 (c) came into the act.

Mr. President, section 15 clearly authorized the construction of steam plants, dams, and so forth, and the issuance of bonds to pay for the same. Then the question came up as to buying the properties of private power companies in the TVA area, and whether or not the TVA had authority to purchase dams and steam plants or transmission lines and other power facilities. In order that there might be no doubt about the authority, section 15 (c) was added to the act through the bill which was passed in 1939, to give to the TVA the additional power of purchasing as well as constructing steam plants, dams, and other power facilities.

In that connection, Mr. President, I should like to call the Chair's attention to the language of the report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture made on the bill reported in 1939, the bill which, as I say, embodied section 15 (c). Here is what the Senate committee said:

Under the existing Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended, the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority are empowered to issue bonds and use the proceeds thereof for the construction of dams, steam plants, or other facilities to be used for the generation and transmission of electric power, also for the construction or acquisition of transmission lines, and for making loans to municipalities and cooperative organizations for the purchase of existing transmission lines and distribution properties. The authority under the law to issue bonds for the purchase-

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. From what section is the Senator reading?

Mr. HILL. I am reading from a report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry which accompanied the bill which was passed in 1939 embodying section 15 (c).

Mr. BALDWIN. I apologize for the interruption.

Mr. HILL. The committee report went on to say:

The authority under the law to issue bonds for the purchase of existing generating facilities is extremely doubtful. It is this

That is, a defect with reference to

It is this defect in existing law which the proposed amendment is designed to remedy.

That is Senate Report 189, Seventysixth Congress, first session, pages 1 and 2.

When the bill came up for consideration by the Senate the then majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], had this to say:

This bill proposes to consolidate sections 15 and 15 (a) of the existing Tennessee Valley Authority Act, so as to make it per-fectly clear that in addition to the right and authority to construct transmission lines and all other sorts of public utilities, such as those that are contemplated by this purchase

Remember, Mr. President, that in the purchase were some steam plants owned by private power companies the Tennessee Valley Authority may also purchase them. There has been some doubt expressed as to the authority of the TVA under existing law, to purchase these properties.

That is, the properties of private power companies, referring to dams, steam plants, transmission lines, and other power facilities.

The Senator from Kentucky then stated that-

The Tennessee Valley Authority could undoubtedly construct similar properties.

The late Senator Norris spoke on that occasion, and here is what he had to say, Mr. President:

Under existing law the TVA could issue bonds and build the plants—

Namely, the steam plants of private power companies, along with any other installations which the private power companies had-but there is a question whether it can purchase the plants when they have been built by others. It may be a doubtful question, but in order to be sure about that, this measure has been offered.

Mr. President, I happen to be the author of the bill for the creation of the TVA. It was passed by the House of Representatives, as the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] said earlier in the afternoon. I sat on the conference committee of the two Houses assisting in ironing out certain differences. There was no question in the minds of the conferees that the act authorized the TVA Board to build dams, steam plants, transmission lines, and any other power facilities which might be necessary for the orderly, economical, and businesslike generation and distribution of power and for the development and operation of an integrated and complete system in the Tennessee Valley.

I submit to the Chair that the language in section 4 certainly, as it is fortified and sustained by the language in sections 14 and 15 of the act, make it definite and clear that there is no question but that the construction of a steam plant is authorized by the Congress.

In that connection, Mr. President, I have before me the language which authorized the construction of the Watts Bar steam plant, a plant constructed by the TVA. I quote the language in the law today (54 Stat. 781):

as an additional amount to carry out the provisions of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, approved May 18, 1933, as amended by the Acts approved August 31, 1935, and July 26, 1939, including the funds necessary to begin construction of a dam on the Holston River near Jefferson Tenn.; to begin installation of two additional electric generating units at Wilson Dam, Alabama, and one additional electric generating unit at Pickwick Landing Dam, Tennessee; and to begin construction of steam electric generating facilities with a rated capacity of approximately 120,000 kilowatts in the area served by the Authority.

Mr. President, that is the language of the act passed by Congress in 1940 for the construction, for the building of what is known as the Watts Bar steam plant, a plant built with funds from the Treasury of the United States appropriated by the Congress, built by the TVA for the TVA and now a part of the TVA

Therefore, Mr. President, in view of the clear language of the act, the clear intent of the Congress, there can be no question but that the steam plant is authorized, and that the Appropriations Committee has full authority to bring in this appropriation under this authorization, and the point of order should be overruled

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I do not wish to labor the point, but I should like to say just one further word.

It has always been a rule of construction in the courts, I have understood, that when items are set forth in specific terms, it is a fair assumption that those items which are not included in specific terms are not to be included as being implied. In other words, if a statute mentions one thing specifically and fails to mention another specifically, it is rather indicated that the item which is left out was left out intentionally, and only those things are to be included which were specifically set forth.

Applying that to the section of the bill which gives the power to this corporation, we find that there is no mention whatever of steam plants. The mention is of dams, reservoirs, rivers, tributaries, and the construction of channels to maintain a water level. The language is all in terms dealing with water, in connection with a hydroelectric development.

The clause granting powers to this corporation then proceeds to say:

shall have power to acquire or construct powerhouses, power structures, transmission lines, navigation projects, and incidental works in the Tennessee River and its tribu-

There is no mention whatever of a steam plant. Therefore the powerhouses and the power structures specifically referred to are to be considered in connection with a hydroelectric development, and not a steam development.

Mr. KEM. Senator yield? Mr. President, will the

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield. Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator if section 7, section 15, and section 16 do not each show that the draftsman of the act knew exactly how to express the concept of the steam plant when and if he intended to use it.

Mr. BALDWIN. I think that is definitely so. I intended to make the further point that since subsequent provisions specifically mention steam plants, it is a fair assumption that they were not included in the earlier sections. Had they been, there would have been no need of making specific reference to them later.

Mr. HILL. Section 15 was in the original act and section 15 (c) was subsequent thereto to authorize the purchase. in addition to the construction of steam plants, dams, and power facilities.

Mr. BALDWIN. That is the very point

I am making.

Mr. HILL. They are both parts of the act today—one supplements the other.

Mr. BALDWIN. The very fact that the term "steam plant" is not mentioned in the first section I read, which was the one of general authorization, and that it is mentioned specifically later, but in terms that place a limitation upon it, is significant. For example, ection 15 (a) provides, "The authority of the Corporation to issue bonds hereunder shall expire at the end of 5 years," which means bonds in connection with the construction of the steam plant. So that the authority to issue bonds in connection with the construction of the steam plant, I submit, expired at the end of 5 years.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. HILL. It was not a limitation of 5 years on the subsequent steam plants. Section 15 (a) was inserted in 1939 for the purchase of private power plants. It gave the TVA 5 years in which to buy these properties-to purchase them. It was not a limitation on the power of the TVA to construct plants.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I merely wish to say, in concluding my remarks, that since the specific steamplant provision was not included in the original general authorization of authority, although many other specific things were included, it is, under a fair rule of interpretation, to be assumed that steam plants were not intended to be encompassed by the general and specific authority granted.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I should like to point out what I believe to be the fallacy in the argument of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut and in the argument of my good friend the dis-tinguished Senator from Missouri.

I should like to have the President pro tempore consider exactly what is being proposed. The distinguished Senator from Missouri and the distinguished Senator from Connecticut are saying that because section 4 of the act creating the TVA does not specifically use the words "steam plant," or name the New John-sonville steam plant, there is no authority contained in the act for the contruction of this plant.

The Senator from Connecticut in his last argument, however, did not say that in section 4, subsection (i), after the words "dams, reservoirs, transmission lines, and powerhouses" are used, the general term "other structures" follows. The question which the President pro tempore must resolve is: Do the words 'other structures" include steam plants?

As has been so ably argued by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] sections 14 and 15 of the same act indicate clearly that it is contemplated that the words "other structures" shall be interpreted to include steam plants and to authorize their construction. If such general authority is not contemplated in the words "other structures" found in section 4, then it would be utterly ridiculous to speak in sections 14 and 15 of the construction of steam plants in the future. Section 14 first relates to the allocation of the cost of existing dams. Then it states:

In like manner, the cost and book value of any dams, steam plants, or other similar improvements hereafter constructed and turned over to said board for the purpose of control and management shall be ascertained and allocated.

Senators will note the use of the word "dams." Dams are specifically named in section 4 and their construction authorized. In section 14 steam plants are named with dams which implies that the construction of steam plants was authorized by the use of the words "other structures" in section 14.

In section 15 a method of financing the construction of steam plants was provided. Which could only mean that it was contemplated by the use of the words "other structures" in section 4 that steam plants could be constructed. If this is not a correct deduction and if it was never contemplated that steam plants could be built, why was it necessary to provide for their financing?

Argument has been made by the Senator from Missouri that the amendment of the TVA Act in 1938 withdrawing the power to finance steam plants by the issuance of bonds, destroyed any authority to construct steam plants. I say that the amendment simply removed a method of financing—a method of financing steam plants by bonds—but did not deprive the Congress of using other means, such as appropriations, to provide for the payment of steam plants, as is now proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

In support of my position I point out that after section 15 was amended Congress appropriated funds to build a dam at Watts Bar.

So I say that by any reasonable theory of construction I believe there is no doubt that the words "other structures" in section 4 which relates to the general powers and authority of the TVA, certainly mean, when construed with other sections, that there is authority to construct steam plants.

One more point and I shall close. Section 31 of the act provides that the act must be liberally construed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri makes points of order against three committee amendments on page 2; the first amendment which he challenges being the increased appropriation in line 7, the second amendment which he challenges being the increased appropriation in line 11, and the third amendment which he challenges being the language in line 13 "one steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn."

So far as the points of order against the first two amendments are concerned, the Chair thinks the situation is very clear. Rule XVI prohibits increased appropriations—

Unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

It seems to me quite clear that these increases are moved by a standing committee of the Senate. The points of order are overruled with respect to the first two amendments to which the Senator from Missouri has addressed himself.

This leaves the much more difficult question involved at line 13, and involved in the identification of "one steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn." The Chair finds himself in great perplexity in this connection, and regrets that the only wisdom he can bring to bear upon the subject is that of an ex-editor instead of a Senator seeking appointment as a judge of the United States Court with the equipment to justify him.

It seems to the Chair that the entire purpose of the legislation which must be construed, and particularly that purpose as described and identified in the committee reports accompanying the original legislation, contemplates an integrated system, and it seems to the Chair that an integrated system includes not only dams and hydroelectric works, but also steam plants, as identified in the specific language in section 14 of the amended act.

It seems to the Chair that the point made by the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Cooper] is thoroughly persuasive, and that the words "other structures" in subsection (i) of section 4 must refer to something other than and in addition to dams, reservoirs, transmission lines, powerhouses, and so forth. It seems to the occupant of the Chair that the phrase "and other structures," in view of the nature of the entire legislation, could well include steam plants, in view of the other factors to which the Chair has referred.

The Chair is very reluctant to overrule the point of order because of the very persuasive argument presented by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] and his associates in connection with it. It seems to the Chair that it is a close point. The Chair would like to make it very plain that after he has ruled he will consider that the action is in no sense prejudicial if the able Senator from Missouri wishes to appeal from the decision of the Chair. In fact, the first impulse of the Chair was to leave the decision to the Senate, as would be possible under the rules, but it seemed to the Chair that he first should indicate his own impression on the subject.

Therefore the point of order is overruled, and if the able Senator wishes to appeal from the decision of the Chair, the Chair will be very glad indeed to submit the appeal to the Senate.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I am content with the ruling of the Chair. The matter, of course, will be finally disposed of by a vote on the proposed amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, certain statements have been made in relation to the available power throughout the United States generally. I want to submit for the Record a "key list for summary of capability, peak load, and margins of reserve in the Federal Power Commission region, 1947 to 1951." There seems to be considerable misinformation respecting the availability of power in America. I present the following figures from the summary of capability, peak load, and margins of reserve.

The United States total for 1947 was as follows: Capability, 45,278. Peak load, 43,225. Margin of reserve, 2,053. Percentage of reserve, 4.7.

The same percentage of reserve, 4.7, exists for 1948.

The figures for 1949 are as follows: capability, 54,482. Peak load, 50,416. Margin of reserve, 4,066. Percentage of reserve, 8.1.

In 1950 the capability will be 59,612. The peak load will be 53,256. The margin of reserve will be 6,356. The percentage of reserve will be 11.9.

In 1951 the capability will be 64,028. The peak load will be 55,798. The margin of reserve will be 8,230. The percentage of reserve will be 14.7.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the key list for summary of power survey, and the summary of capability, peak load, and margins of reserve, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. FERGUSON. These tables indicate that we do not have the shortage of power which has been stated from time to time in this debate.

I invite the attention of the Senate to some facts which were obtained from the TVA office today, showing peak demands. In 1945, on July 31, there was a peak demand of 1,192,000 kilowatts, of which 311,000 were from steam. On December 20, 1946—and these are the highest peak demands in the year—the figure was

2,304,000 kilowatts, of which 332,000 were from steam. On December 30, 1947, the figure was 2,309,000 kilowatts, of which 383,000 were from steam. The reason I call this to the attention of the Senate is that there was a capacity in the steam plants of 450,000. Therefore they were not using all of their capacity.

It has been stated a number of times that the purpose of the steam plant is merely to firm up the power and avoid a shortage. In the record of the hearings is to be found language which I shall read into the Record. As I stated yesterday, these are my personal views and not the views of the committee. I do not speak for the committee, as I indicated yesterday.

I read from page 268:

Those are the sales to the so-called preference customers, being the sales to municipalities and cooperatives, plus the very minor amount of retail sales. In our view as related to the total sales, the striking feature of that chart is the small proportion of the TVA's energy production which went to these preference customers. Obviously TVA's energy production is far in excess of the requirements of those preference customers.

That would indicate that the preference customers were not going to get the big increase shown by the chart which Mr. Clapp placed in the record.

On page 268 will also be found the following:

This would be particularly true, if from TVA sales to Federal agencies, there were omitted the sales of secondary or "dump" energy made as a matter of money saving to, and not one of necessity on the part of, the Federal agencies.

On the question as to whether Oak Ridge is using any of this power, on page 269 we find the following:

Let us point out, this is new—that the great diffusion plant at Oak Ridge is provided with its own steam power plant of 238,000 kilowatts of capacity. While the details have not been made public, it is the general presumption that this vital enterprise is essentially self-sufficient as to electric power, with the TVA supplying stand-by service and supplying dump—

No amount was given.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to quote from page 8115 of yesterday's Record. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Ferguson] made the following statement:

As I understand, the testimony showed that today there is in Memphis, Tenn., a steam plant that is not being operated, but which could be used to firm up any power. They do not need that power at the present time. They anticipate in the future large industrial developments in the Tennessee Valley, and they want to be ready by 1952, with this $54,000,000 plant, to furnish power to those new industries.

In the past few moments I have received a telegram from Mr. Thomas H. Allen, of the Memphis Power & Light Co., which is the light division in Memphis. The telegram is dated today, and is addressed to me. It reads as follows:

Memphis, Tenn., June 15, 1948. Hon. K. D. McKellar,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Commercial Appeal reports that Senator Ferguson states there is a steam plant at Memphis that is not being operated. This plant has been operated continuously at high capacity. Further if money is made available now it would be fast work to complete a large plant by 1952.

THOS. H. ALLEN, Memphis Power & Light Co. Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, does the Senator recall what the testimony was at the hearing? It was to the effect that there was a plant there. It was at the Fisher body plant or one of the other plants. It was not in operation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall the testimony that it was not in operation. It is there.

Mr. FERGUSON. The record will show that.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was bought by

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the hearing shows not only that the plant to which the Senator from Tennessee is referring is in operation, but that 60 percent of the power goes to the Arkansas Power & Light Co., and 40 percent into the TVA system.

The Senator from Michigan said something about the TVA not using its peak capacity. Of course, no power company can contract for the sale of its peak capacity, because no power company knows what the peak capacity will be from year to year. A great deal depends upon how much rain the good Lord sends us, and how long a period of low water there is. One year the peak capacity may be very high. Another year the peak capacity may be very low. During 1 year conditions may be very tight, and it may be necessary to buy power from some other power company. During some other year, there may be power available above the amount which is contracted for sale. We cannot tell. A power company cannot sell right up to its peak capacity, because it does not know exactly what that peak capacity is going to be, and it must operate with some degree of safety.

In that connection, the Senator from Michigan made a statement with reference to the power available at this time. I have before me a news release by the National Security Resources Board. The Senate will recall that last year when the Congress passed the act for the unification of the armed services we established the National Security Resources Board. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] will recall it, because he played a large part in drafting that legislation.

The idea in establishing the National Security Resources Board was that it might make plans and make some kind of a check on industrial preparedness, and prepare a program so that we could have not only military preparedness, but industrial preparedness, which is just as essential, and in a way is basic to military preparedness.

The National Security Resources Board under the chairmanship of Mr. Arthur M. Hill, named a committee composed of Mr. E. Robert de Luccia, chief, bureau of power, Federal Power Commission; V. M. Marquis, American Gas & Electric Service Corp.; J. E. Moore, Ebasco Services, Inc.; and Barclay J. Sickler, of the Bonneville Power Administration, to make a study of our available power at this time. As a result of the investigation and the study by that committee, and after consultation with some 40 other experts on the question of power and the generation of power, who were brought here from throughout the country, the National Security Resources Board made a release on the twentieth of last May, in which it is stated, among other things:

The electric power situation in the United States was described as tight today by Arthur M. Hill, chairman of the National Security Resources Board, in a statement summarizing the results of a staff study.

Mr. President, I looked in the dictionary to see just what the definition of "tight" was. I had an idea what it was, but I was curious to see what the dictionary would say. One definition is "too close for comfort." So, Mr. President, the situation today is too close for comfort.

The release then says:

The seriousness of the situation, he said, lies in the fact that during 1947, electric power capacity was consumed to within a 5-percent average margin over peak loads, compared with more than a 20-percent margin in 1941.

In other words, in 1941, at the time when we were hurled into World War II, we had a 20-percent margin; but in 1947, the year just passed, we had less than a 5-percent margin.

The release continues as follows:

"The National Security Resources Board," Mr. Hill asserted, "will work actively with the other Government agencies and the industries involved to explore every possibility of expediting and enlarging the power program. We shall also keep in touch with developments so that we can recommend such governmental action as may be required in the light of future contingencies."

In that connection, too, Mr. President, I might add, inasmuch as the Senator from Kentucky seems to have yielded me the floor for the time being—for which I am grateful—that Mr. Arthur Hill, as Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, wrote a letter to the President of the United States, with the suggestion that the President might wish to transmit the letter to the Senate Appropriations Committee—which was done under date of May 24. In that letter Mr. Hill stated this:

On May 19, 1948, I submitted to you a report on the national electric power situation. With specific reference to the southeast, it is clear that the margins for reserves are inadequate for the period 1948 through 1951. Accordingly, every effort should be made by the Federal Government to support and expedite the power expansion program designed to relieve this critical power situation. From the standpoint of national security, a larger power cushion should be provided in order to permit prompt handling of future loads that may arise in connection with the rearmament program.

It is our understanding that the Senate Appropriations Committee is now considering the Tennessee Valley Authority's request for an appropriation to start construction of a steam generating plant on Kentucky Lake at New Johnsonville, Tenn. It is the opinion of the National Security Resources Board that the capacity from this proposed new steam plant is needed in the area and will provide, in combination with existing hydroelectric power, a greater margin of safety. While other steam facilities might be con-

While other steam facilities might be constructed outside of the Tennessee Valley Authority's operating area, the New Johnson-ville project would, in our opinion, provide a better solution to the power supply problem from the standpoint of location, fuel supply, coordination with existing hydro and minimum transmission to load centers.

If you agree with our conclusions, which are based entirely on national security considerations, you may wish to transmit this recommendation to the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR M. HILL, Chairman.

Mr. President, I do not desire to take any further time of the Senator from Kentucky, who has been very generous, except I wish to call the attention of Senators to the chart on page 60 of the hearings, which shows how this power is needed, not for large industries, not for new industries, but in large measure for residential consumption and for farmers and farm homes.

Mr. CAIN and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have promised to yield to the Senator from Tennessee, and I now yield to him.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, merely wish to make a brief observation as a matter of interest. I am advised that today the TVA paid into the general fund of the Treasury the sum of $7,536,325. That is out of power proceeds. That makes a total of approximately $10,500,000 paid during this year.

In that connection, as a matter of further interest, I wish to say that if my information is correct, the TVA has earned a net profit, to date, after all depreciation allowances, of approximately $97,000,000. Of that amount, nearly two-thirds has been reinvested in the expansion of the utility system. About $34,000,000 has been paid back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, we were discussing the steam-power plant at Memphis. I should like to refer to the testimony at pages 112 and 113 of the hearings on the Government corporations appropriation bill, where Mr. Allen, who is the manager of the plant in the city of Memphis, was interrogated by the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Ferguson]. I should like to read a little of the testimony. The Senator from Michigan asked Mr. Allen this question:

Where did you get power prior to that

In other words, prior to 1938, I believe, or about that date, when they first purchased TVA power.

Mr. Allen replied:

Prior to that, the city of Memphis was supplied by a plant then owned by the Memphis Power & Light Co.

The testimony continues as follows:

Senator Ferguson. Who owns that plant now?

Mr. ALLEN. The Memphis Generating Co. Senator Ferguson. And who is the Mem-phis Generating Co.?

Mr. ALLEN. That is all that is left in that area of the old Electric Bond & Share Co. property.

Senator Ferguson. And what are they doing with that plant?

Mr. ALLEN. It has been operated 60 percent for the Arkansas Power & Light Co. and 40 percent purchased by the TVA; all that power comes into our system.

Then, after discussing that point a little, the following occurred:

Senator Ferguson. It is still operating at full capacity, is it?

Mr. ALLEN. It has been operating at full

Senator FERGUSON. What would there be to prevent that plant from being enlarged by private industry?

Mr. ALLEN. That is a very old plant, Sena-

Senator FERGUSON. Is that the only thing that you know that would stop it from being

Mr. ALLEN. It is located right in the heart of the city, almost, and enlargement of that plant to any great degree would involve the problem of securing water in large quanti-ties, or to extend its spray pond, which it now uses for cooling the water, in an area where the land is not available for that kind Senator Ferguson. Did that plant, at the time you took this power from it, in 1938, furnish all power to the city of Memphis?

Mr. ALLEN. Not quite; some of it came from across the river, then.

Senator Ferguson. But would you say practically all of it?

Mr. ALLEN. At that time, in July 1939, the peak of the Memphis Gas and Water Division, just after we took it over, on June 27, was 57,000 kilowatts and that plan would turn out 52,000 kilowatts. The rest of it came in by exchange from Arkansas Power & Light Co.

Senator FERGUSON. As you see this plant today, it would die just a natural death, it is going to pass out of the power picture?

Mr. Allen. We have all kept it alive down there because we need the power. Senator McKellar. When was it built, if you remember?

Mr. ALLEN. I don't know when that plant was built. I remember with the curiosity of a kid of 15 or 16, roaming around in there, and that is a long time ago.

I read that testimony to emphasize that it is an old steam plant, practically incapable of being enlarged, and it is a plant of very small capacity for present needs. I read that testimony also to emphasize the fact that the plant has been operating at full capacity, and there has been no failure to use all the power developed at the plant and no lack of need for the operation of the plant at full capacity.

I think that is all I care to say, except that I want to see the amendment adopted.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

PRESIDING OFFICER. The The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield. Mr. FERGUSON. Was there not another steam plant?

Mr. STEWART. My attention was called only to the one that Mr. Allen testified about.

Mr. FERGUSON. There was another one that was owned by some private company.

Mr. STEWART. If it was owned by some private company, that would be one. The testimony of Mr. Allen is an-That had not been called to my attention. I was not on the committee, and I attended only part of the hearings, but I heard that testimony.

Mr. FERGUSON. As I recall the fact, there were two plants.

Mr. STEWART. The hearings would disclose that. I did not know about it.

That is all I care to say, except I am anxious to see the amendment adopted.

Mr. FERGUSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, following the point at which the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] made certain remarks about the use of a plant at Memphis, Tenn., page 106 and 12 lines of page 107 of the hearings, which explain the matter and show that all the power facilities are not being used.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRIVATE INDUSTRIAL PLANTS FURNISHING THEIR OWN POWER

Senator Ferguson. Mr. Bruce, you do furnish your own power?

Mr. BRUCE. That is right, sir.

Senator Ferguson. Do you know why some of these larger industries, like the Reynolds Metals, and the other aluminum companies, should not put in plants and furnish their own power?

Mr. Bruce. I could not answer that. Of course, the reason, Mr. Senator, why we furnish our power, is that we have waste from our manufacture, sawdust and shavings, and we utilize that to make our own power.

Senator Ferguson. But it is not unusual for manufacturers, when they have a plant, to create their own power?

Mr. Bruce. In the past, there have been quite a few of them. The Fisher Body Co. at Memphis, had a big power plant before it moved, and recently the paper plant which moved in there still has that operation.

Senator Ferguson. You do not know whether they even operate that plant now,

Mr. Bruce. I do not know. The Firestone Rubber Co. in our city is the largest manufacturing plant for tires under one roof, in the world. They have a big plant.

Senator FERGUSON. They have a private power plant?

Mr. BRUCE, Yes.

Senator Ferguson. And do you know whether that is being operated?

Mr. Bruce. I do not; no sir. Senator Ferguson. So these two plants, the former Fisher Body plant and the Fire-stone Rubber Co. plant—you do not know whether they operated their own power plants?

Mr. BRUCE. No; I do not.

Senator FERGUSON. Is there anyone here who has that information?

Senator McKellar. Mr. Allen, do you know whether the former Fisher Body plant or the Firestone Rubber Co. plant operate their own power plant?

Mr. THOMAS H. ALLEN (of Memphis, Tenn.). The Firestone Rubber Co. does run its plant to the extent of their capacity, and they use the steam for processing purposes.

Senator Ferguson. But not for power? Mr. Allen. You see, as they need steam in the handling of their rubber, they take it off the intermediate stages of the turbine, and, therefore, any amount of power they take off the turbines, produced by that amount of steam, they get for nothing. The balance of their power they buy from us. They are a very large user of our power. They just furnish enough of their own for the processing.

Senator Ferguson. You are talking about the rubber?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. What about the other

Mr. ALLEN. Do you mean the Kimberly-

Senator Ferguson, Yes.

Mr. Allen. They are under our own power.

Senator Ferguson. And when did they start operations there?

Mr. ALLEN. They just started that plant. That was the Fisher Body before the war; after the war, Kimberly-Clark bought the Senator Ferguson. When was the private power plant in the Fisher plant constructed? Mr. ALLEN. It has been a good many years ago; I do not remember how long ago.

Senator Ferguson, About how many years

Mr. Allen. I would say 15 or 20 years. Senator Ferguson. What we are seeing down in this valley is that the private plants creating power are ceasing to function and the TVA is taking over that business?

Mr. ALLEN. We are taking over a large part

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. The matter the Senator from Michigan has just had inserted in the RECORD applies to power plants owned by private industry, I believe.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement in support of the committee amendment dealing with construction of the steam plant. I do not do so merely because I live within the Tennessee Valley. Under the same circumstances I would support such an amendment if it were in the Connecticut Valley, the Columbia Valley, or any other valley in the United States.

I suppose our proximity to a given problem has influence upon the degree of our support or opposition to it. I do not believe I am prejudiced in favor of the Tennessee Valley as against any other valley, because I should very much like to see ultimately all the water resources in the United States harnessed for the benefit of the American people. I realize that private enterprise or private capital is not going to do that and cannot do it, any more than it could do it in the Tennessee Valley. So I hope nobody in the Senate or anywhere else will feel that I am prejudiced in behalf of this particular amendment because it is in the Tennessee

In the first place, I support the amendment because its adoption and the construction of the plant will not necessitate nor probably result in the transfer of any industry from any other part of the United States into the Tennessee Valley. Up until this time I do not believe there has been a single industry or a single plant moved from its original situs into the Tennessee Valley because of the development of that valley. Enterprises and industries have developed in the valley, some of them, as has already been indicated, for the production of raw materials that feed important industrial plants all over the United States. I have in mind now an industry located in the State of Pennsylvania which would like to establish a subsidiary plant in the Tennessee Valley for the production of raw materials to be sent to its factory in Pennsylvania to supply it with the material from which it produces the finished product. That is not a detriment to the industry where it is located. It is a benefit to it, because it supplies a larger quantity of raw material with which to furnish the country the finished product, which it produces, and gives more employment to more people in the community where it is located. So I would, if I could, calm the fears of any Senator who opposes the amendment because of any thought that it may result in the removal from his State or his own section of some vital industry. It has not done so up until now, and I do not believe it will do so, because there is room for the development of industries in the Tennessee Valley as a part of a chain of industries without in any way affecting those that already exist in other parts of the country. So much for that.

It was the original intention of the TVA, with which I have been associated legislatively ever since World War I, in the construction of the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals, that whenever the facilities and the resources of the Tennessee Valley should be developed it would invite within that valley the creation of industrial activity that would be continuous. Any plant that wants to establish itself in any community naturally desires continuity of power and of resources.

Attention has already been called to the fact that due to floods and low water and various other things in connection with the power the valley can develop, we have a peak and we have a depression or a valley; we have ups and downs. A plant contemplating its development in a live community will not develop itself, it will not establish itself, unless it has a reasonable prospect of year-round power or resources which will feed it. That is an elemental fact, and it has developed now in the Tennessee Valley so far as industries are concerned that there is a need for this plant and a need for what we might call ancillary power in that community, in order that there may not be any recess or hiatus in any given period of a year during which these plants may operate.

Something has been said with reference to the REA. I know that in the Tennessee Valley, within the radius in which power can be distributed, there has been a vast increase in the installation of rural electrical energy. There has been a vast increase in the availability for farm life of the power generated in the Tennessee Valley, whether hydroelectric energy or energy generated by steam in the operation of steam plants already in existence. It might be said, and no doubt will be by those who are adamant against this appropriation, that no additional power should be created for the benefit of the farmers in that region of the country; that so far as those are concerned who are now receiving electric energy on their farms, all well and good, but that we are under no obligation to establish an additional plant or to create additional power in order that more farmers may partake of the benefits of the TVA.

I do not subscribe to that theory, because private power plants will not be established in the Tennessee Valley to any great extent for the reason that the Tennessee Valley Authority, by authorization of the Congress, bought all the private utilities within the radius of the Tennessee Valley's power to generate or to distribute, and therefore there is no longer any inducement for private enterprise to build plants, whether for REA or for industrial purposes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. In line with what the Senator from Tennessee has said, at the time Congress had before it the bill, which was passed in 1939, to provide for the purchase of private companies in the Tennessee Valley, Mr. Wendell Willkie, who, it will be recalled, was the head of the Commonwealth & Southern Co... which was a holding company of the power companies which the Tennessee Valley Authority bought, appeared be-fore the House Committee on Military Affairs and made a statement. To me. in Mr. Willkie's words, there seems to be the gist of the whole picture presented to the committee. Mr. Willkie said:

I know not a man that is a man of any thought, whether he believes in the public operation of power or in the private operation of power, but who does not also believe that it should be noncompetitive. Something has been said here about monopolies. know not the distinction between public and private monopolies, but I do know, as any student of the utility business knows, that it is a natural monopoly and should be such, whether in public or in private hands, and the man who represents the public agency here sits and pleads for it to be a public monopoly, and in that he is right.

The Congress recognized the wisdom and the inevitability, I may say, of what Mr. Willkie had to say, and that is why Congress passed the act of 1939 to buy Mr. Willkie private power companies. said that the supplying of electrical energy should be a monopoly. It owns the source from which residential consumers. farmers, and all users get power.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for his observation. That being true, if there is any additional power created in that region, it must be created by TVA. It will not be done by private enterprise. He would be a foolhardy man who would compete against the TVA by establishing a plant for industrial distribution, for the REA, or to supply power for Government agencies which are essential in defense,

Mr. HILL. There was no compulsion on the plants to sell. The Government did not in any way contest their ownership. The sales were made in free and open negotiations between the TVA, representing the Government, on the one hand, and the private companies on the other hand, the private power companies selling of their own accord.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. It came about not through coercion, but through negotiation. The Government was generous. I do not say it was too much so, but it was generous and fair with the Commonwealth & Southern Co., and has been generous and fair with other private utilities which have been taken over. The TVA has been beneficial to private utilities, within the region, because it has furnished power to them which they, in turn, distribute among the people. They benefit by receiving cheaper power than they could otherwise receive, and the people have been benefited by the transmission of that power through the agency at a lower rate.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. In a moment.

There is no danger to any other community in the United States that industries will be drained away from them and located in the Tennessee Valley. That has not happened up to this time, and it will not happen. It will benefit these very communities by enabling them to produce raw materials which are needed by industries all over the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. It is interesting to note that for every dollar the people of the Tennessee Valley are today expending for power, they are expending $2 for electrical appliances, which are not manufactured in the Tennessee Valley; they come from Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, New York-from all over the United States, from many of the States of the Union.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. other words, every time a farmer in that section has electricity brought into his house he has power available to operate a washing machine or a refrigerator, a corn husker or a corn sheller, or other machinery, manufactured outside the Tennessee Valley and shipped there, thereby giving employment and profit to labor and capital in other sections of the country, of which they would be deprived if it were not for the power generated in the valley.

I now yield to the Senator from Wash-

Mr. MAGNUSON. I was going to say that the experience in the Pacific Northwest might be applicable to this subject. The private power people always opposed such projects as Grand Coulee and Bon-They are now buying power neville. from those plants at a cheaper rate than they ever before paid. They are using their own distribution lines and making more money than they ever made before. In other words, they are tickled to death that Congress has had the foresight to build these great dams, with steam plants made adjuncts to them. There is a great power pool. That is what it will mean in the Tennessee Valley. It does not hurt them one iota. They are doing better than they have ever done. means more rural electrification.

It is strange to me, I will say to the distinguished minority leader, that in the Congress of the United States we always have a fight to get appropriations for power projects. Always the argument is, What are we going to do with the power? The country is always short of power; it never has enough. The more we generate, the more the people use. Appropriations for the generation of power are the only ones we make that pay back and, in some cases, make a profit.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator. I shall now conclude. I did not want to take much time and I wish to stand by my resolution. In the Tennessee Valley or in any other valley where power is generated we do not want the situation to become static. There may be a point beyond which the use of power cannot be absorbed, but we know that if there is any more power to be generated in the Tennessee Valley it will be done by the TVA. We want a generation of power that will be in operation all the year round, so that persons who invest their money in industry will not be caught in a situation in which they have to wait for months before there is a peak of power which will enable them to resume operations. I think that is a fundamental situation.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will

the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. I have not been able to hear all the discussion on the floor. I have read a meager reference to the project in the report, and I find myself with some questions on my mind, one of which the Senator from Kentucky just touched upon. That is the question of the continuity of the power supply under the conditions of a variable water supply.

It is conceivable that one might equalize the supply of power either at a minimum or a maximum. At a minimum one would perhaps install at the dams only the amount of hydroelectric power apparatus as would be appropriate to the minimum summer flow of the river. That, of course, is ridiculous. The maximum provision for maintaining a yearround supply of power would be to install in the dams the amount of hydraulic machinery capable of taking care of the heaviest flood, which would in turn require the provision of a very large stand-by steam plants. amount of Somewhere in between those two extremes is obviously the proper thing to do.

There would be little difficulty for a private power company to decide where it should balance out its power between steam and hydraulic. It would turn over to its engineers the problem of the most profitable point at which the steam and hydraulic power should be balanced. That having been determined, the hydraulic plant would be built of that appropriate size, and a steam plant of appropriate size to balance it would be built.

It is difficult for me to imagine any basis on which a public power operation, particularly this one, which is tied up so tightly with flood control and navigation, would start in making its calculation

The question I wish to ask, after this preamble, is, Is there any figure set by the TVA in asking for its appropriation as to the size of the steam plant which is proposed? I find no reference to it in the very brief paragraph in the committee's report. In the extreme case, is there anything to prevent their going ahead with indefinite expansion plans for the steam plant? That is the first question.

Mr. BARKLEY. A minimum for that purpose, of course, would be fixed by the appropriations the Congress would make. The present appropriation for this particular plant is $4,500,000, I believe. It is estimated it will cost four million. The Senator from Michigan has said that, including transmission lines and all customary installations, it would cost something like $80,000,000 or $84,000,000.

Mr. FLANDERS. I have heard the figure eighty-four or eighty-five million.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is a speculative figure. But it is estimated, I think by the TVA itself, that the construction of the plant will cost approximately $54,000,000. Thereafer, of course, in regard to any other plant-if any other plant should be under contemplation, and I do not know that it is-it will be a matter for Congress to determine whether there should be expansion by the construction of another steam plant. But I do believe this plant is necessary in order to give a guaranty, not this year because it will take 4 or 5 years to construct the plant, but that there might be guaranty of continuous service to those plants which are developing in the valley, and which may be developed in the valley, because I do not think we should fix such a low ceiling upon it that even a plant which is already there might not enlarge its capacity if it saw fit to do so in order to supply goods to other parts of the country, because obviously more goods turned out there are used in other parts of the country than in the Tennessee Valley itself.

It has been difficult to hear the Senator from Vermont because of the interference on the floor. I should like to hear what the Senator asked me.

Mr. FLANDERS. Just going back to the preamble of my first question-and I have another yet in reserve, if I may be allowed to continue to question the

Senator-

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLANDERS. In what I said before asking the question I intended to express my conviction that there is perhaps no definite point which the TVA is setting as the scientific point for balancing out its water power. It may come back for steam-power expansion every year, in which case the system becomes a steam-power system; or it may set the balancing point where it will be primarily a hydroelectric system. Had I been in position to catechise the TVA folk I would have wanted some expression of purpose or calculation on their part as to whether they were definitely moving into the steam-power area of generation, or whether the balancing out was to be done at a lower figure, which kept it primarily as a hydraulic system.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I might respond there, I am not a member of the committee, and I did not have an opportunity to interrogate the TVA authorities. but my knowledge of and familiarity with the TVA convinces me that they are not seeking to develop the steam phases of their power to the point where steam will predominate over hydraulic. They are seeking to strike a general average which will enable them to say to those who are interested in electric power, whether industrial, agricultural, or municipal, that there will be an ample supply during any given year, regardless of the fluctuations of water fall, upon which they may depend. It is necessary that that be so, in order that the hydraulic features of the development shall be successful to the fullest extent.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is absolutely undisputed; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Vermont wanted to ask me another question T believe

Mr. FLANDERS. I have another question to ask, if the Senator will permit me to continue

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield. Mr. FLANDERS. I have taken the position for many years past in private conversations, and on the occasion of my primary campaign for the nomination for the Senate, that I was not against Federal power as such, but that I was against subsidized power. In giving an example for myself or for anyone who questioned me as to what I meant by that, I would refer to the Hoover Dam as an example of Federal power which was not subsidized power. The Hoover Dam power generation pays for itself, pays the interest on its bonds, and is in the process, if I am correctly informed, of amortizing its cost. So that is a public power and water-supply outfit, a little mixture of both, but is a Federal project involving the generation of an immense amount of power, which I feel is in the public interest, and which I thoroughly approve. Now, it is a little difficult for me—and I say this with regret to the senior Senator from Kentucky-to justify the payments of taxes from the very meager aggregate incomes of my green but still stony State for the support of power generation in as fertile and as lovely and as prosperous a section of the country as is represented by the Tennessee Valley. I should like to know, and I do not know how to find out, whether our small aggregate incomes up in Vermont are helping to pay for this power in Tennessee. I heard no particular discussion on that point. There is no evidence, so far as the report is concerned, that the question was brought up as to whether these power plants would pay for themselves, would carry their load of local taxation, would pay appropriate in-terest on the bond issues, and would amortize themselves before the equipment wore out or became obsolete. is one of the things, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, that I should like to know.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the sincerity of the question of the Senator from Vermont and his attitude in respect to the project. I do not regard the appro-priations which are made out of the Treasury for the TVA as subsidizing the TVA, or industry in the TVA, or the cities or the inhabitants of the TVA region, any more than appropriations for flood control in remote sections of the country are subsidies to those particular sections because the money raised to pay the expenses is raised by general taxation all over the United States.

It would be impossible-and I do not know whether it will ever be consummated-that all our river valleys should be developed for the use of the people. I myself believe in that theory. But if it should be possible, and if all the valleys and all the people in all the valleys wanted their valleys developed for purposes such as are included in the TVA Act, it would be utterly impossible to do that simultaneously, any more than it is possible to erect all flood-control projects that are needed in the United States at the same time. We have to begin somewhere.

Insofar as any particular expenditure is being made in one part of the country and not all over the country so that it is spread out everywhere, it could be said that people in another section are helping to pay for that expense. That is an inevitable result because of the impossibility of covering a vast country such as ours with simultaneous development in all parts of it.

On the subject of amortization I think I should say that the TVA is being amortized by the turning into the Treasury of annual amounts. I think I just heard the Senator from Tennessee a while ago say that at this very time over $7,000,000 is being turned into the Treasury by the TVA, so that it is being amortized.

I do not think it is quite accurate or precise to say that because of this de-velopment in the Tennessee Valley, which is a larger development of its type than anywhere else in the country, it is being subsidized at the expense of any other section of the country. When the time comes, if it comes, when the Con-necticut Valley or the Merrimack Valley, or the Delaware Valley, or the Missouri Valley, or any other valley shall be developed at public expense, of course people from all other sections of the country will be contributing to such enterprises. Whether that ever takes place is a matter for future speculation. I myself do not know.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, for the information of the Senator I might say that when certain preliminary negotiations were entered into with the people of my region with regard to a possible Connecticut Valley Authority or Connecticut-Merrimack Valley Authority, the general public sentiment rather put a damper on the enterprise. It looks to me as though the folks of the Connecticut Valley region are going to be perpetually in the condition of subsidizing other projects simply because they think subsidization is wrong or undesirable. That is one of the penalties of having a little conscience on a matter of this sort. You have to pay for your virtue, such as it is.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that, but I will say to the Senator that I recall that 2 years ago, when there was a disastrous flood in the Connecticut River, we voted for some flood protection on that river, not simply as a theoretical proposition, but in order to protect the people who live in that valley—not only their homes, but their industries. When I voted for such assistance I did not think I was subsidizing the people of the Connecticut Valley. The people whom I represent in Kentucky did not think I was voting to subsidize the people of that valley, although it was an expenditure out of the Public Treasury for the benefit of some very great industries in that valley. I have in mind one in particular which was greatly benefited by the expenditure, or the proposal to expend money for its protection.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to ask the Senator whether that expenditure was before or after the Supreme Court decided that the Federal Government controlled the water clear up into the springhouse in the pasture above my house?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator's interpretation of the Supreme Court decision is a little exaggerated, but that expenditure was before the Supreme Court decision in regard to the Tidelands case, if that is what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. FLANDERS. I thank the Senator. Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President the Senator from Michigan yield? Mr. President, will

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. It is now nearly 6:20 o'clock. We have only started on the first amendment to the bill. We have not even gotten the first committee amendment adopted or rejected, whichever way the vote on it may go. We have another amendment or two which are very controversial. The bill is quite a long one. I wonder if we cannot facilitate matters. Of course, we do not in any way want to cut off anyone who desires to speak on the first committee amendment. We have not only the pending bill under consideration, but the naval appropriations bill is ready for action, and the bill providing the appropriations for the Economic Cooperation Administration has been reported. I understand there are two veto messages which will have to be acted upon. We certainly would like to get through with those matters and begin consideration of the farm bill quickly. I suggest to Senators that if we have a night session. opportunity will be afforded for full debate, but I beg of Senators to expedite action, and either accept or reject the amendments which are pending as quickly as possible.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to state that we are approaching the time when we can no longer delay action upon the farm program bill if we are to continue a farm program of any kind whatsoever. When that bill passes the Senate it will have to go to conference with the House. So at least 2 days would be required before it could be brought back to the respective Houses by the conferences. It to me unthinkable that Congress should go home without continuing a farm program. It is true the House has passed a stopgap bill which has a good many deficiencies in it, but there is no opportunity to hold hearings upon that bill, and I believe hearings should be held upon it if it is to be considered. The shortest cut is to take up our own bill, pass it, and go to conference with it. But if we delay much longer we cannot even do that.

So as far as I am concerned, the farm program bill is the pending business. It has been temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the Government corporations appropriation bill. I understand that the naval appropriations bill will probably not take more than a few minutes-considerably less than an hour. If we complete action on the Government corporations appropriation bill within a reasonable time I should be willing to have the naval appropriations bill taken up. I should like to make the initial presentation on the farm bill tonight so that action on it may be concluded tomorrow. I feel safe in saying that unless action on a farm program bill is concluded tomorrow there will be no continuation of a farm program after January 1, but we shall revert to the old 52 percent support level for a few basic commodities. Therefore I would object to taking up any further legislation after the naval appropriations bill is disposed

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, may I address an inquiry to the Senator from

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield for that purpose?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield. Mr. RUSSELL. I hope I did not correctly understand the Senator from Vermont to say that unless this bill were enacted we would have no farm legislation at this session. Did the Senator make such a statement?

Mr. AIKEN. I made the statement that it was my belief that there would be no continuation of a farm program, other than reversion to the 1938 level of support. I know that the Senator from Georgia wonders why.

I do not want to criticize the House bill: but we would almost have to have hearings on it, or at least meetings of our committee before we could adopt the proper amendments to that bill. For example, there is no provision in it for continuing support for any commodity of more than 90 percent, regardless of how badly it might be needed. It is written in such a way that it eliminates support for a full year for Maryland tobacco, while it gives support to other types of tobacco. It continues a 90 percent guarantee support price for eggs, which means that we would probably have to spend $100,000,000 to purchase eggs which we do not need next year.

It continues 90 percent parity support for dairy products, which means absolutely nothing whatsoever unless the parity formula is revived.

Furthermore, the Commodity Credit Corporation goes out of existence on July 1. There has been no indication as yet when the House is going to act upon the Commodity Credit Corporation bill. There is every indication that if it does act on the bill which has been reported, it will be almost impossible for the conferees of the House and Senate to get together, because the bills have such drastically varying provisions.

Therefore it seems to me now that the only way we can insure the future existence of the Commodity Credit Corporation, that agency of Government which makes purchases not only for the European recovery program, but for the occupied areas and for the armed services, besides supporting farm prices, is to enact a bill continuing it in existence. It may go out of existence on July 1 unless we can continue it for a year in the farm bill which is now before the Senate.

We have all those things to consider, and have very little time to consider them.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield? Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I realize that we are greatly pressed for time, but I deplore the attitude of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, who has always been such a stout fighter in this body for farmers. Surely if nothing else could be accomplished, a joint resolution could be enacted continuing any present laws which might be on the books, which would prevent an absolute collapse of the farm program.

I am not familiar with all the details of the House bill. Personally I was disposed to support a proposal which would continue the existing laws for a period of 12 months, to enable us to study more in detail a measure of such tremendous importance as that which the Senator from Vermont has reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I trust that if the worse comes to the worst the Senator will not close the door to a joint resolution continuing any existing laws for a period of 12 or 18 months.

Mr. AIKEN. I assure the Senator from Georgia that the Senator from Vermont is not taking a defeatist at-titude. I was simply making the statement that we did not intend to take defeat by letting one legislative measure after another come up, setting the farm program aside, so long as the farm bill is the pending business.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objec-

Mr. AIKEN. We must continue a good program. As I say, the stopgap legislation passed by the House cannot be accepted as is, under any circumstances, because I have just pointed out some of the things in it which would not work. Therefore I do not believe that we should be too long in considering the long-range farm program. I do not know how many Members wish to speak. I know that there are some amendments to be offered. Some will be quickly accepted by the committee, so that they should not take

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. I, too, am tremendously interested, as the Senator well knows, in the continuation of a farm program at this session of Congress. I understand-and this may be incorrect; perhaps the Senator has better information—that the Committee on Agriculture of the House will not take this long-range farm program upon which the Senator from Vermont and other Senators have been working. I am wondering whether or not he has any information in that connection.

Mr. AIKEN. I have no information. We shall not, of course, know how closely we can get together with the House until we get into conference. I do know that while we may not get all we want on the part of the Senate in the form of a bill, there is a good chance of getting a better bill than the one which has already passed the House.

Mr. LUCAS. It is my understanding, upon very reliable authority, that two of the members of the Committee on Agriculture of the House have made the suggestion that, in view of the shortness of time and in view of the importance of this particular farm bill, the committee probably would have no opportunity really to study the bill, if it were passed, and to enable them intelligently to reach a decision between now and Saturday night. I thought perhaps the Senator had heard something in that connection.

Mr. AIKEN. I know that some Members of the House are in favor of a longrange bill at this time. We have worked on this bill for almost 9 months. I realize that, while the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has spent this time on the bill, there are Members of the Senate who have not had the time to spend on it. I do not know whether they would ever have the time they ought to have to spend on it.

I am satisfied that the farm people generally are supporting this long-range farm bill. I know that the Department of Agriculture has withdrawn any objections it may previously have had. I know that last night in Los Angeles President Truman stated, according to the press, that he was fully in accord with it and hoped it might be passed at this

In view of all that support, I do not know why we should throw away the money spent in acquiring information and the months spent in preparation of the bill. I do not believe that the Senate will be so minded; and I do not believe that the House will, when it comes to the matter of accepting a good program.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. To me this is a guestion of tremendous importance, in view of what the Senator says, and in view of what I understand to be the attitude of some members of the House Agriculture Committee. If we are to have a farm program at this session, it seems to me that members of the House Agriculture Committee and Members of the Senate will have to get together pretty fast. As the Senator well said a moment ago, there are certainly some objectionable features in the continuation of the present support program for another year, and certain amendments should be added if we are to be compelled to adopt that means. We cannot do that in a moment, either, I will say to the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Georgia. That is something that will have to be worked upon. If there is no possibility of getting through the House the sort of program provided by the Senate bill, something should be done between now and Saturday so that some kind of a program can be provided.

Mr. AIKEN. I think, if we can pass this bill through the Senate tomorrow, a workable program can be arrived at.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOWLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. THYE. I should like to add to and concur in what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] has said concerning the farm program. I also should like to reply to the question raised by the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas]. The members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry met at various times with Members of the House Committee on Agriculture on the different phases of the farm program-not only on the support price phase but also on other phases. I believe there is a meeting of the minds on many of those questions, insofar as the two Committees on Agriculture are concerned; and I am very hopeful, in fact, quite confident, that we can accomplish and obtain concurrence by the House committee on the farm program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask that the first three amendments be considered en bloc, because they are so tied together, it seems to me, that a vote on one of them will determine the vote on all of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the three amendments will be considered en bloc.

The question is on agreeing to the first three committee amendments, which are being considered and will be voted upon en bloc.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays. But first I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken Baldwin Ball Millikin Green Gurney Hatch Moore Morse Barkley Brewster Bricker Hawkes Murray Hayden Hickenlooper O'Conor O'Daniel Bridges Brooks Hill O'Mahoney Hoey Holland Pepper Revercomb Buck Robertson, Va. Robertson, Wyo. Butler Ives Jenner Byrd Cain Capehart Russell Saltonstall Sparkman Stennis Stewart Johnson, Colo. Johnston, S. C. Capper Chavez Connally Kem Knowland Langer Lodge Lucas McCarthy Cooper Cordon Taft Taylor Thomas, Okla. Donnell Downey Dworshak Eastland McClellan McFarland Thye Tydings McGrath Umstead Ecton McKellar McMahon Vandenberg Watkins Ellender Magnuson Malone Wherry Williams Ferguson Flanders Fulbright Martin Maybank Young

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eightythree Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the first three committee amendments, which, by unanimous consent, are considered and are to be voted on en bloc. On this question the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I do not intend to delay the Senate for more than a few moments. I do not intend to argue the philosophy of public power versus private power.

In my capacity as ranking minority member of the Committee on Atomic Energy, I have listened to certain testimony which indicated that there was a strong possibility that the facilities at Oak Ridge would find it necessary to ask the Tennessee Valley Authority for more power. Because of that information, on June 7, I addressed a letter to the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. It is a short letter, and I shall read it to the Senate at this time:

DEAR MR. LILIENTHAL: The reactivation of certain facilities at Oak Ridge will, I am informed, necessitate a considerable increase in power requirements. I am further informed that the power now used, and the power to be required, at Oak Ridge is considered to be classified information.

This would seem to be nonsense on two grounds: First, because it wouldn't take much of a detective in the Tennessee Valley to figure out how much electricity is going to Oak Ridge; and, second, even if he did figure it out, what good would it do? If I am right in my conclusion as to the nonsecrecy of this information, will you please advise me how much power you are using now and how much you intend to use. I am planning to write to the Tennessee Valley Authority to ask them if they can supply the necessary power with their present requirements.

Under date of June 10, I received an answer to my inquiry. The answer is signed by Sumner T. Pike, Acting Chairman of the Commission:

JUNE 10, 1948. DEAR SENATOR McMahon: We have your letter of June 7 regarding power requirements for Oak Ridge. While we have not publicized the figures on the quantity of power furnished Oak Ridge by the Tennessee Valley Authority, we agree with you that such information does not involve classified information. The present contract between the commission and TVA establishes an electrical power demand of 225,000 kilowatts. The present power load averages about 211,-000 kilowatts. There are, however, certain particulars regarding our power requirements that do involve classified information, because these particulars, together with certain other facts, could possibly provide an index to the rate of production of fission-able materials at Oak Ridge. This informa-tion would include figures on the power generated by the Commission itself at Oak Ridge, details on type and quantity of power required by any individual facility within Oak Ridge, and records of total power consumption over an extended period of operation. If you wish, we shall be glad to send a representative of the commission to discuss these matters with you.

At present there is no definite program for reactivating any of the facilities at Oak Ridge which are in standby status. However, there is always the possibility that future developments—or an emergency might necessitate the startup of these facilities. The minimum additional power required for reactivating such facilities is estimated to be in excess of 50,-000 kilowatts and the maximum might be several times this figure. None of this additional power requirement could be met from the commission's own installed power generating capacity at Oak Ridge.

I particularly call the attention of the Senate to this phrase:

Sincerely yours,
UNITED STATES ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION, SUMNER T. PIKE,
Acting Chairman.

On receipt of that letter informing me of the possible future requirements of the Atomic Energy Commission, I got in touch with the Tennessee Valley Authority. Under date of June 15, they wrote me as follows:

DEAR SENATOR McMahon: Your office has advised us that the Atomic Energy Commission has informed you that its future operations may require 50,000 kilowatts of power in addition to the amounts which the TVA has now contracted to supply to the Commission's operations at Oak Ridge. You have asked whether the TVA will be able to meet this requirement from its present authorized system.

This additional amount of power has not been included in any of our estimates for future loads served by the TVA, and TVA would not be able to meet this additional requirement unless we are able to add generating capacity over and above the facilities already authorized and in process of installation on the system.

Mr. President, it is because I have been convinced by the testimony I have heard. and because it is the estimate of the Commission that in the event of an emergency, which we all know might develop tomorrow, next week, next month, or a year from now, it would become necessary to reactivate the now closed-down facilities at Oak Ridge, and additional power might be required in order to meet the requirements of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, that I feel there is nothing else for me to do except to vote for the $4,000,000 steam plant. Purely as a matter of defense, without any regard whatever to the basic argument as to whether or not we should further expand TVA for power purposes, it would certainly seem to be self-evident, in view of the situation which I have described, that the defense requirements of the United States demand that we start the construction of this facility. It will be impossible for the Oak Ridge installation to open up certain other facilities that are now being considered for reopening, and to service them, unless we provide for additional power.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will my distinguished colleague from Connecticut yield?

Mr. McMAHON. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Do I correctly understand that this letter does not say that the Tennessee Valley Authority must have the steam plant; it simply says it must have additional facilities?

Mr. McMAHON. The net effect of it. I may say to my colleague, is that there may well be additional requirements, which, I am told are 50,000 kilowatts. The TVA say they cannot furnish that amount of power with their present facilities.

Mr. BALDWIN. But they do not say they need a steam plant in order to furnish that additional amount of power, do they?

Mr. McMAHON. No, they do not. Mr. BALDWIN. They merely say they need additional facilities. The point I wanted to make was that there were hydroelectric potentials still possible of development there which probably would take care of additional requirements.

Mr. FERGUSON. If I may answer-Mr. McMAHON. Just a moment please. I will yield to the Senator from Michigan in a moment. I want to reply to my colleague. That may well be true. I do not pretend to be a hydroelectric I have made no study of the engineer. water table or the possibilities of further power to be derived from water plants. I am faced with a condition, not a theory. They say they are short of power and they suggest that this is the way the need should be met. I care not whether the power comes from steam or whether it comes from water, or whether they get a jet-propelled engine, but I know the additional power is needed, and this amendment is reported by the committee in order to provide it. I do not see how the Senate could take the responsibility of depriving the atomic-energy plant at Oak Ridge of 50,000 kilowatts that it may well need within 6 months.

I yield to the Senator from Michigan. Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I merely desire to say in reply to what has been said by the junior Senator from Connecticut, that the word received here from the TVA office today indicates there are now under way developments which will produce 700,000 kilowatts of hydro power. So there will be plenty of hydro power to meet requirements. Another thing I should like to call to the attention of the Senator is that the letter is dated the 7th of June. The bill had not then been reported from the committee. It was reported last Saturday. The subcommittee voted on it on June 8. As chairman of the subcommittee I have had no knowledge of this information from the TVA or from anyone else. Now, just at the moment of voting on the proposal, there is produced on the Senate floor this information. It seems queer to the chairman of the subcommittee that the information could not have been furnished either to the subcommittee or the full committee.

Mr. BALDWIN and Mr. McMAHON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Connecticut has yielded the floor. The Chair recognizes the junior Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I yield to my senior colleague.

Mr. McMAHON. I thank the Senator. I am informed the House Appropriations Committee took testimony in respect to the Oak Ridge requirements. I have not read that testimony myself but I am informed there was testimony before the House Appropriations Subcommittee.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I merely want to say, I thank the junior Senator from Michigan for the information he has given us. I know that my distinguished colleague is much concerned about atomic energy and its development and the power requirements for it, as am I. But it would seem to me from what the Senator from Michigan has said that there is in prospect adequate development in the reasonably foreseeable future to take care of additional requirements, which gives me reassurance in the matter.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, as a member of the committee I have not participated in the debate, and I shall not delay consideration of the bill at this time, but I think it is very unfair to attempt to place a national-preparedness or national-defense label on the amendment which is currently before the Senate. Everyone knows that TVA has a procedure involving preference customers. I ask my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. McMahon] if there would be any justification for denying Oak Ridge increased power for operation for national defense and to give all the power which is currently being subsidized to some of the large industrial users. Every Senator knows that under the operation of the TVA system there are preference customers. TVA could not deny to Oak Ridge, which is engaged in a federally operated defense project, or to any other plant which is essential to the national security, all the power which might be required for their operations.

Mr. President, as I said, I did not intend to participate in this debate, but I deeply deplore any effort made at this hour of the debate to embarrass or seek to embarras any Member of this body who does not find it possible to go along and support this steam-plant project.

I have in my hand a letter, dated Spokane, Wash., May 28, 1948, written by the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Spokane. I should like to read it, because I think it will disprove some of the contentions made here that there is any shortage of power in TVA, or that there is an inadequate supply of power with which to operate any expanded operations of the Oak Ridge plant.

This letter was written to a Member of the House, and I shall read it so that the Senators may have the information. It reads as follows:

Here is a situation that has just developed which I believe you will find of some interest.

During the war the Government built a ferrosilicon plant—four furnaces—at Rock Island on the Columbia River, near Wenat-chee, Wash. The War Assets Administra-tion is now advertising that plant for sale, with the privileges of complete removal from this territory.

We are exceedingly anxious to retain that plant in the Northwest because we feel it balances out our economy, and is really an essential plant—not only for peacetime operations, but especially in case of an emergency such as national defense. The plant will require 25,000 kilowatts of power.

As you already know, we in the Northwest are starving for power, in spite of the fact that we have wonderful dams like Grand Coulee and Bonneville, and in spite of the fact that Grand Coulee Dam is now producing in round numbers, 200,000 kilowatts more power than it did at the wartime peak.

The Bonneville Administration maintains that it is unable to allocate any power to the Rock Island plant, and I am willing to accept their statement as a fact in view of general power shortage.

example: We need 2,000 kilowatts more for the Pend Oreille Mining & Metals Co., which has leased part of the mag-nesium plant in Spokane. We need 13,000 kilowatts more for the Chromium Mining & Smelting Co., which has leased the other part of the magnesium plant. We need 35,000 kilowatts additional firm power for our aluminum reduction plant operated by the Kaiser Co. These are all right here in Spokane. The Bonneville Administration is unable to supply any of these.

Consequently, I am willing to accept the Bonneville Power Administration's statement that they will be unable to allocate any power for the Rock Island ferrosilicon plant until 3 or 4 years from now.

However, we are informed by reliable sources that the prospective purchaser of the Rock Island ferrosilicon plant is assured of an immediate allocation of adequate power by the Tennessee Valley Authority, and consequently is considering moving the plant to that area.

Now, I come to the real point of this letter. If the Tennessee Valley Authority has such a surplus of power, and can promise such heavy loads as 25,000 kilowatts for immediate delivery to the Rock Island ferrosilicon plant, then how comes it-that the Tennessee Valley Authority comes to Congress pleading that they are so short of power that they want an appropriation to build a steam plant.

That is the real point I want to make, Congressman JENSEN. It doesn't add up to me. and I am just passing it on to you for whatever value it may have.

Sincerely yours,

J. A. FORD, Managing Secretary.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I cannot understand how such overtures or promises are being currently made by TVA to any plants in the Northwest or in any other section of the country.

I reiterate at this time that it would be approaching treason for the TVA to deny an adequate supply of power generated in that area to Oak Ridge, if the Oak Ridge operations required such power for the national defense. I think it is entirely improper to interject such an approach or such an argument into this debate. I did not intend to say a word, but I feel it is incumbent upon me, as a member of the subcommittee, to attempt to refute some of the arguments which are being made here, obviously designed to change the minds of members of this body, because every Senator, all other loyal patriotic Americans, will insist that priorities be given to Oak Ridge and to every other national security operation of the Federal Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, happen to be familiar with the situation referred to in the letter which was read by the Senator from Idaho, coming from the Chamber of Commerce at Spokane. Wash. It is not true that the TVA has guaranteed to that concern, or that it had any interest in, purchasing the plant at Rock Island. On the contrary, the TVA has advised them that they cannot furnish power to them from the supply of power which is now available.

I hope the Senator will believe that I am in good faith, because I have been interested, as a Senator, in knowing whether the very situation to which the Senator has referred, through the letter, has been accurately stated. I find that it is now the plan of the concern, which is a Pittsburgh outfit, by the way, a very large and reputable concern which was interested in the purchase of surplus property in Rock Island, Wash., to abandon that theory entirely, because power cannot be obtained. It has started on a new enterprise, if power becomes available, to build a plant that will supply the Pittsburgh plant with the raw material which it needs.

I do not think the statement of the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce in Spokane should be accepted as evidence against the known fact that the TVA not only has not guaranteed any such power, but has advised the concern that it cannot furnish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOWLAND in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the three committee amendments en bloc.

Mr. McMahon. Mr. President, it is with some hesitation that I rise to reply to the Senator from Idaho. I thought the floor of the Senate was a place in which Senators give their brother Senators information which they believe to be pertinent to the question under discussion. If I were to accept the criterion of conduct suggested by the junior Senator from Idaho I would conceal information vital to the matter under discussion. This, of course, I could not do.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the letter which I received is dated June 15, today. I am not a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations. I take it that the Senator from Idaho, in considering the appropriation, must have had in mind that the Oak Ridge installation was where it is. I think I might properly ask him why it did not occur to him that he might inquire of the interested authorities as to whether they had any information which bore on the problem in hand.

Mr. President, I resent the statements of the junior Senator from Idaho and his criticism that I have delayed bringing information to the attention of the Senate. I bring it in good faith. I do not even vouch for it personally. I told the Senate who had given it to me. I say, for myself, that it influenced my vote. The Senator from Idaho can vote as he pleases.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, there certainly was no intention on my part of casting any reflections upon the Senator from Connecticut. I simply wanted to stress the point which apparently had been submerged throughout the debate, and that is that under the operation of TVA there are preference customers, public buyers, and REA. I ask my colleagues if the Oak Ridge plant does not qualify as a preference customer. If it does so qualify, it is difficult for me to conceive of any situation wherein the Oak Ridge plant would be denied any power which it currently needs, or any increased amount which might legitimately and justifiably be denied to other users who have been operating defense plants.

Mr. President, that is the point I am making because I am assuming that those in charge of the TVA operation are loyal patriotic Americans and never could there be any question in my mind that the Oak Ridge plant could be denied all the power required for the operation of that plant in the interest of national security.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I wish to speak for just a moment. I would not have taken the floor at all but I should like to express the hope that the judgment and foresight of the junior Senator from Idaho can be better relied upon in this instance than in the past. I have had a Columbia Valley Authority bill kicking around committees of the Senate for some years and nothing has been done about it. If action had been taken on that measure there would be no shortage of power in the Pacific Northwest at this moment. I am forced to agree with the junior Senator from Idaho that there is a serious power shortage there and that we are suffering the loss of plants and potential industrial developments which otherwise would come to our section of the country.

Furthermore, if the Columbia Valley development bill had been acted upon, there would not have been the disastrous floods which have wrought such havoc in our section of the Nation in the past few weeks. Indeed, the loss there has been so great that it would have gone a long way toward paying the initial cost at least of a Columbia Valley Authority project.

Therefore I hope that in opposing the provision for this steam plant to even up the power load in the Tennessee Valley the junior Senator from Idaho will be proven more correct if he votes against it than he has been in his opposition to the Columbia Valley Authority project, which opposition has been largely responsible for the inaction, the terrible loss from flood, and the serious power shortage which now confronts the Northwest.

I should hope, in view of that experience, that he would be for this appropriation, and also that he would join with me in sponsoring the Columbia Valley Authority bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first three committee amendments, which are being considered en bloc.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. A vote in the affirmative will be for the amendments, and a vote in the negative will be against them, will it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A vote "yea" is a vote for the committee amendments, and a vote "nay" is a vote against the committee amendments.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. George]. If he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. On this vote the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] is paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. White]. I am advised that if present and voting the senior Senator from Nevada would vote "yea," and the senior Senator from Maine would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bush-

FIELD] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. White] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran]. If present and voting, the Senator from Maine would vote "nay," and the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] are detained on official business.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Tobey] is necessarily absent due to being called to the hospital on account of an accident to a member of his family.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Wiley] is detained on official committee business.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Kilgore] is necessarily absent on important public business.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Mc-CARRAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Myers] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a national delegate by the President to the annual conference of the International Labor Organization meeting in San Francisco, Calif.

I announce further that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], who would vote "nay" if present, is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas], who would vote "yea" if present.

If present and voting the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 37, as follows:

So the first three committee amendments were agreed to en bloc.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendments were agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to announce to the Senate that when action shall have been had on the pending bill, it is proposed to take up for consideration the naval appropriation bill. After that a statement will be made by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] respecting the farm bill, at the conclusion of which we would like to take up for consideration the bill making appropriations for the European recovery program. If we all cooperate I believe we can tonight complete the program I have just outlined. Thus we will be able to send the appropriation bills to conference quickly.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield. Mr. RUSSELL. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that the Senate would proceed with the farm bill before acting on the ERP bill?

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] desires to make a presentation of the farm bill, so it will be in the RECORD for Senators to read in the morning. I think the Senator from Vermont will be reasonable in respect to the amount of time he will take to make his presentation.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bridges] has informed me that he is ready to take up the bill making appropriations for ERP at the conclusion of the presentation by the Senator from Vermont.

It may be necessary to run a little late tonight, but I hope Senators will bear with us and cooperate with us, because it is very necessary that we get the appropriation bills passed and in the hands of the conferees quickly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II-Independent agencies and corporations," on page 8, line 13, after the word "That", to strike out "immediately upon the enactment of this act" and insert "prior to July 31, 1948", and in line 17, after the figures "$10,000,000," to insert "if not otherwise required to be turned into the Treasury under the provisions of the proposed Federal charter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 19, to strike out:

Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Incorporated: Of the funds available to the Corporation, not to exceed $500 shall be available for administrative expenses re-lated to liquidation and dissolution, and not to exceed $500 for the cost of audit, as required by the Government Corporation Control Act of December 6, 1945 (Public Law 248): Provided, That all administrative duties and responsibilities shall be assumed by such officers and employees of the Treas-Department as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and who shall re-ceive no additional compensation for such duties: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall take appropriate steps to secure the final dissolution and liquidation of said Corporation at the earliest practicable date: Provided further, That the total cost of liquidation and dissolution shall be paid out of funds available to the Corporation without additional appropriations therefor: Provded further, That the Board of Directors of the Corporation is authorized to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury title to assets (other than real property) of the Corporation upon certification of the president of the Corporation that such transfer is to the interest of the Government of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to dis-pose of such assets at such times and in such manner as he may determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 14, after the word "with", to strike out "its" and insert "generally recognized."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Housing and Home Finance Agency," on page 15, line 20, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$2,250,-000" and insert "$2,500,000"; on page 16, line 21, after the word "cancel", to strike out "the capital stock" and insert "bonds"; in line 22, after the word "in", to strike out "par value" and insert "an"; and in line 24, after the word "transferred", to insert "plus accrued dividends thereon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 25, after the amendment just above stated, to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That not to exceed $5,000 of the funds of said Corporation shall be available until June 30, 1952, for the payment of such expenses as the Chairman of the Home Loan Bank Board or his designee or designees may find necessary for winding up the affairs and effecting the dissolution of the United States Housing Corporation and the United States Housing Corporation of Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 22, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$9,000,000" and insert "$10,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 8, after the words "to the", to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury for cancellation" and insert "Reconstruction Finance Corporation"; and in line 14, after the word "transferred", to strike out "within 30 days after the date of enactment hereof" and insert "as of June 30, 1948."

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 2, to insert:

Not to exceed $3,000 of the funds available to the Housing and Home Finance Agency for expenses of travel shall be available, when specifically authorized by the Administra-tor or head of the constituent agency concerned, for expenses of attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the function or activity for which the appropriation or authorization is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Department of Agriculture," on page 23, line 6, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$373,600" and insert "$223,600."

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I should like to make inquiry of the junior Senator from Michigan as to why the Senate committee could not concur in the sum stipulated in line 6, on page 23. I note that the appropriation was cut by $150,000.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the committee denied a request to increase the administrative-expense limitation in the budget estimate of $1,755,300, but has decreased the amount which may be paid to the Farm Credit Administration for supervisory or other services from $373,600 to $223,600, a reduction of $150,-The attempt is to have the agencies in the field given a greater proportion of the money. The $150,000 is taken from the organization in Washington. That will reduce the amount of the Washington appropriation, but give more in proportion to the field. I should like to take this question to conference and have it adjusted at that time.

Mr. THYE. I should like to say to the junior Senator from Michigan that this reduction, so far as it pertains to the home or central office, would have quite a crippling effect upon that office. I beg of the Senator to give due consideration to the question and make a complete study, so as not to cripple the function of the bank.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Minnesota can rest assured that the subject will be given attention in the conference.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I fear that this cut is too severe. If it goes into effect, it will cripple the work of the Department.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, as I stated, it is a question which in my opinion should be taken to conference. have changed the figure from $373,600 to $223,600, so the difference can be adjusted in conference. I shall certainly keep in mind what the Senator says. I have talked with a number of persons and I hope the difficulty can be adjusted.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have had prepared a statement on the subject. To save time, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks, so that it will be available for the information of the conferees.

Mr. FERGUSON. I appreciate the information.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Page 23, line 6, delete $223,600 and substitute $373,600, the amount approved by the House.

This would make $293,600 available for administrative expenses for supervisory or other services rendered by the Farm Credit Administration both in Washington and the districts, and $80,000 would be available for liquidation of obligations incurred in the fiscal year 1948.

Under the committee print only $143,600 would be available for payment to the Farm Credit Administration for supervisory or other services rendered in Washington and in the field. This would not be sufficient to enable the Farm Credit Administration to carry out its responsibilities during the next fiscal year. It is estimated that the examination of the 12 Federal intermediate credit banks in 1949 will cost $48,000 and that the cost to Federal intermediate credit banks of the services of the registrars will be in excess of $85,000. While these two costs are charged to the central office because these services are required to be performed by public officials, they are activities that are carried on in the field. The examination costs average only about $4,000 per Federal intermediate credit bank, and it should be kept in mind that the 12 banks will average lending approximately $100,000,000 each in 1949. The cost of services of the registrars will average slightly in excess of $7,000 per bank, which is a conservative figure in view of the service performed and the responsibilities. The registrars are public officials employed by the Farm Credit Administration of Washington, D. C. They perform a very important and necessary function for the Federal intermediate credit banks. They are custodians for all the collateral which is used in support of the debentures sold to the public. They must at all times have sufficient collateral in their possession to fully secure all outstanding debentures of ederal intermediate credit banks. It is gratifying to note that in the years of operation of the Federal intermediate credit banks there has been no misappropriation of collateral held by the registrars in any of the districts. The buyers of debentures have bought with the knowledge that proper procedures are being followed to protect the collateral behind these debentures.

Under the committee print, after paying the cost of registrars in the 12 districts and the cost of examination of the 12 Federal intermediate credit banks, which total in excess of $133,000, there would remain only $10,200 available for payment to the Farm Credit Administration for the remaining supervisory and other services ren-dered. These supervisory functions and supervisory functions and services include an Intermediate Credit Bank Commissioner, a position established by law and his office which it is estimated will cost $46,500 in 1949, include the service performed by the Finance and Accounts Division in connection with the handling of securities, supervision of the registrars, assembling and tabulating reports, develop-ment of budgets and certain supervisory accounting work which is necessary in connection with the operations of institutions of this type, also the Federal intermediate credit banks' portion of the cost of the Office of the Governor of Farm Credit Administration, cost of maintaining files and other services performed by the service divisions of the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan, in line with the question raised by the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Minnesota, that I have received a good many communications from production credit corporations in my State. They are very much disturbed about the budget cuts in the bill affecting their work.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter which I have received from one of the production credit corporations in my State, setting forth its point of view on the questions which the Senator from Michigan says he is going to take to conference, in the sincere hope that in conference he will be able to meet some of the objections raised in this letter.

Mr. FERGUSON. I appreciate that information from the Senator from

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILLAMETTE PRODUCTION CREDIT ASSOCIATION, Salem, Oreg., May 24, 1948. Hon. WAYNE MORSE,

United States Senator, Senate Building, Washington, D. C. DEAR SENATOR MORSE: I have before me a copy of H. R. 6481, a bill making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949.

I have studied this bill very carefully. Because of my affiliation with and knowledge of the Production Credit System, I cannot help but feel that the House committee under Mr. PLOESER on appropriations has failed to study the situation and has reached con-clusions that are not founded on factual

As you know, the production credit system, including the central office in Washington and the 12 production credit corporations, have been doing an exceptionally fine job in serving agriculture and operating most economically. The system requested and the Budget Bureau approved a budget for the 12 corporations and the central office amounting to $1,602,600. The subcommittee on appropriations cut this amount to $1,-350,000, a total cut of $252,600. Also, the committee recommended that prior to June 30, 1949, the corporations shall return Government capital aggregating not less than $60,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury. The Governor of the Farm Credit Administration was authorized and directed to cancel such stock.

This appears to me a most dangerous piece of legislation especially in view of the that all of us are concerned not only about the present inflationary period in which our business is being conducted, but more especially are concerned about what may be in store for us in the future.

For your information, the system originally had $120,000,000 of Government capital. As the production credit associations became established and developed earnings of their own, they started returning capital to the United States Treasury's revolving fund. To date approximately $39,000,000 has been

From the progress of my own association and neighboring associations, together with my knowledge of the system, another large amount will be returned at the end of 1948, perhaps from another $12,000,000 to $15,000,-000. After 15 years of operation this would appear that the System is making real progress in retiring the Government capital.

We in Production Credit have always been told that the funds to be retired from the System would be placed into the revolving fund to be used for capital purposes in case of any real emergency which may arise either on a national or district-wide basis. return of these funds to the revolving fund will not affect our present program of continuing to retire the Government's capital which I can say from many contracts with other production credit association secretaries, all of us are striving to achieve as soon as possible.

As for my own association and other associations in the district, we are all in favor of farmer ownership and are vigorously proceeding in that direction. It seems a shame that the House would pass H. R. 6481 without amendment and without study and debate in view of the record.

I have before me a Congressional Record and I quote from page 5522, May 10, 1948, an excerpt from the statement of Mr. PLOESER:

"The production credit corporations requested $1,602,000; we gave them $1,350,000.

"I could go on at great length on this subject, but I do not care to take that much time of the Committee, but their operation is almost purely paternalistic. The day has arrived when they are not making any extensive investments in production credit associations, but more in the social field than in the actual lending field or the extension of capital.

"We found that they had about $65,000,000 invested in Government bonds in which they were obviously speculating. They were speculating to their heart's content in the Government bond market throughout the year and they were having a good time at it. We see no excuse whatsoever for any agency of the Government using surplus funds just to satisfy their own vanity as investment speculators, and we have written into this bill a provision taking $60,000,000 of their funds and putting it in the Treasury in the fiscal year 1949."

This in itself would indicate that Mr. PLOESER is receiving his advice presumably from the American Bankers Association, our competitors. Certainly he hasn't taken the time to review the record or he would not be careless enough to state that the corpora-tions have been speculating throughout the A survey of the activities of the 12 production credit corporations would indicate that the only bond investments made during the year were for production credit associations sending in surplus earnings to be invested in bonds for the purpose of aug-menting their capital structure. I can imagine the only other sale was when the system returned approximately $8,000,000 in cash to the revolving fund of the United States Treasury. To return this cash it was necessary to sell bonds. It would be ridicu-lous for the corporations, the Government, or any other business institution to sell bonds on the open market and not accept the premium that was being paid.

I am not aware of any activities of the corporations in the social field. My guess is that Mr. Ploeser is thinking of the Farmers' Home Administration. My acquaintance and confidence in you prompts me to be helpful in bringing you down to date on these facts so that when the Senate acts on the budget of the production credit corporations, you will have some knowledge of what has transpired and what is needed.

There never has been a time in the history of the system when the supervision rendered to the production credit associations by the production credit corporations has been of such great importance. More and more farmers are turning to production credit as can be seen by the enclosed statistics. With business more than doubling in the past 2 years, it hardly seems provident to curtail the system of checks and balances which has enabled us to build our cooperatives on a sound framework over the past 14 years. have experienced a recession in the fruit industry-the fur farmers are having a desperate time. The net returned to growers from many of the agricultural commodities that we finance has been narrowed because of rising costs; therefore, we need the wise counsel and judgment of the experienced people in the corporation to assist us in maintaining a proper balance in the extension of credit to farmers in our area. We are adhering to conservative policies. In doing so we are doing our best to contribute our share to heading off further inflation. Also we have the sincere desire to see that the farmers and stockmen using the facilities of our association keep themselves in liquid condition. Great harm could be done to the average farmer through over-extension of credit. We work with him, counsel with him, and have on our board of directors experienced and qualified farmers who approve the loans and manage the affairs of our organization. The same is true of the five-hundred-odd other associations in the United States.

May I plead with you and urge that you give us your support in maintaining an economical set-up that is not asking Congress for an appropriation but asking Congress for an approved budget?

The production credit corporations receive their earnings from the income on bond investments and dividends paid by production credit associations. All surplus earnings by these corporations belong to the United States Government and are not being wasted. If you care to confer with members of the subcommittee, you may be helpful. The Subcommittee on Appropriations for Government corporations is chaired by Mr. Ferguson.

Anything you can do in aiding us in the restoration of this drastic cut will be appreciated by the thousands of member stockholders of production credit associations in Oregon.

Please accept my best regards. Very truly yours,

PHILIP M. BRANDT, Jr., Secretary-Treasurer.

P. S.—I understand hearings on this bill are to come up this week. P. M. B.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 23, line 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 12, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,350,000" and insert "$1,500,000"; and on page 24, line 3, after the word "than", to strike out "$60,000,000" and insert "$20,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 24, line 10, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$46,800" and insert "$146,800"; in line 24, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$12,500" and insert "$21,000"; and on page 25, line 11, after the figures "$25,000,000", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That, notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, in addition to the foregoing the Corporation is authorized to utilize, from the revolving fund created by section 84 of the Farm Credit

Act of 1933 (12 U. S. C. 1148a), such sums as may be necessary (a) to make loans, during a period of 5 years, to bona fide fur farmers in accordance with the provisions of section 201 (e) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended (12 U. S. C. 1148), the aggregate principal amount of which loans shall not exceed $4,000,000 outstanding at any one time, and (b) not to exceed $50,000 for administrative expenses of the Corporation and the Farm Credit Administration in connection with such loans.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Department of Commerce," on page 26, line 19, after the word "area", to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the Corporation is authorized to pay not to exceed $3,918.48 for services actually rendered by 18 of its former employees during the fiscal year 1947 and for which there is no present authority to pay.

The amendment was agreed to.
The next amendment was, at the top of page 27, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR VIRGIN ISLANDS COMPANY

There is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000 to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be made available by him, as a loan, to The Virgin Islands Company, upon request of the President of the Company to continue its present operation until June 30, 1949. The loan shall bear interest at a rate to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the making of the loan to the Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Department of Justice," on page 28; line 8, after the word "interest", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That funds of the Corporation shall be available, in amounts not to exceed $338,000 during the fiscal year 1948 and $380,000 during the fiscal year 1949, for expenses of vocational training of prisoners as authorized by the act of May 11, 1948 (Public Law 521), such expenses to be computed and determined on the same basis and with the same exclusions (except vocational training expenses) as provided herein with respect to administrative expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title III—General provisions," on page 31, after line 2, to strike out:

SEC. 305. After the date of enactment hereof the salaries of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration and the Housing and Home Finance Administrator shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 7, to change the section number from "306" to "305"; in line 16, after the word "violence", to strike out the comma and "or who is a member of any labor organization the officers of which have not complied with the requirements of subsection (h) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended by the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947";

on page 32, line 7, after the word "violence," to strike out the comma and "or that such person is not a member of any labor organization the officers of which have not complied with the requirements of subsection (h) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended by the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947"; and in line 18, after the word "violence", to strike out the comma and "or who is a member of any labor organization the officers of which have not complied with the requirements of subsection (h) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended by the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 5, to change the section number from "307" to "306."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments. Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, there are no further committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 3, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "$4,-840,000" and insert "$6,200,000"; and on page 3 it is proposed to strike out the proviso beginning in line 20 and ending in line 1, on page 4, reading as follows: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay any public-housing agency any contribution occasioned by payments in lieu of taxes in excess of the amount specified in the original contract between such agency and the Public Housing Administration or its predecessor agencies."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I apologize to the Appropriations Committee for my failure to present this amendment directly to the committee. As we all know, Senators are extremely busy, and I have had no opportunity to get the facts and figures together and present them formally before the committee, but I do so now before the Senate.

Let me say to the Senate that this amendment seeks to effect a change which will give a more equitable distribution on the question of payment of taxes by the public-housing authorities over the country. All told, there are 273 of such projects in operation throughout the United States.

This amendment is designed to restore equitable treatment to the municipalities which are now subject to what I contend, under the language of the bill, is a gross discrimination as the result of this proviso. By the way, the proviso was inserted in the bill for the first time last year. Previous to that time there was no such proviso.

The proviso is directed toward the relationship between the Federal Government and the local housing agencies which own and operate low-rent housing projects throughout the United States.

There are now some 273 of these projects in operation throughout the United States. The issue involved in this proviso is the amount of local taxes which these projects shall pay to the cities and counties in which they are located.

When the projects were first set up, beginning in 1938, it was recognized that the successful operation of low-rent housing projects depended upon the amount of taxes which the project would have to bear. Under the arrangement between the State governments and the Federal Government local housing authorities are exempt by law from the payment of local taxes. The payment which they make to the cities and counties is in a sense a payment of an amount "in lieu of taxes." This is an amount specified in the contract between the housing authority and the local government. The amount to be paid must be approved by the Federal Public Housing Authority.

In the beginning stages of the program no one was sure exactly what amount should be paid in lieu of taxes. As a consequence, the original contracts contained different provisions with respect to taxes.

That is the point I wish to make and bear down on in connection with this amendment.

In Illinois, for example, the local housing authorities' contracts in Granite City, Quincy, Champaign County, Madison County, Rock Island County, and Alexander County call for a payment in lieu of taxes of 2 percent of the amount of shelter rent paid by the tenants; that is to say, 2 percent of the rent minus any payments on account of utility services. In Decatur, Ill., the original contract specified a payment of 234 percent. In the city of Rock Island, St. Clair County, and Winnebago County, the original contracts called for a payment of 3 percent of the net shelter rent. In the cities of Chicago and Peoria, the original contracts called for a 5-percent payment. In the city of Danville, the contract called for a flat payment of only $100 a year; and in Henry County, the contract called for a payment of $165 a year.

The variation in the amounts to be paid was brought about because of the uncertainty as to the amount which could be paid. The important point was to keep those low-rent housing projects operating on the least expensive basis, so that the rents could remain low and serve the beneficial purposes of the acts of Congress, which were designed to give the lowest-income groups in the population adequate housing.

As time went on, it became clear that these public-housing authorities were not paying adequately for the services which were being supplied to them by the local government, such as education, fire and police protection, sanitation, and so Although the United States Housing Act of 1937 requires that the local governments must contribute toward the operation of the low-rent projects at least 20 percent of the amount contributed by the Federal Government, it was very clear that in most cases the cost of the services rendered was several times the amount of local contribution. Moreover, the system for payments in lieu of taxes was inequitable as between cities. The cities which had participated first in the program had agreed to accept very small amounts in lieu of taxes. as contrasted with the cities which came in later. As a result of this situation, the Federal Public Housing Authority conducted an extensive study of the whole question of payments in lieu of Conferences were held with many public bodies, including the National Association of Housing Officials, the Municipal Finance Officers Association, the National Association of Assessing Officers, and the United States Conference of Mayors. As a result of those conferences, it was agreed that the local housing authorities could pay more than the amounts provided for in the original contract. So at this point practically every housing authority is now paying 10 percent of the net shelter rent.

By this move, each city or county in which a local housing authority existed was receiving the same proportion of the rent as a payment in lieu of taxes. The proviso in this bill and in last year's bill requires that no payment in lieu of taxes can be made in excess of the amount specified in the original contract. This pushes everything back to the situation which prevailed at the beginning of the program, and perpetuates the inequities contained in the original contracts under which some cities paid nothing and other cities paid various amounts ranging from 2 percent to 5 percent.

Of the 273 projects now in operation, in the case of 153 of them there is no provision at all in the original contracts for payments in lieu of taxes. Others provide specific dollar-and-cents amounts. Most of them provide for 3 percent.

Thus, in addition to reducing drastically the amounts which the cities and counties are to receive in lieu of taxes, the proviso perpetuates the inequities as between the various cities and counties. The cities have been relying year by year upon the payment of the 10-percent contribution to support the local government. But, Mr. President, under this provision of the bill, which was written in last year, they cannot obtain that 10 percent from the Housing Authority, because the contract is different. Yet that is what the Congress last year said should be done.

Congress has known for 3 years about this arrangement whereby increased amounts were paid to the local governments, and Congress did not see fit to change it until last year. What is proposed now is to continue the provisions of last year's bill.

If the proviso is continued, the amount which will be saved by the Government in making annual contributions is in the neighborhood of $1,300,000. For the sake of saving that amount of money, the Appropriations Committee is apparently prepared to continue the inequitable system of payments among the various local housing authorities and to deprive the local governments of the revenue which they desperately need. It is a matter of common knowledge that almost every city and county in the country is seeking new sources of revenue in order to meet the mounting costs of local government for education, fire and police protection, and so forth. It is another instance of an economy-minded Congress throwing discretion overboard for the sake of saving a pitifully small amount. That is not very much money nowadays, in terms of Federal Government expenditures, but it is a tremendous amount of money for the municipalities that are taxed to the limit at the present time for health and sanitation services and police and fire protection, and the other essential services and utilities that are necessary for the proper running of a city. As everyone knows, practically every city in the United States is bonded up to the limit, and it is difficult for the cities to do the things that should be done. For instance, the city of Chicago alone, because of the tremendous housing projects there, would benefit to the amount of $250,000 under the provisions of this amendment

These low-rent housing projects constitute one of the worth-while contributions of the Federal Government to the health and welfare of the low-income groups of our people. Their continued operation is essential. We must not make any move in this Congress which would impair their efficient operation. I urge the Senate to strike this proviso from the bill.

In order to provide funds with which to raise the payment to local governments up to the 10-percent rate which prevailed for 3 years prior to last year, the appropriation to the Public Housing Administration is increased by my amendment from $4,840,000 to $6,200,000.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I think this matter can be explained better by reading from the House committee hearings, rather than in any other way, because in those hearings the matter is boiled down and the facts are presented. I read now from page 791 of the House committee hearings:

PROVISIONS OF ORIGINAL CONTRACTS

In determining its policy in respect to local contributions and payments in lieu of taxes, the PHA has taken into consideration not only that local contributions must be received in an amount equal to the required 20 percent, but also that the local contributions together with the Federal contributions must be sufficient to achieve rents within the means of low-income families.

Even in the earliest days of the program, when the first low-rent housing projects were being planned, it was apparent that local contributions larger than the 20-percent minimum would have to be obtained if low rents were to be achieved. It was, therefore, the original policy of the PHA to encourage localities to grant complete tax exemption for their low-rent housing projects. It was only when a locality insisted upon receiving some payments in lieu of taxes that the PHA authorized the making of contracts providing for such payments.

As a result of this original policy of case-by-case negotiations with the localities, the original contracts present a wide diversity of provisions as to payments in lieu of taxes. More than half of the original contracts contain no provision whatsoever for such payments, and only 7 percent of the contracts provided for payments equal to as much as 5 percent of shelter rent. The following table summarizes the provisions of the original contracts for the low-rent projects established under the original act (Public Law 412, 75th Cong.) and for the projects developed under the defense amendment (Public Law 671, 76th Cong.) after their conversion to low-rent use.

FIRST UNIFORM POLICY

various localities throughout the The country speedily came to feel that there had been unfair discrimination between them; those cities which had insisted upon payments in lieu of taxes had received them, whereas those which had not insisted had received none. In order to bring about a uniformity of administration and to treat all localities on the same basis, the PHA in 1942 promulgated a uniform policy in regard to payments in lieu of taxes. Local authorities were authorized to make payments in lieu of taxes which, together with the amounts stipulated in the original con-tracts, would amount to 5 percent of the shelter rents charged in the project for the year. This authorization was, of course, subject to the statutory condition that local contributions were to be not less than 20 percent of Federal contribution.

Mr. President, here is what happened. The cities were very anxious to get the low-rent housing. They were perfectly willing not to have any payment in lieu of taxes, because they wanted to make a contribution to low-rent housing. The PHA was perfectly willing to do that. It was out to get public housing in every city in the United States. In order to get it, the PHA came to Congress and indicated to Congress, "We can build these houses; the local communities will contribute the amount of taxes."

Then the PHA found some cities that would not do that. For instance, there was a town in Texas that said, "We want, as taxes, the amount we are now collecting on this vacant land." Such a provision was put in their contract.

Then, after the Congress provided those houses, the PHA broke faith with the Congress, without giving any notice and without doing anything other than making special deals with each one of the cities, raising to 10 percent of the shelter rate the amount to be paid in lieu of taxes.

So, Mr. President, if we do not include this provision, the result will be to cost the Federal Government a subsidy of $1,360,000.

My city of Detroit has sent representatives here to Washington to see me. They want this 10-percent payment in lieu of taxes. But I have said to them, as I say to the representatives of all the other cities, that so far as I am concerned, they made their contract; they wanted the housing; they agreed that they would put up the amount in lieu of taxes, as their share; so now they should not get a further subsidy, but they should stand by their contract, the same as all the other cities do.

I think the time has come when the cities of the country as well as the Federal Government must help furnish the poor people of the Nation with housing. That is the only way we are going to have careful operation of the housing projects, because the people will realize they are sharing the burden. This is a burden upon all the people, not only of the cities, but of the United States, and not only of the United States but of the respective cities.

I hope the measure will be left just as it is. As I recall, there was in the committee no discussion about this phase of it, I know the committee was unanimous on it. The cities agreed to this, and they should now carry out the agreement, after they have the housing projects, without changing it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Young in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas].

Mr. LODGE. Let the amendment be stated for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 3, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the figures "$4,840,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,200,000"; and on page 3, to strike the proviso beginning on line 20 and ending on line 1, page 4, which reads as follows: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay any public housing agency any contribution occasioned by payments in lieu of taxes in excess of the amount specified in the original contract between such agency and the Public Housing Administration or its predecessor agen-

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bridges], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Buck], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Capehart], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Malone], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCarthy], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Wilson] are absent on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bridges] would vote "nay."

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bushfield] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. White] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Wiley] is detained on official committee business.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senators from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez and Mr. Hatch], the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally], the Senator from California [Mr. Downey], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGrath], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran], the Senator from Texas [Mr. O'Daniel], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydnigs], and the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Myers] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a national delegate by the President to the annual conference of the International Labor Organization, meeting in San Francisco, Calif.

I announce further that, if present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. Downey], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGrath], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Myers], the Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas], and the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 33, as follows:

So Mr. Lucas' amendment was agreed to.

to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Ives in the chair). The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$3,000,000."

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the amendment I have submitted would provide for $1,000,000 additional capital-stock subscription to the Inland Waterways Corporation, which operates the Federal Barge Lines and the Warrior River Terminal Company. This appropriation of $1,000,000 would complete the capital subscription of this Corporation under the existing authorization.

The Federal Barge Lines was organized in its present form in 1924 and since that time has hauled an average of 2,000,000 tons of freight per year. At the time of its organization there were no other common carriers of freight on the Mississippi River proper, and, largely because of the pioneering work which it did, there were, by 1944, over a hundred common, contract, and private carriers operating on the Mississippi River system. In addition to the pioneer work which the lines did, I am of the opinion that the service offered to a large number of small shippers was a basis of considerable support for the improvement of our streams and rivers, thus making profitable private barge-line operations

Perhaps the best example of the need for a service such as is offered by Federal Barge Lines can be found in the Tennessee River, where millions of dollars have been spent in developing a 9foot channel to Knoxville, a distance of more than 600 miles from the mouth of the river. Although large tonnage is being carried on the Tennessee today, there is not a single ton carried in less than barge-load lots, which means that the small shipper or the shipper who has need of common-carrier service is receiving no benefit whatsoever from that improvement. For instance, a small lot of sugar destined from New Orleans to Knoxville cannot be shipped by water, since there is no common-carrier service beyond Cairo, Ill. As a consequence, the wholesale grocer in Knoxville is not receiving the benefits from the Tennessee River that otherwise should accrue to him.

Quite obviously the reason for this situation is that the operation of package freight service by barge lines is comparatively unprofitable. A bargeload of sugar, for instance, being hauled from New Orleans to St. Louis, can be hauled much cheaper than the hauling of odd lots to numerous points along the river between New Orleans and St. Louis, where stops must be made to unload and distribute. Despite this lack of profit in such form of transportation, the Federal Barge Lines, during most of its existence, has operated at a profit, and, in the 24 years since its formation, the Federal Government has put only $12,000,000 into the enterprise. This amount, I may say, was utilized to buy the equipment which is now being used in order to carry freight on the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The Federal Barge Lines is now burdened with obsolete and dilapidated equipment, which has made its operation unprofitable in recent years. Until it is rehabilitated, its operation will, no doubt, continue to be at a loss. Under the very capable management of Capt. A. C. Ingersoll, the present president of the Corporation, the Lines is engaged in developing new equipment designed materially to decrease the line-haul cost. Within the last few weeks an integrated towboat has been launched, which is designed to reduce operating cost approximately 50 percent. For instance, using the new unit, a tow consisting of one boat and nine barges, hauling 12,000 tons, or, roughly, two and one-half trainloads, would be able to proceed upstream at a rate of 7 miles per hour, compared with the present speed of 3 to 31/2 miles per hour. Captain Ingersoll is confident that outfitting the Lines with several of these units would wipe out present operating deficits, in addition to attracting more business because of the better service which could be offered because of the new equipment.

The Budget requested $3,000,000 in this appropriation for fiscal year 1949, which would be used to construct a second integrated towboat and 29,300 tons of integrated barge capacity and also allow for improving and increasing the capacity of the East St. Louis Terminal. The towboat would cost an estimated $600,000; the barge capacity, an estimated $2,197,500; and the terminal work, approximately $200,000.

If we are to obtain full dividends from the appropriations we have been making for river and harbor development, then we must see to it that the Federal Barge Lines not only continues in existence but is placed in a position of rendering service. Development of the Missouri River, the Arkansas River, the Red River, and numerous other streams, for transportation purposes, will not be fully effective if there is no agency existent to pioneer the transportation service on them. In the beginning of such service, operations are necessarily unprofitable. No private carrier is willing to lose the money over a period perhaps of several years which extension of common carrier service entails. On the other hand, an established line like the Federal Barge Lines, because it is able to balance the loss on shipments of less than bargeload lots against profits on bulk shipments in bargeload lots, is able, when properly equipped, to do this business at little or no loss.

I wish to point out to my colleagues throughout the Mississippi Valley that their entire freight rate structure, rail, barge, and truck, is based upon the rates offered by the Federal Barge Lines. Grain, regardless of its mode of transportation, is shipped cheaper from Omaha to New Orleans, because of the existence of the Federal Barge Lines. Industrial products from Pittsburgh and Chicago likewise carry a cheap rate because of the work which this Government corporation is doing. Minneapolis-St. Paul has developed into a principal river port largely because of the pioneering work of the Federal Barge Lines on the Mississippi River after its canalization. This is a service from which the small-business man and the farmer all reap a reward. It is a small amount which this amendment provides, but it is a vital amount to thousands of shippers throughout the great midcontinent area.

Let me repeat that the amount provided by my amendment is to be used solely to purchase new barges and a new towboat. As I indicated a moment ago, the entire amount which has been so far spent by the Federal Government for this service has been expended to purchase towboats and barges. Most of this equipment is more than 20 years old, and the money proposed to be added will be more or less an investment on the part of the Federal Government to continue this service for the people of the valley.

I ask that the amendment be adopted. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter under date of May 25, 1948, addressed to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Ferguson], by Lewis I. Bourgeois be printed at this point in the Record as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE PORT OF NEW ORLEANS, New Orleans, La., May 25, 1948. Hon. Homer Ferguson,

United States Senator, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am advised that on Thursday of this week, the Subcommittee on Government Corporations of the Senate Appropriations Committee, will hold a hearing relative to the Federal Barge Lines, with particular reference to appropriating $3,000,000 to make up the deficiency in its original capital stock. These lines are operated by the Inland Waterways Corporation, which was incorporated at $15,000,000, but only received $12,000,000.

A house bill recently introduced sought to make up the deficiency of $3,000,000, but we learn this was cut to $2,000,000, which was most unfortunate.

We in New Orleans urge most earnestly your committee to authorize the full $3,-000,000.

Just last week the Young Men's Business Club of New Orleans, a civic organization of business and professional men, a membership of 3,500, took cognizance of various bills now before the Congress, some aimed to sell the Federal Barge Lines to private ownership, and one particularly, in the Senate, which aimed to continue the lines and rehabilitate them. I am now the chairman of this club's committee, and am authorized to submit to you our views.

We are all gravely apprehensive that, pending final decision on any legislation, the Federal Barge Lines will find themselves with insufficient funds to operate properly, to furnish regular service, to maintain its equipment, and at the same time do some urgent rehabilitating, with the final result that the lines will disintegrate for lack of funds. We are fearful that the lines will find their equipment in such shape that they may be forced to curtail acceptance of all kinds of freight from all types of shippers, small and large. If this takes place, business interests of the midcontinent and of this port will suffer, as many businesses and industries did locate in that area because of the schedules, rates, and rate territory.

It is well to point out that when the corporation was authorized by the Congress, there were guarantees written in the act. The people of the midcontinent area have every right to ask for their fulfillment. The act provides for certain plans for sale to private ownership, and they embody these guarantees. Therefore the people, when establishing or expanding industry in the midcontinent, could expect either continued Government or private ownership, since in either case the act, if followed, gives assurance of continuation of service.

The executive of the Federal Barge Lines, and his staff, have devised a new type of towboat which should revolutionize inland waterway barge operation. This towboat was demonstrated to the public at New Orleans this week, and its performance won public The press carried most encouraging news stories of the demonstration. Its use will be attractive to the shipping public because it will cut down the long transit time now in effect by river barge lines, between It will enable the small shipper who, heretofore, could not afford to anticipate his needs for merchandise and thus was deprived of the opportunity to save money on transportation costs to use the lines. Faster deliveries will help him. But this one tow certainly will not be sufficient. The other equipment, almost worn out during the war, need a lot of repair. These lines therefore must have sufficient funds to carry on; and certainly to carry on until the Congress decides as to continuing Government operation, or sell to private interests. We fear it may take the Congress too long to decide.

We respectfully urge your committee, if it is to pass only upon the $3,000,000 appropriation to vote this total amount favorably. This is most important so that the lines can maintain proper service to the midcontinent area, and certainly this service should be continued without interruption.

It will be our committee's purpose to submit our views to every Member of the Senate and the House relative to the disposition of the Federal Barge Lines, but we will do this in separate communications.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS I. BOURGEOIS, Chairman.

FERGUSON. Mr. President. when this question came before the subcommittee and the committee amount was placed at $2,000,000 instead of $3,000,000. The House allowed $2,000,-000, and Mr. Ingersoll when he testified before the Senate committee, stated that he thought the House committee went on the assumption that their revenues would be as estimated in their budget. In other words, they came before the budget and stated that they were able to get a certain amount of revenues, and when they came before the committees they indicated that they could not obtain those revenues.

The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana would add $1,000,000 to the amount of the bill. The amendment would be used for the erection of a barge. They have already built a barge, and they want to build another just like it before they even experiment with the one they have. This is what the House says about the matter:

After a few months of experimental operation with this equipment to ascertain its practicability for river transportation, the management hopes to add additional barge equipment to its facilities and procure additional "integrated tow" boats. If such equipment proves successful, it is possible that the feasibility of providing common-carrier barge service on inland waterways can be demonstrated in such manner that private capital can be attracted to this operation, thus enabling the Government to get out of the barge business.

In other words, it is the intention of the Government to liquidate this business. They have built one barge. The Government corporation wants to build another barge for $1,000,000 before it has even experimented with the one which has been built.

I read further from the House report:

In view of the fact that legislation to authorize the sale of the barge line is pending, the committee is reluctant to recommend appropriation of the entire request in the budget of $3,000,000. The amount of $2,000,000 is recommended for 1949. This sum should enable the Corporation to obtain enough new capital equipment to demonstrate efficient operation and to attract private capital to this enterprise, and also to provide working capital adequate under careful management to maintain the Corporation as a going concern.

Mr. President, in a few words that is the substance of what the amendment would do. It would take another $1,000,-000 of the taxpayers' money to build an experimental tug or towboat for the river; and they have not demonstrated that they have one now which will work. I hope the Senate will sustain the action of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Ellender].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I think that concludes the amendments. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 24, lines 4 and 5, it is proposed to strike out "to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury" and insert "the revolving fund authorized in title 12, United States Code, section 1311."

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, first I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question. In House bill 6481, on my desk, page 24, line 3, I find the figure "$60,000,000." Has the figure been reduced to $20,000,000?

Mr. FERGUSON. It has been reduced from $60,000,000 to $20,000,000.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President the pending measure provides in the section "Production credit corporations"—

That prior to June 30, 1949, the corporations—

Speaking of production credit corporations—shall return Government capital aggregating not less than $20,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury, and the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration is authorized and directed to cancel the capital stock of the corporations in par value amount equal thereto.

My amendment does not involve any increased appropriation of money. It simply provides that the $20,000,000 which is to be paid by the production credit corporation and credit associations shall go to the revolving fund which is their reservoir of capital for loans rather than back to the Treasury of the United States. I shall briefly state my reasons for offering the amendment.

As Senators know, there has been created in the past a revolving fund of approximately $120,000,000, from which funds could be made available to local production credit associations for loans to farmers for purposes for which loans were not usually available from banks at that time-for seed loans, machinery loans, fertilizer and similar loans. My amendment would keep intact the revolving fund of $120,000,000 so that if great need arises in the future, funds will be available for the purpose. The Production Credit Corporation has made a fine record in my State, Kentucky, and in the Nation. The need for its services is still present, and I do not see any reason for reducing the revolving fund, which makes this type of credit available. This may lead to the eventual destruction of the fund.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I realize that we have been a long time on this particular bill, but I urge the Senate not to adopt this amendment for this reason: This Corporation was financed by the Treasury, or the money of the taxpayers of the United States. It has now accumulated in the Corporation treasury a surplus of $60,000,000. The Government wants that money repaid to its Treasury through the cancellation of stock. The stockholders of the Corporation are the farmers. I agree that it has been a good thing for the farmers. But they have this fund accumulated. They are not paying 1 cent of interest to the United States Government. Now they do not want to return the $20,000,000. The House said $60,000,000, but the Senate committee said $20,000,000. They do not want to pay it back into the Treasury because they feel that if they keep it in the revolving fund, if they need it in the future they can go and get it. They have now a $60,000,000 surplus. There is no reason why the taxpayers should not have this money paid back into the Treasury, so that they will not have to pay interest on it. This Corporation is paying no interest at the present time.

I therefore hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I understand that no objection is made by the Production Credit Corporation, or by their local agencies, to paying this money into the revolving fund. The committee provision is that it shall be paid back into the Treasury, which could mean that the revolving fund, established for the benefit of the farmers and for this type of loan, would be eventually destroyed. My amendment will assure the maintenance of the revolving fund, and its continued availability for the use of farmers in the future.

I am not in any way in controversy with the Senator from Michigan upon the point that the money should be paid back. I am in controversy, however, upon the point that it should be paid back into the Treasury rather than to the revolving fund. I believe that the farmers of the Nation desire that the revolving fund should be kept intact.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the Corporation now has a surplus of $60,000,-000. According to the terms of the bill, we allow it to retain $40,000,000. All we are asking it to do is to pay back $20,000,000, so that the Federal Government will not be compelled to pay interest on it. This Corporation pays no interest; and if we adopt this amendment it means that nothing will come back to the United States Treasury or the United States Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER]. [Putting the question.]

Mr. COOPER. I ask for a division. On a division the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, in line 13, it is proposed to strike out "$19,000,000" and insert "$20,650,000."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, this amendment relates to the amount of money provided for the Federal Housing Administration for administrative expenses. When the $19,000,000 figure was fixed it was anticipated that the program would be only under title II. We know that title VI of the National Housing Act was scheduled to go out of effect on March 31 of this year. So when the budget was sent up, only $19,000,000 was asked for, in order to handle the title II loans.

But following that time, Congress extended the life of the operations under title VI, and authorized $750,000,000 of additional loans to be insured. Later, Congress extended it again, and authorized an additional $400,000,000. That makes a total of $1,150,000,000 which the Congress authorized the FHA to handle, without giving it any increase whatsoever in the funds available for paying the expenses of handling those loans.

This amendment would increase the amount by $1,650,000. As a matter of fact, it will not be money the Treasury will pay out, because every loan that is made pays a fee to pay the expenses of closing the loan. If we go along with the $19,000,000, that simply will mean one of two things: Either it will slow up the work of clearing the title VI loans, which we authorized, and for which commitments are already made, or we shall get shoddy inspections, and thereby will get loans that will be poor risks, and eventually a loss will fall upon the Treasury.

As I stated a moment ago, all the money is paid in by the borrowers, so in the long run this amendment will not cost the Government anything. By giving the agency this $1,650,000 additional, we can have efficient operation and can have reasonably prompt closure of loans and can have good inspections which will result in giving us better risks.

I think it will be a good investment, and I hope the Congress will authorize the use of the additional amount of money by the Federal Housing Administration.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, title VI has not been passed as yet. The reason for the difference between the $19,-000,000 figure and the $20,650,000 figure is that the authorization for title VI of the housing bill had not been passed, and the Senate committee believed it should accept the judgment of the House, because the work has not been authorized.

As the House committee said in its

The budget estimate of $19,000,000 relates primarily to work under title II. The amount has been approved, and the expenses relating to title VI of the program will be considered after enactment of a new title VI authorization.

So, Mr. President, when title VI is passed, it will carry an authorization, and then in the Appropriations Committee a deficiency appropriation can be handled.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, is it not a fact, and was it not brought out before the Senator's committee, that there are now outstanding commitments, under title VI, in the amount of approximately $1,000,000,000? I am sure the Senator remembers that back in December, we authorized $750,000,000 in loans, and that authority was to run until March 31. I am sure the Senator also remembers that in March we again extended title VI, and authorized $400,-000,000 additional. The greater amount of those two authorizations is still outstanding. The commitments have been made, but those projects are simply held up, waiting until inspections can be made.

As the Senator has said, this $19,000,000 goes primarily to title II loans. The result is that there is nothing upon which to operate for title VI loans; and as a result we have $1,000,000,000 of outstanding commitments, but no opportunity to make the proper inspections.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, just one sentence before the vote on this amendment: The $400,000,000 which was provided for was on a 30-day extension of the title on April 30, under the appropriation for 1948; but the appropriation we are talking about now would be from June 30, so there is nothing really to provide for at the present time, until further legislation is enacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, on page 17, in line 13.

The amendment was rejected.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I now send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 19, it is proposed to strike out all beginning with the word "That", in line 11, through the words "Provided further", in line 6.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the language I am trying to strike out by this amendment is a limitation on the number of officers and employees in the classification grade 11 of the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service, and of class 4 of the professional service, used in the Public Housing Administration. It provides that not more than 20 percent of the total number of that class of officers can be in those grades.

I shall take only a minute to explain this amendment. The Public Housing Administration, as it stands today, really is the custodian of a large number of various housing programs which were developed and put into effect during the war. They were developed by other agencies, but they have been turned over to the Public Housing Administration for it to administer. A great many of them are in process of liquidation and are being closed out.

Practically all the work of this particular division is of a supervisory nature. It is not a case in which the usual runof-the-mine employees are used—employees such as stenographers, clerks, typists, and others who are in the lower grades; but the work is largely supervisory, and naturally it calls for a high percentage of supervisory personnel. So this limitation, as it is written into the bill, is an undue restriction upon that agency, if we are to have proper administration.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, just a few words on this amendment. Last year the Congress of the United States undertook to say that this agency had too many high-paid employees in its services; and therefore the Congress provided that not to exceed 20 percent of the total number of officers and employees of the agency of that class were to be in the higher-salaried group which have just been referred to, and whose salaries would be paid from such funds. The agency got along all right with that arrangement last year. There is no reason why Congress should not say at this time that the agency has had too many high-paid officers, and there is no reason why the Congress should not stipulate here that that agency cannot have as many high-paid employees as it desires. That is all there is to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama on page 19, in lines 1 to 6.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there is no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference thereon with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Reed, Mr. Wherry, Mr. McKellar, and Mr. Russell conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6527) to provide assistance to certain local school agencies overburdened with war-incurred, or postwar national-defense-incurred enrollments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ACCEPTANCE OF CONSTITUTION OF IN-TERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION INSTRUMENT OF AMENDMENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution from the Senate (S. J. Res. 117) providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States, which was, on page 2, to strike out all after line 7, down to and including line 2 on page 4, and insert:

Sec. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually to the Department of State—

(a) such sums, not to exceed $550,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, as may be necessary for the payment by the United States of its share of the expenses of the Organization, as apportioned by the International Labour Conference in accordance with article 13 (c) of the constitution of the Organization: Provided, however, That the annual United States quota of contribution to the total budget of the Organization shall not be greater in proportion than the United States quota of contribution to the total budget of the United Nations; and

(b) Such additional sums, not to exceed $95,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, as may be necessary to pay the expenses incident to participation by the United States in the activities of the Organization, including—

(1) salaries of the representative or representatives and alternates and appropriate staff, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; services as authorized by section 15 of Public Law 600, Seventy-ninth Congress; under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light and cost of living allowances to persons temporarily stationed abroad; printing and binding without regard to section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919 (44 U. S. C. 111), and section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; and

(2) such other expenses as the Secretary of State deems necessary to participation by the United States in the activities of the Organization: Provided, That the provisions of section 6 of the act of July 30, 1946, Public Law 565, Seventy-ninth Congress, and regulations thereunder, applicable to expenses incurred pursuant to that act shall be applicable to any expenses incurred pursuant to this paragraph (b) (2) this paragraph (b) (2).

SEC. 3. No person shall serve as representative, delegate, or alternate from the United States until such person has been investigated as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation; and no citizen of or resident in the United States shall participate in any session, conference, or meeting, or other work of the International Labor Organization or of any subordinate committee or organization thereof without the consent of the Secretary of State.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Vandenberg, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Connally conferees on the part of the Senate.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE OF OCEAN STATIONS BY COAST GUARD—CONFER-ENCE REPORT

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on Senate bill 2122, to authorize the Coast Guard to operate and maintain ocean stations, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2122) to authorize the Coast Guard to operate and maintain ocean stations, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That the Coast Guard is authorized to operate and maintain floating ocean stations for the purpose of providing search and rescue, communication, and airnavigation facilities, and meteorological services in such ocean areas as are regularly traversed by aircraft of the United States.

"Sec. 2. The Coast Guard is authorized, subject to approval by the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics, to operate, on floating ocean stations authorized by section 1 hereof, such air navigation facilities as the Administrator may find necessary or desirable for the safe and efficient protection and control of air traffic. The Coast Guard, in establishing, maintaining, or operating any air navigation facilities herein provided, shall request the cooperation of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics to the end that the personnel and facilities of the Civil Aeronautics Administration will be utilized to the fullest possible advantage."

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

FORT HALL INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECT, IDAHO

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 5416, to promote the interests of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project. Idaho, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. conference report will be read.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. Senate to the Senate to the Bin (R. R. 5416) to promote the interests of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project, Idaho, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That those provisions of the order of the Secretary of the Interior, dated February 6, 1948, which are based on certain recommendations contained in the Report on Conditions Found to Exist on the Fort Hall Irrigation Project and the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, Idaho, dated February 26, 1941, and which are described in the said order as made pursuant to the authority contained in the Act of June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1803), are hereby approved pursuant to the provisions of such Act.

"Sec. 2. During such periods as water for the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project may be available in excess of the present duty of three acre-feet per acre per annum, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion and under regulations to be prescribed by him, to permit the delivery of such excess water equally to the project lands in an amount not to exceed five-tenths acrefeet per acre per annum, in addition to the present duty of three acre-feet per acre per annum: Provided, however, That any sur-plus water temporarily available in addition to the three and five-tenths acre-feet per acre per annum may be furnished for use on project lands on terms, conditions, and rates to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

"SEC. 3. The Little Indian Unit containing one thousand one hundred eighty-six and thirty-three one-hundredths acres of irrigable land in townships 2 and 3 south, ranges 36 and 37 east, Boise meridian, within the boundaries of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, is hereby made a part of the Fort Hall Indian Irrigation project and the lands therein shall have the benefit of, and be subject to, all existing legislation applicable to said project to the same extent as other lands of like ownership and character within the project. The Indian-owned irrigable land in the unit shall be charged with its proper proportionate share of the project rehabilitation and improvement costs of $15.10 and not to exceed $7.50 per acre, respectively, as these costs are defined in the report referred to in section 1 of this Act. The non-Indian-owned irrigable land of the unit shall be entitled to receive only naturalflow water until a full project water right is acquired for said land through the execution by the owner of a contract, or contracts, providing for the repayment to the United States of like per-acre costs as are charged against the Indian-owned land in the unit. Said charges, as to Indian and non-Indian lands, shall be a first lien against the lands, under the Act of March 7, 1928 (45 Stat. 200, 210).

"SEC. 4. The net irrigable area of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project is hereby established as forty-seven thousand and forty-four and sixty-three one-hundredths acres of land, more or less. This area includes the forty-six thousand eight hundred and three and seventy-two one-hundredths acres of land, more or less, shown as the irrigable area of the project by the maps and plats in the report referred to in section 1 of this Act, and the two hundred and forty and ninety-one one-hundredths acres, more or less, included in eight additional tracts of land described as follows: (a) An irregular shaped area in the northeast corner of the east half southwest quarter southeast quarter of section 36, township 5 south, range 33 east, Boise meridian, containing one and seventy one-hundredths acres; (b) an irregular shaped area lying along the east side of the Fort Hall Main Canal in the west half of section 35, township 5 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, containing twentyeight and seventeen one-hundredths acres; (c) an irregular shaped area lying along the east side of the Fort Hall Main Canal in the south half of section 14, township 6 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, containing forty acres; (d) a portion of the northwest quarter northeast quarter of section 23, township 6 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, containing thirty-three and forty-two one-hundredths acres; (e) Fairview Park in the east half southwest quarter southwest quarter northeast quarter and west half southeast quarter southwest quarter northeast quarter of section 23, township 6 south. range 34 east, Boise meridian, containing ten acres; (f) the east half northeast quarter northwest quarter of section 23, township 6 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian containing twenty acres; (g) an irregular shaped area lying along the east side of the Pocatello lateral in section 23, township 6 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, containing ninety-seven sixty-two one-hundredths acres; and (h) the southwest quarter southwest quarter southwest quarter of section 24, township 6 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, containing ten acres. The above-de-scribed tracts of land, together with such lands in the portion of the village of Alalying between the Pocatello lateral and the Oregon Short Line Railroad rightof-way in section 23, township 6 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, as (notwithstanding their inclusion in the irrigable acreage shown by the maps and plats hereinabove mentioned) have no water right at present, shall be entitled to receive, or to continue to receive, water through pumping opera-tions or by gravity flow, provided the re-spective owners thereof, within five years from the date of the enactment of this Act, enter into contracts whereby they agree (1) to pay their proper proportionate share of the project construction costs of $18.12 per acre, as these costs are defined in the report referred to in section 1 of this Act, for such of their lands as do not now have a project water right, (2) to pay their proper pro-portionate share of the project rehabilitation and improvement costs of $15.10 and not to exceed $7.50 per acre, respectively, for such of their lands as are not now covered by contracts for the repayment of such costs, and (3) to install, maintain, and operate, at their own expense, pumping machinery to lift the water from the project canals or laterals for the irrigation of such of their lands as cannot be supplied by gravity flow. The noninclusion of the Fort Hall town site within the net irrigable area of the project as hereby established shall not prevent the obtaining of water rights therefor in accordance with the Act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. 1015, 1025).

"SEC. 5. There is excluded from the Fort Hall Indian Irrigation project by the designation of the project area in section 4 of this Act the nine thousand six hundred and seventy acres of tribal, allotted, and non-Indian-owned lands located between Fort Hall and Gibson, Idaho, heretofore authorized to be included in the project by the Act of March 3, 1927 (Ch. 371, 44 Stat. 1398). The construction costs apportioned to the tribal lands so excluded are hereby canceled and the water rights are made available for project use. The water rights for the lands of the several allottees and non-Indian owners within the area so excluded shall not be impaired or affected by reason of such exclusion, but water shall be delivered only at the head of the laterals serving these lands. The respective owners of such lands may make their water rights available for project use, whereupon the construction costs assessed or assessable against their lands with respect to the water rights thus made available shall be canceled by the Secretary of the Interior. Allottees of lands within the excluded area, or their heirs or devisees, may donate or sell their lands to the tribe or may exchange their lands for assignments of tribal lands within the project area. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase by the Secretary of the Interior, in the name of the United States of America in trust for the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes of the Fort Hall Reservation, of one hundred and eighty acres of non-Indianowned land, with water rights and improvements appurtenant thereto, described as the north half southeast quarter southwest quarter section 13, township 4 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, and south half northeast quarter and north half southeast quarter section 7, township 4 south, range 35 east, Boise meridian, located within the area excluded from the Fort Hall Indian Irrigation project by section 4 of this Act.

"Sec. 6. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,995 to compensate the following-named landowners, or their heirs, for work accomplished or for future work necessary in filling, leveling, and otherwise preparing for irrigation the abandoned portion of the old Fort Hall Main Canal within their holdings, in not to exceed the following amounts: Frank E. DeKay, $401; Henry Jensen, $633; Theodore H. Gathe, $654; A. E. Albert, $106; Ezra D. Wilson, $127; J. M. Bistline, $378 Ambrose H. McGuire, $424; Ellen Griffith, $412; C. M. Allen, $116; Olive A. Granden, $184; William Webster, $28; Hiram Faulkner, $114; Williamette Blakeslee, $298; Frank Parker, $99; and Henrietta C. Blakeslee, $21.

"SEC. 7. Pending the construction of a siphon to provide gravity flow water to ninety-six and six-tenths acres of irrigable lands in the southwest quarter section 27, and east half section 28, township 5 south, range 34 east, Bolse meridian, Idaho, which lands have been irrigated by pumping operations over a period of years, the Secretary of the Interior may accept the conveyance by the landowners of the pumping equipment for use of the Fort Hall Indian Irrigation project and may operate such equipment as a part of said project in order to provide water for the irrigation of such lands; the acceptance of such conveyance being subject to the owners of the lands executing releases to the United States of any and all claims whatsover due to the pumping operations carried on by such landowners.

"SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to revise and reform, upon such terms and conditions as he may determine to be fair and equitable in all the circumstances affecting the interests of the United States and the contractors, existing contracts between the United States and the Idaho Irrigation District, the Progressive Irrigation District, and the Snake River Valley Irrigation District in Idaho, which contracts provide for certain payments by the districts to the United States for the benefit of works of the Fort Hall Indian Irrigation project.

"SEC. 9. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for refunds to Indians, or their heirs, the sum of $1,419.55, representing irrigation assessments of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project erroneously made and collected, as follows: Andrew F. Cutler, $153.80; Alice Sorrell Johns, $168.95; Nettle Stinson La-Vatta, $146.62; Earl Edmund Cutler, $159.20; Charles Faulkner, $145.25; Josephine LaVatta Rumas, $155.20; May Phyllis LaVatta Brower, $29.90; Leonard I. Cutler, $135.85; Effie Diggie Houtz, $122.75; Lucy Yandell Spencer, $25; Charles Gerard Cutler, $121.53; and Hattle Sorrell Siler Tillotson, $55.50.

"SEC. 10. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for the relocating, rehabilitating, cleaning, and extending of irrigation systems serving the lands irrigated from Ross Fork, Bannock, and Lincoln Creeks, which lands are outside of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project, including the construction of a storage reservoir on Bannock Creek. The costs of any work benefiting Indian lands performed pursuant to this authorization shall be apportioned on a per acre basis and collected under laws applicable to Indian irrigable lands on the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project. Operation and maintenance charges against such lands shall likewise be subject to the same laws, rules, and regulations as apply to Indian lands on the Fort Hall project. Any unpaid charges against such lands shall be subject to a first lien as provided in the Act of March 7, 1928 (45 Stat. 200, 210). No expenditure shall be made under this authorization which will benefit lands in non-Indian ownership unless the owners thereof execute contracts providing for the repayment of their proportionate per acre share of the costs of the work assessable against their lands.

"SEC. 11. In order to preven the accumulation of delinquent project assessments or other charges against the non-Indian-owned lands of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause liquidation of all delinquent assessments or charges by taking such action as may be necessary, including the foreclosure of the Government's lien covering any such delinquent charges or by initiating such other procedure as may be legally available, which action may be taken by him at any time when in his judgment the best interests of the project would be served thereby.

WATER-POLLUTION-CONTROL ACTIVITIES IN THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 418) to provide for water-pollution-control activities in the Public Health Service of the Federal Security Agency and in the Federal Works Agency, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in connection with the exercise of jurisdiction over the waterways of the Nation and in consequence of the benefits re-sulting to the public health and welfare by the abatement of stream pollution, it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to recognize, preserve, and protect the primary responsibilities and rights of the States in controlling water pollution, to support and aid technical research to devise and perfect methods of treatment of industrial wastes which are not susceptible to known effective methods of treatment, and to provide Federal technical services to State and interstate agencies and to industries, and financial aid to State and interstate agencies and to municipalities, in the formulation and execution of their stream-pollution-abatement programs. To this end, the Sur-geon General of the Public Health Service (under the supervision and direction of the Federal Security Administrator), and the Federal Works Administrator shall have the responsibilities and authority relating to water-pollution control vested in them respectively by this act.

SEC. 2. (a) The Surgeon General shall, after careful investigation, and in cooperation with other Federal agencies, with State water-pollution agencies and interstate agencies, and with the municipalities and industries involved, prepare or adopt comprehensive programs for eliminating or reducing the pollution of interstate waters and tributaries thereof hereinafter declared to be a public nuisance and improving the sanitary condition of such interstate waters and tributaries thereof. In the development of such comprehensive programs due regard shall be given to the improvements which are necessary to conserve such waters for public water supplies, propagation of fish and aquatic life, recreational purposes, and agricultural, industrial, and other legitimate uses. For the purpose of this subsection the Surgeon General is authorized to make joint investigations with any such agencies of the condition of any waters in any State or States, and of the discharges of any sewage, indus-trial wastes, or substance which may deleteriously affect such waters.

(b) The Surgeon General shall encourage cooperative activities by the States for the prevention and abatement of water pollution; encourage the enactment of uniform State laws relating to water pollution; en-courage compacts between States for the prevention and abatement of water pollusion; collect and disseminate information relating to water pollution and the prevention and abatement thereof; support and aid technical research to devise and perfect methods of treatment of industrial wastes which are not susceptible to known effective methods of treatment; make available to State and interstate agencies, municipalities, industries, and individuals the results of surveys, studies, investigations, research, and experiments relating to water pollution and the prevention and abatement thereof conducted by the Surgeon General and by authorized cooperating agencies; and furnish such assistance to State agencies as may be authorized by law. (c) The consent of the Congress is hereby given to two or more States to negotiate and enter into agreements or compacts, not in conflict with any law or treaty of the United States, for (1) cooperative effort and mutual assistance for the prevention and abatement of water pollution and the enforcement of their respective laws relating thereto, and (2) the establishment of such agencies, joint or otherwise, as they may deem desirable for making effective such agreements and compacts. No such agreement or compact shall be binding or obligatory upon any State a party thereto unless and until it has been approved by the Congress.

(d) (1) The pollution of interstate waters in or adjacent to any State or States (whether the matter causing or contributing to such pollution is discharged directly into such waters or reaches such waters after discharge into a tributary of such waters), which endangers the health or welfare of persons in a State other than that in which the discharge originates, is hereby declared to be a public nuisance and subject to abatement as herein provided.

(2) Whenever the Surgeon General, on the basis of reports, surveys, and studies, finds that any pollution declared to be a public nuisance by paragraph (1) of this subsection is occurring, he shall give formal notification thereof to the person or persons discharging any matter causing or contributing to such pollution and shall advise the water-pollution agency or interstate agency of the State or States where such discharge or discharges originate of such notification. This notification may outline recommended remedial measures which are reasonable and equitable in that case and shall specify a reasonable time to secure abatement of the If action calculated to secure abatement of the pollution within the time specified is not commenced, this failure shall again be brought to the attention of the person or persons discharging the matter and of the water-pollution agency or interstate agency of the State or States where such discharge or discharges originate. The notification to such agency may be accompanied by a recommendation that it initiate a suit to abate the pollution in a court of proper

(3) If, within a reasonable time after the second notification by the Surgeon General, the person or persons discharging the matter fail to initiate action to abate the pollution or the State water pollution agency or interstate agency fails to initiate a suit to secure abatement, the Federal Security Administrator is authorized to call a public hearing, to be held in or near one or more of the places where the discharge or discharges causing or contributing to such pollution originate, before a board of five or more persons ap-pointed by the Administrator, who may be officers or employees of the Federal Security Agency or of the water pollution agency or interstate agency of the State or States where such discharge or discharges originate (except that at least one of the members of the board shall be a representative of the water pollution agency of the State or States where such discharge or discharges originate and at least one shall be a representative of the Department of Commerce, and not less than a majority of the board shall be persons other than officers or employees of the Federal Security Agency). On the basis of the evidence presented at such hearing the board shall make its recommendations to the Federal Security Administrator concerning the measures, if any, which it finds to be reasonable and equitable to secure abatement of such pollution.

(4) After affording the person or persons discharging the matter causing or contributing to the pollution reasonable opportunity to comply with the recommendations of the board, the Federal Security Administrator may, with the consent of the water pollution agency (or of any officer or agency authorized to give such consent) of the State or States in which the matter causing or contributing the pollution is discharged, request the Attorney General to bring a suit on behalf of the United States to secure abatement of the pollution.

(5) Before or after any suit authorized by paragraph (4) is commenced, any person who is alleged to be discharging matter contributing to the pollution, abatement of which is sought, may, with the consent of the water pollution agency (or of any officer or agency authorized to give such consent) of the State in which such matter is discharged, be joined as a defendant. The court shall have power to enforce its judgment against any such defendant.

(6) In any suit brought pursuant to paragraph (4) in which two or more persons in different judicial districts are originally joined as defendants, the suit may be com-menced in the judicial district in which any discharge caused by any of the defendants occurs.

(7) The court shall receive in evidence in any such suit a transcript of the proceedings before the board and a copy of the board's recommendation; and may receive such further evidence as the court in its discretion deems proper. The court, giving due con-sideration to the practicability and to the physical and economic feasibility of securing abatement of any pollution proved, shall have jurisdiction to enter such judgment, and orders enforcing such judgment, as the public interest and the equities of the case may require. The jurisdiction of the

Surgeon General, or any other agency which has jurisdiction pursuant to the provisions of this act, shall not extend to any region areas nor shall it affect the rights or jurisdiction of any public body where there are in effect provisions for sewage disposal pursuant to agreement between the United States of America and any such public body by stipulation entered in the Supreme Court of the United States. While any such stipulation or modification thereof is in force and effect, no proceedings of any kind may be maintained by virtue of this act against such public body or any public agency, corporation, or individual within its jurisdiction. Neither this provision nor any provision of this act shall be construed to give to the Surgeon General or any other person or agency the right to intervene in the said proceedings wherein such stipulation was entered.

(8) As used in this subsection the term 'person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, a State, mu-nicipality, and a political subdivision of a

SEC. 3. The Surgeon General may, upon request of any State water-pollution agency or interstate agency, conduct investigations and research and make surveys concerning any specific problem of water pollution confronting any State, interstate agency, community, municipality, or industrial plant, with a view to recommending a solution of such problem.

SEC. 4. The Surgeon General shall prepare and publish, from time to time, reports of surveys, studies, investigations, research, and experiments made under the authority of this act as he may consider desirable, together with appropriate recomwith regard to the control of water pollution.

SEC. 5. The Federal Works Administrator is authorized, subject to the provisions of section 9 (c), to make loans to any State, municipality, or interstate agency for the construction of necessary treatment works to prevent the discharge by such State or municipality of untreated or inadequately treated sewage or other waste into interstate waters or into a tributary of such waters, and for the preparation (either by its engineering staff or by practicing engineers employed for that purpose) of engineering reports, plans, and specifications in connection therewith. Such loans shall be subject, however, to the following limita-tions: (a) No loan shall be made for any project unless such project shall have been approved by the appropriate State water pollution agency or agencies and by the Surgeon General, and unless such project is included in a comprehensive program developed pursuant to this act; (b) no loan shall be made for any project in an amount exceeding  $33\frac{1}{3}$  percent of the estimated reasonable cost thereof, as determined by the Federal Works Administrator, or in an amount exceeding \$200,000, whichever amount is the smaller; (c) every such loan shall bear interest at the rate of 2 percent per annum, payable semiannually; and (d) the bonds or other obligations evidencing any such loan (1) must be duly authorized and issued pursuant to State and local law, and (2) may, as to the security thereof and the payment of principal thereof and interest thereon, be subordinated (to the extent deemed feasible and desirable by the Federal Works Administrator for facilitating the financing of such projects) to other bonds or obligations of the obligor issued to finance such project or that may then be outstanding.

SEC. 6. (a) The Surgeon General and the Federal Works Administrator, in carrying out their respective functions under this act, shall provide for the review of all reports of examinations, research, investigations, plans, studies, and surveys, made pursuant to the provisions of this act and all applications for loans under section 5. In de-termining the desirability of projects for treatment works and of approving loans in connection therewith, consideration shall be given to the public benefits to be derived by the construction thereof, the propriety of Federal aid in such construction, the relation of the ultimate cost of constructing and maintaining the works to the public interest and to the public necessity for the works, and the adequacy of the provisions made or proposed by the applicant for the loan for assuring proper and efficient operation and maintenance of the works after completion of the construction thereof.

(b) There is hereby established in the Public Health Service a Water Pollution Control Advisory Board to be composed as follows: The Surgeon General or a sanitary engineer officer designated by him, who shall be Chairman of the Board, a representative of the Department of the Army, a representa-tive of the Department of the Interior, a representative of the Federal Works Agency, and a representative of the Department of Agriculture, designated by the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Interior, the Federal Works Administrator, and the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively; and six persons (not officers or employees of the Federal Government) to be appointed annually by the President. One of the persons appointed by the President shall be an engineer who is expert in sewage and industrialdisposal, one shall be a person who shall have shown an active interest in the field of wildlife conservation, and, except as the President may determine that the purposes of this act will be better furthered by different representation, one shall be a person representative of municipal government, one shall be a person representative of State government, and one shall be a person representative of affected industry. The members of the Board who are not officers or employees of the United States shall be entitled to receive compensation at a per diem rate to be fixed by the Federal Security Administrator, together with an allowance for actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses while engaged on the business of the Board. It shall be the duty of the Board to review the policies and program of the Public Health Service as undertaken under authority of this act and to make recommendations thereon in reports to the Surgeon General. Such clerical and technical assistance as may be necessary to discharge the duties of the Board shall be provided from the personnel of the Public Health Service.

SEC. 7. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Security Agency. for each of the five fiscal years during the period beginning July 1, 1948, and ending June 30, 1953, a sum not to exceed the sum of $20,000,000 for the purpose of making loans under section 5 of this act. Sums so appropriated shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 8. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Security Agency for each of the five fiscal years during the period beginning July 1, 1948, and ending June 30, 1953, the sum of $1,000,000, to be allotted equitably and paid to the States for expenditure by or under the direction of their respective State water pollution agen-cies, and to interstate agencies for expenditure by them, for the conduct of investigations, research, surveys, and studies related to the prevention and control of water pollution caused by industrial wastes. Sums appropriated pursuant to this subsection shall remain available until expended, shall be allotted by the Surgeon General in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Federal Security Administrator, and shall be paid prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office.

(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Works Agency for each of the five fiscal years during the period beginning July 1, 1948, and ending June 30, 1953, a sum not to exceed $800,000 to enable the Federal Works Administrator to erect facilities at Cincinnati, Ohio, as may be necessary for the use of the Public Health Service in connection with the research and study of pollution of interstate waters and the training of personnel in work related to the control of pollution of interstate waters. The amount authorized for this purpose shall include the cost of preparation of drawings and specifications, supervision of construc-tion and other administrative expenses incident to the work: Provided, That the Federal Works Agency shall prepare the plans and specifications, make all necessary contracts and supervise construction. Sums appropriated pursuant to this authorization shall remain available until expended.

(c) There is hereby authorized to be approprlated to the Federal Works Agency for each of the five fiscal years during the period beginning July 1, 1948, and ending June 30, 1953, a sum not to exceed the sum of $1,000,to enable the Federal Works Administrator to make grants to States, municipalities, or interstate agencies to aid in financing the cost of engineering, architectural, and economic investigations and studies, surveys, designs, plans, working drawings, specifications, procedures, and other action preliminary to the construction of projects approved by the appropriate State water pollution agency or agencies and by the Surgeon General. Grants made under this subsection with respect to any project shall not exceed whichever of the following amounts is the smaller: (1) $20,000, or (2) 331/3 percent of the estimated reasonable cost determined by the Federal Works Administrator) of the action preliminary to the construction of such project. Sums appropriated pursuant to this subsection shall remain available until expended.

(d) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Security Agency for each of the five fiscal years during the period beginning July 1, 1948, and ending June 30, 1953, such sum (not to exceed the sum of $2,000,000) as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its functions under this act.

(e) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Works Agency for each of the five fiscal years during the period beginning July 1, 1948, and ending June 30, 1953, such sum (not to exceed the sum of $500,000) as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its functions under this act.

SEC. 9. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, the appointment of engineer and scientist officers may be made under the provisions of section 208 (b) (1) of the Public Health Service Act, in addition to the appointments authorized by such section 208 (b) (1); but not more than five such additional officers shall hold office at the same time.

(b) The Federal Security Administrator, with the consent of the flead of any other agency of the Federal Government, may utilize such officers and employees of such agency as may be found necessary to assist in carrying out the purposes of this act. (c) (1) Upon written request of the Federal Works Administrator, from time to time submitted to the Federal Security Administrator, specifying (a) particular projects approved by the Surgeon General, (b) the total estimated costs of such projects, and (c) the total sum requested for loan which the Federal Works Administrator proposes to make for such projects, the Federal Security Administrator shall transfer such total sum (within the amount appropriated therefor) to the Federal Works Administrator for the making of loans for such projects pursuant to section 5 hereof. In making such loans, the Federal Works Administrator shall adhere to the order or sequence of priority for projects established by the Surgeon General and shall take such measures as, in his judgment, will assure that the engineering plans and specifications, the details of construction, and the completed treatment works conform to the project as approved by the Surgeon General; and the Federal Works Administrator shall furnish written reports to the Federal Security Administrator on the progress of the work.

(2) The Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized (a) to hold, administer, exchange, refund, or sell at public or private sale any bonds or other obligations evidenc-ing loans made under this act; and (b) to collect, or provide for the collection of, interest on and principal of such bonds or other obligations. All moneys received as proceeds from such sales, and all moneys so collected, shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

(d) The Surgeon General and the Federal Works Administrator are each authorized to prescribe such regulations as are necessary to carry out their respective functions under this act.

SEC. 10. When used in this act—
(a) The term "State water pollution agency" means the State health authority, except that, in the case of any State in which there is a single State agency, other than the State health authority, charged with responsibility for enforcing State laws relating to the abatement of water pollution, it means such other State agency;
(b) The term "interstate agency" means an agency of two or more States having powers or duties pertaining to the abatement of pollution of waters;

(c) The term "treatment works" means the various devices used in the treatment of sewage or industrial waste of a liquid nature, including the necessary intercepting sewers, outfall sewers, pumping, power, and other equipment, and their appurtenances, and includes any extensions, improvements, remodeling, additions, and alternations thereof:

(d) The term "State" means a State, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, or the Virgin Islands;

(e) The term "interstate waters" means all rivers, lakes, and other waters that flow across, or form a part of, State boundaries;

(f) The term "municipality" means a city, town, district, or other public body created by or pursuant to State law and having juris-diction over disposal of sewage, industrial wastes, or other wastes.

SEC. 11. This act shall not be construed as (1) superseding or limiting the functions, under any other law, of the Surgeon General or of the Public Health Service, or of any other officer or agency of the United States, relating to water pollution, or (2) affecting or impairing the provisions of the Oil Pollution Act, 1924, or sections 13 through 17 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899, as amended, or (3) affecting or impairing the provisions of any treaty of the United States.

SEC. 12. If any provision of this act, or the application of any provision of this act to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, and the remainder of this act, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 13. This act may be cited as the "Water Pollution Control Act."

Mr. REVERCOMB. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. REVER-COMB, Mr. MALONE, and Mr. McClellan conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY FOR APPOINTMENT OF TWO ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF STATE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President. from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report an original bill, continuing the authority for the appointment of two additional Assistant Secretaries of State for 1 year, and I submit a report (No. 1683) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. report will be received, and printed, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 2869) continuing the authority for the appointment of two additional Assistant Secretaries of State for 1 year, was read twice by its title and ordered to be placed on the calendar.

ADDITIONAL BILLS INTRODUCED

Additional bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows.

> By Mr. MAGNUSON (for himself and Mr. BUTLER)

S. 2867. A bill providing for the construction of a railroad connecting the existing railroad system serving the United States and Canada and terminating at Prince George, British Columbia, Canada, with the railroad system serving Alaska and terminating at Fairbanks, Alaska; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 2868. A bill to change the name of Culbertson Dam on the Republican River in the State of Nebraska to Trenton Dam; Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

(Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an original bill (S. 2869) continuing the authority for appointment of two additional Assistant Secretaries of State for 1 year, which was ordered to be placed on the Calendar, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BROOKS: S. 2870. A bill for the relief of Roman Szymanski; to the Committee on the Judi-

(Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. Cordon, Mr. CAIN, and Mr. MAGNUSON) introduced Senate bill 2871, to aid in the production of permanent housing in the Portland, Oreg.-Vancouver, Wash., area, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

AID IN PRODUCTION OF PERMANENT HOUSING IN PORTLAND-VANPORT AREA

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson], the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. Cain], and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill dealing with aid in the production of permanent housing in the Portland-Vanport area. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks, and that a one-page brief statement in explanation of the bill may also be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2871) to aid in the production of permanent housing in the Portland, Oreg.-Vancouver, Wash., area, introduced by Mr. Morse (for himself, Mr. CORDON, Mr. CAIN, and Mr. MAGNUSON), was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in order to assist in providing housing accommodations for families in the Portland-Vancouver area deprived of their homes as a result of the flood disaster, the Federal National Mortgage Association, a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is hereby authorized to purchase at a price equal to the unpaid balance plus accrued interest, any first mort-gage made after the effective date of this act, and within 2 years of the date of the purchase, for the purpose of financing the building of a new residential structure or structures located in the metropolitan area of Portland, Oreg., or Vancouver, Wash., with respect to which the financial institution from which such mortgage is purchased has insurance under section 2 of the National Housing Act, as amended: Provided, That not more than $10,000,000 of the funds available to the Federal National Mortgage Association shall, in the aggregate, be used for the purchase of such mortgages.

SEC. 2. Section 4 (c) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act is amended by striking out "$1,500,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,510,000,000."

The statement presented by Mr. Morse is as follows:

STATEMENT ON BILL TO AID PRODUCTION OF PERMANENT HOUSING IN THE PORTLAND, OREG .-VANCOUVER, WASH., AREA

This bill would encourage the extension of necessary credit to assist in providing low cost housing urgently needed in the Portland-Vancouver area as a result of recent floods. The bill would authorize the Federal National Mortgage Association (a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) to purchase first mortgages made, after the enact-ment of this bill, for the purpose of financ-ing the construction of new residential structures in that area, if the financial in-stitutions from which the mortgages are purchased have insurance under section 2 of the National Housing Act with respect to such mortgages. Any such purchase would have to be made within 2 years from the date of the mortgage at a price equal to the un-paid balance plus accrued interest.

Under this section 2 of the National Housing Act, financial institutions may be insured against losses, up to 10 percent, on the total amount of their loans made for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and improvements of existing structures or financing the building of new structures. Any such loan for building a new structure (referred to as title I, class 3 loans) may not presently exceed $3,000. Legislation (S. 866) is pending which would increase this amount to $4,500

The total amount of funds the bill would make available to the Federal National Mort-gage Association for this purpose would be $10,000,000, which would be provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The total amount of authorized investments, loans, purchases, and commitments of the Corporation would be increased accordingly. The bill would not require any appropriation of funds by the Congress.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM—AMENDMENTS

Mr. SPARKMAN submitted three amendments, Mr. RUSSELL submitted several amendments, and Mr. AIKEN submitted several amendments, intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. PEPPER (for himself and Mr. Downey) submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to Senate bill 2318, supra, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, on June 12 I entered a motion to reconsider the bill (H. R. 3214) to revise, codify, and enact into law title 28 of the United States Codes, which had passed both Houses. I desire to withdraw the motion at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion referred to by the Senator from Colorado is withdrawn.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT, 1949

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I move that the unfinished business, Calendar No. 1346, Senate bill 2318 to provide for a coordinated agricultural program, be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6772, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6772) making appropriations for the Department of the Navy and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, this is the bill making appropriations for the Department of the Navy and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes. The original and supplemental estimates amounted to $3,927,738,700. The House reduced that in the amount of $241,-005,450. Of these amounts, the Senate restored $116,437,000.

In addition to that, Mr. President, and following the submission of the original bill, the President requested $9,000,000 for exploration in the Elk Hills oil reservation in California. This came in after the House had considered the bill. Both the House Committee on Armed Services and the Senate Committee on Armed Services approved the request. We therefore inserted it in the bill. With that insertion, the total restoration by the Senate amounts to $125,437,000.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD at this point my remarks the first 7½ pages of the report on the bill.

There being no objection, the portion of the report (No. 1621) specified was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6772) making appropriations for the Department of the Navy and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, report the same to the Senate, with various amendments and present herewith information relative to the changes made.

SCOPE OF THE BILL

The bill calling for a total appropriation of $3,812,170,250 embraces all regular naval appropriations for the Department of the Navy; the headquarters, United States Marine Corps; the entire operating forces of the United States Navy, including naval aviation, and of the United States Marine Corps, including the Reserve components of such forces; all field activities, headquarters, forces, bases, installations, activities, and functions under the control or supervision of the Department of the Navy. Attention should be called to the fact that in the Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1948, $315,000,000 in appropriations was provided for aircraft procurement of which $150,000,000 is earmarked to liquidate previous contract authority. In addition, $588,000,000 in new contract authority was included. These amounts normally would have been carried in this bill but were approved and passed by the Congress as a 1948 measure in order to accelerate procurement of needed aircraft for adequate national defense.

On June 3 the President submitted a request for an appropriation of $50,000,000 and contract authorization of $66,500,000 for public works for the National Military Establishment, Department of the Navy. These amounts are not included in this bill since they will be reviewed as a part of the requests submitted in the second deficiency appropriation bill, 1948.

COST OF THE NAVY

The committee last year pointed out that actual cash expenditures for the Department of the Navy were running about $525,000,000 ahead of actual cash appropriations. During the fiscal year 1949, cash expenditures will exceed appropriations by approximately $700,000,000. The committee wishes to point out that in addition to this outlay of cash a very sizable amount of wartime inventory is being consumed. In the fiscal year 1949, inventory to be consumed is estimated at $1,028,000,000. This figure represents original cost to the Navy. Its replacement with modern equipment at current prices is estimated at $1,750,000,000 by the Department of the Navy.

In addition, as will be shown in more detail under "Aviation and construction of ships," various sizable additional sums besides those now being spent will be required in the immediate years to come. The following table shows budget comparisons including consumption of inventory.

1. The actual cost of the Navy (nearly $5,000,000,000 in the 1948 fiscal year; $5,600,000,000 in fiscal year 1949) is substantially more than the $3,800,000,000 being appropriated. This is due primarily to two factors—(a) the carry-over of money from prior years' appropriations to be expended as equipment and materials are completed and delivered, and (b) the use of surplus inventory.

2. A substantial part (probably as much as 1¾ billion dollars) of the Navy's current program is being met by utilization of inventory—war reserves and current workingstock items such as aircraft from storage and material from the appropriation-purchase account, ship-material account, medical-tores account, and marine stores—in excess of purchases. This use of inventory is important because if the Navy is thus meeting current needs for war reserves and normal working stocks that is reaching the point of exhaustion, the inevitable result (all other factors being equal) will be a forcing of substantially increased appropriations in the future to support the present size and scope of naval operations.

Obviously it is difficult at this time to forecast future needs. However, in their testimony before the Senate subcommittee, Navy representatives did indicate that a future level of appropriation requirements during the 1950 and 1951 fiscal years might reach $6,500,000,000. This estimate was predicated upon assumptions that we maintain in those years the same naval strength as now planned, plus appropriations to continue the shipbuilding and conversion program at approximately a $300,000,000 annual rate; the public works program on an annual basis of about $200,000,000 and full implementation of the aircraft procurement program in accordance with recommendations of the Congressional Air Policy Committee.

The committee concurs with the report of the House of Representatives which stated:

"This is a matter of grave concern which the Congress should be prepared to consider in the near future. We must have in mind the question of whether we are going to continue even larger appropriations to maintain the same size Navy, or whether we can safely maintain our place in the world with a smaller one. It is to be hoped that the world situation will soon stabilize so that we will have a better idea as to the exact future requirements."

This bill will permit the Department of the Navy to allocate to the active fleet: 277 naval combatant ships, 486 auxiliary combatant ships, 763 total active. To the reserve fleet: 664 major combatant ships, 1,215 other vessels, 1,879 total reserve.

This calls for the maintenance and preservation in a state of readiness of virtually the same size fleet as provided by the 1948 fiscal year appropriations. Representing, as it does, the world's most formidable Navy, it is a real national asset and merits the continued confidence and support of this Congress and the Nation.

NAVAL RESERVE

While the committee continues its active and sympathetic interest in the Reserve components, it believes the exact sums necessary for their support can be better determined when the effects of a selective service law are better known.

CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

While the committee expects the Navy to restrict its civilian personnel to minimum requirements, it desires to point out that wise administration of the huge amounts appropriated require adequate and properly trained personnel. In restoring amounts for salaries for this purpose, it believes that $1 added may well save five or more.

INCREASED COSTS

In considering its recommendations, the committee has been mindful of the unanimous testimony of the material bureau heads that costs are up about 18 percent over 1 year ago.

PROJECT ORDERS

The committee last year in its report stated:

"The committee as a result of its detailed study of appropriations obligated by the Navy Department noted the extensive use of project orders. While the committee recognizes the necessity of their use under many circumstances, yet it strongly recommends the prompt formulation of a basic policy designed to control, within limits, the employment of this method of obligating funds.'

As a result of the committee's recom-mendation, the Department of the Navy has made commendable progress in tightening up the controls relating to project orders more nearly to conform with the basic law and the original concept of their use. However, the committee feels that additional progress can and should be made in view of the unusual condition found surround-ing the use of project orders in 1947. For example, in a study of the 1947 project or-ders, it was found that an unduly high percentage was placed in the last 60 days the fiscal year, in many cases in the last 30 days. In one bureau 93 percent of the total project orders was placed in the last 60 days and 84 percent in the last 30 days. In another, 71 percent and 42 percent were placed in similar fashion. While these are the extreme examples, a detailed study carefully shows that this practice is more common than uncommon. It further appears that in some instances an apparent effort is made at the last moment to obligate funds rather than permit money to revert to the Treasury. Other investigations reveal that some bureaus of the Department of the Navy have obligated funds by the project order device for work of a recurring and general operating nature, which by no means could be construed to be either permanent or unusual in accordance with the original concept of the project order device.

The Department of the Navy is able to support its contention that more judicious use of project orders has been made during 1948. However, the committee recommends that the Department of the Navy continue to study this question to the end that it consistently improved its fiscal control at all levels so that project orders will be used only as originally intended by law and sub-sequent regulations. It also recommends that the staff of the Appropriations Committee continue to study this question in cooperation with the Department of the

CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS

Since this bill appropriates funds for ship construction and conversions begun before the fiscal year 1949, but does not specify the amount of contract authorization for additional conversions or shipbuilding and ordnance, the committee invites attention to the legal authority which permits the Depart-ment of the Navy to start construction of ships. This procedure works as follows:

There is presently available to the Navy as a composite result of the following laws, 1,161,718 tons of combatant vessels. The authorization laws are:

Act of March 27, 1934, Public Law 135 of Seventy-third Congress.

Act of May 17, 1938, Public Law 528 of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

Act of June 14, 1940, Public Law 629 of the Seventy-sixth Congress

Act of July 19, 1940, Public Law 757 of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

Act of December 23, 1941, Public Law 369 of the Seventy-seventh Congress.

Act of July 9, 1942, Public Law 666 of the Seventy-seventh Congress.

The total standard displacement of six new ships contemplated in the 1949 program is estimated at about 75,000 tons. ance of tons is available to the Navy until used. Furthermore, certain parts of existing tonnage authorizations are self-perpetuating since new tonnage authorization becomes available as existing ships are lost or otherwise disposed of or become over-age.

Seventeen conversions in the present program are authorized by Public Law 319 of the Eightieth Congress. There is no limitation as to the number of ships which can be converted under this authority.

In the case of either new construction or conversion, the appropriation which is made has two features.

1. By the wording of the act it authorizes the Navy to proceed with whatever program the President has approved within existing authorizations. This program is not set forth in the law but is presented to the Appropriations Committee at the time of the hearings. This language, in effect, constitutes contract authority during the fiscal year of the appropriation for the entire cost of the approved program, in the 1949 case, $280,000,000.

2. An appropriation of cash is made annually equivalent to the estimated expenditures for all construction under way.

During the 1949 fiscal year, conversions of existing ships, new construction, including armament, and payment of previous obligations incurred for shipbuilding, will call for a total expenditure of $312,080,000. This amount is provided by funds in two appropriation titles, namely,

(a) The "Increase and replacement of naval vessels" (IRNV) program, under which no new construction has been authorized since 1948 but which provides current funds for the liquidation of the vast war-construction program, and

(b) A new appropriation program, begun in 1948, called "Construction of Ships, Navy," and "Ordnance for new construction, Navy," which finances the construction costs of new vessels, largely prototypes in the 1948 and 1949 budgets.

1. Increase and replacement of naval vessels: The IRNV program, including armament costs, calls for expenditures of $224,- 000,000 during 1949. Funds appropriated during the war period remain available in sufficient amounts to cover these estimated 1949 expenditures so that no "new" money is requested of Congress for this fund in this

2. "Construction of ships, Navy," and "Ord-nance for new construction, Navy": The total amount expected to be spent during 1949 in this fund to meet obligations incurred for new ship construction and conversions previously authorized, as indicated above, amount to $88,080,000, of which $82,270,000 is appropriated in this bill.

The above details only the costs of these programs in the form of cash outlay during the fiscal year 1949. The actual total cost of these programs initialed in 1948 and 1949 substantially more; and, while the committee believes it entirely proper and necessary for the national defense to construct prototype ships in order to incorporate and test out the more modern devices and also to modernize present ships, it believes the Congress and the Nation should know the future cost. Latest estimates indicate that to complete the old program (IRNV) ex-penditures after 1949 will total approximately $442,000,000. The same future cost to complete the new program will amount to about $463,000,000, or a total of $905,-000,000 for both. This will be spread over a period of approximately 4 years.

AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT

Although the naval aircraft procurement programs submitted at this session has already been approved, the committee desires to make a few observations. In order to maintain the authorized level of 14,500 available aircraft, it will be necessary to procure approximately 3,300 each fiscal year. At present costs it is estimated that expenditures for the purpose will reach a peak in 1952 of approximately $1,800,000,000 annually as contrasted with an estimated expenditure of $430,000,000 during 1949. Obviously, expenditures during the next fiscal year represent only the beginning increments of a much heavier level of expenditure needs to maintain our established goal of adequate naval aircraft.

RATION ALLOWANCES

The committee is in accord with a proposal from the Secretary of the Navy to increase the commuted ration allowances for enlisted naval personnel from the present standards of approximately 90 cents per diem to $1.05 per diem effective July 1, 1948, particularly since it understands that this would bring Navy practices in line with similar commuted leave rations as established by the Army earlier this calendar year.

REVISION OF THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION ACT

In 1947 the naval appropriations were submitted in alternate form—the one form as used in this bill, with minor modifications, and the other a so-called functional budget which would organize appropriations in terms of primary Navy functions. The alternate proposal would appear to have provided parallel fiscal control with management respon-sibility, greater clarity in budget presentation, and a more definite determination of costs for each of the several naval activities. The committee endorsed these objectives last year and wishes again to draw attention to this alternate budget proposal. It recom-mends that both the staff of the Appropriations Committee and the fiscal and budget personnel of the Department of the Navy cooperatively consider at an early date the complete ramifications of such a budgeting procedure for the Department of the Navy so that, if its merits are as great as they now appear to be, the presentations and structure of the 1950 naval budget appropriations may

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I now ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the clerk will proceed to state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Naval Establishment-Office of the Secretary-Miscellaneous expenses". on page 2, line 19, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$8,000,000" and insert "$7,500,000"; and in the same line, after the words "of which", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$1,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment was, under the subhead "Research, Navy," on page 3, line 13, after the word "Research", to strike out "$45,000,000" and insert

"$42,255,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Operation and conservation of naval petroleum reserves," on page 3, line 23, after the word "reserves", to strike out "$245,500" and insert "$9,245,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Naval Observatory," on page 5, line 7, after the word "Observatory", to strike out "$450,000" and insert "$465,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Hydrographic Office." on page 5, line 14, after the word "publications" to strike out "$3,500,000" and inser and insert "$3,700,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Naval Personnel-Training and education, Navy," on page 6, line 3, after the word "for", to strike out "$13,000,000" and insert "$13,741,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Bureau of Naval Personnel," on page 7, line 2, after the word "medals", to strike out "$1,250,-000" and insert "$1,570,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Naval Reserve," on page 7, line 14, after the word "Activities", to strike out "$125,000,000" and insert "$125,436,-000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Ships-Maintenance. Bureau of Ships," on page 10, line 15, after the word "expeditions", to strike out "$350,000,000" and insert $370,000,-000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Ordnance-Ordnance and Ordnance Stores, Navy," on page 11, line 5, after "(Public Law 604)," to strike out "$210,000,000" and insert "$248,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Supplies and Accounts-Pay and subsistence of naval personnel," on page 12, line 13, after the word "duty", to insert "and those per-forming service in the quarters of female officers and enlisted women, and except those performing service in the residences or quarters of naval attachés as authorized by the Secretary of the Navy.'

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," on page 15, line 14, after "(Public Law 248)", to strike out "$200,000,000" and insert $218,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Yards and Docks-Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 17, line 9, after the word "housing", to strike out "$4,500,000" and insert "$4,875,000"; in line 10, after the words "in all", to strike out "$150,000,000" and insert "$150,375,000"; and in line 18, after the word "located", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for any expenses incident to transferring offices of the Navy Department between buildings at the seat of government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Aeronautics-Aviation, Navy," on page 18, line 10, after "(Public Law 604)", to strike out "$440,-000,000" and insert "$470,000,000"; and in line 12, after the words "in all", to strike out "$575,000,000" and insert "$605,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Marine Corps—Pay, Marine Corps," on page 19, line 13, after the word "conditions", to strike out "$144,-862,000" and insert "$145,744,000."

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 8, after the word "Department", to strike out "$30,111,100" and insert "$35,-111,110."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses", on page 25, line 17, after the word "offices", to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,-100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General provisions—Department of the Navy," on page 28, line 17, after the word "violence", to strike out the comma and "or who is a member of any labor organization the officers of which have not complied with the requirements of subsection (h) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act as amended by the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947"; and on page 29, line 5, after the word "violence", to strike out the comma and "or that such person is not a member of any labor organization the officers of which have not complied with the requirements of subsection (h) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act as amended by the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947."

The amendment was agreed to.
The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 22, to insert:

SEC. 112. No part of the appropriations mace in this act shall be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and no moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establish-ment or made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired. manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government naval shipyards or ar-senals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary, such repair, purchase, ac-quirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government, except when the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, would, in the opinion of the Secretary, be advantageous to the national de-

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute an amendment to the committee amendment, printed as section 112.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the amendment of the committee beginning on page 32, after line 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for contracts with any person, firm, or corporation to make or cause to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any employee; no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person or persons having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and no moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts shan be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private con-tractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government naval shipyards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary, such repair, pur-chase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government, except when the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, would, in the opinion of the Secretary, be advantageous to the national defense.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL, I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. Did I correctly understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that this is a committee amendment?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, it is not a committee amendment. It is an amendment which has been in Navy appropriation bills since approximately 1915. It is a prohibition against the stop-watch time studies as practiced in the Navy industrial establishments. It was inserted by the Subcommittee on Navy Appropriations this year and eliminated by a tie vote in the full committee. The amendment simply reinserts the provision in the bill. It has been in all Navy appropriation bills since the late Senator Borah started it in 1912, I believe.

Mr. FLANDERS. The Senator says that the provision has been in the Navy bills since 1912. That is 36 years too long, in my estimation. The Navy, in these words, has been prevented from following accepted and acceptable practices which are followed in practically every other industry in the Nation. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that naval workers are not allowed to strike, as other workers are, and this provision has worked well through two wars. In my opinion, this is a wrong time for the practice to be changed, when we are trying to stimulate work in naval establishments.

I hope the amendment will be adopted. Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. This amendment is a substitute for the entire section 112, is it not?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It substitutes the first four lines. The balance of the section is as printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Saltonstall]. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, a query comes to my mind, very naturally, as I have heard the amendments stated. There are probably 40 as to which there is a hundred percent record, that is, the appropriations have been increased over the amounts carried by the House bill. The query is, Why does it happen that way? What would happen if, when a bill came before the Senate, we found that in a few instances the amounts had been reduced? How does the Senator account for that?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I respectfully reply to the Senator that he is not 100 percent correct.

Mr. TOBEY. How much am I off the beam?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. There are probably three instances in which the amounts have been reduced.

Mr. TOBEY. In 3 out of 40 cases?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. In the short experience I have had as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I would say that the responsibility of the Senate is to see whether the reductions made by the House should be maintained, or whether in the interest of good service in the Navy, Army, or any other branch of the Government, they should be in part restored. Let me call to the Senator's attention the fact that in this instance the Navy requested the restoration of $191,000,000 out of a reduction of $250,-000,000. The bill, as reported to the Senate, restores $125,000,000, or approximately half of what the Navy authorities requested. I would say that the fact that we have restored approximately half is coincidental. The amount turned out to be approximately half.

Mr. TOBEY. Did it ever occur to the Senator from Massachusetts that possibly there is a potential that the parties interested in the legislation let the House put what it will into the bills, knowing that the Senate will increase the amounts? Is there less resistance in the House or in the Senate?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If the Senator from New Hampshire had been present in the meetings of the committee he would agree with me that all the details were worked out. In fact, all day Sunday we considered the requests and made the figures as fair as possible.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Massachusetts knows that there is no personal criticism of my friend. I simply failed to find any reductions. I sometimes wonder if in the life of the Senate of the United States, we shall have an appropriation bill in which the predominant changes are reductions rather than increases.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I hope that will be the case, provided it does not ruin the Government service. I will say to the Senator that over the past 2 years, since I have been following Navy appropriations, certain methods of bookkeeping and accounting have been greatly improved. On the other hand, I warn the Senator that because of the increase in the Air Force requirements, on account of increased ship requirements, and on account, particularly, of the reduction in the "fat" left over from the war, the Navy budget, unless there is a material reduction in Navy service, will be larger next year and in the next 4 years than it is this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference thereon with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Salton-stall, Mr. Bridges, Mr. Brooks, Mr. Robertson of Wyoming, Mr. Tydings, Mr. Green, and Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma conferees on the part of the Senate.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

Mr. AIKEN obtained the floor. Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield? Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Several Senators have inquired about how long the Senate will remain in session tonight. It is the present intention to take up the Economic Cooperation Administration bill at the conclusion of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I was just wondering at what hour the Senator from Nebraska thought we would take up the Economic Cooperation Administration appropriation bill.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinguished Senator from Vermont has told he me would speak about 35 minutes.

Mr. AIKEN. Ordinarily it would take me about 35 minutes to present the pre-liminary statement on Senate bill 2318. I would not refuse to answer questions, but I should prefer to have them post-poned until tomorrow, if my colleagues will agree.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wished to ask the distinguished Senator from Vermont a question or two at the completion of his address this evening. I understood him to say the farm bill would not be taken up until tomorrow. Am I correct?

Mr. WHERRY. It is the unfinished business. I think it would be fair to comply with the suggestion of the distinguished Senator, as his bill has been displaced three or four times, and he has very kindly deferred his explanation and presentation of the bill, and his address will be made tonight. After the Senator from Vermont concludes his remarks, it will be the intention to ask that the long-range agricultural bill be temporarily laid aside and that the ECA bill be taken up.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I hope no one will misunderstand my motive. I am in thorough agreement with the distinguished Senator from Vermont. I merely asked whether after his speech had been concluded the Senate would take up the ECA bill, and postpone further consideration of the farm bill until tomorrow. Am I correct?

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. I agree with the Senator from Vermont, and I appreciate the difficulty he has had. I am in thorough accord with him.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Did I understand correctly the Senator to say that he desired not to be interrupted tonight?

Mr. AIKEN. I should prefer not to have questions asked tonight. I should rather have them put off until tomorrow, so that at the conclusion of the analysis of the bill the Senate may take up the ECA appropriation bill and dispose of that, and then tomorrow morning start in with the long-range farm bill and keep at it until it is concluded.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to postpone my questions.

Mr. AIKEN. I have no intention of being discourteous. If any Senator were urged too greatly to ask a question, I should probably not refuse to yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have a good many questions in mind about the bill, but I shall endeavor to suppress the questions until tomorrow. At that time, however, I shall propound a number of inquiries with regard to the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Vermont hopes that when the Senator from Georgia asks his questions tomorrow, he may receive satisfactory answers.

Mr. RUSSELL. I trust I may.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, last July the Senate made an appropriation of $15,000 to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to enable it to make a study of the trends and needs of agriculture in the United States, and to make recommendations to meet the situation as they found it.

A subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was appointed consisting of seven members, and beginning October 1 we started holding hearings in different parts of the country, as well as in Washington. We heard the representatives of all the major farm organizations, we listened to the representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the State departments of agriculture, we heard about 325 to 350 farmers from all parts of the United States-from Denver east and south. As a result, we made a report of our findings about February 1, which has been placed in the hands of the Members of the Senate, and then as rapidly as possible we formulated Senate bill 2319 to implement the report. We felt that it was useless to say what we found as to the conditions in agriculture in the United States if we did nothing about it.

I wish to say, as I have said before, that all during the work of the subcommittee and the full committee we acted as a unit. No partisanship entered into our deliberations. At no time did we have to have a formal vote or division of opinion in the committee in order to determine what was to go into the report or into the bill. We discussed every problem informally, and agreed without the necessity of having a formal vote.

Senate bill 2318 is the bill of this body itself. It is a bill which was prepared in accordance with the instructions given the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry last July. It was reported out of the committee unanimously, and, as I have said, we have acted unanimously all the way through, from the very beginning; almost 9 months ago.

I shall now undertake a section by section analysis of the bill. I know that many questions will arise in the minds of Senators, and tomorrow I shall be very glad to try to answer all the questions, and I think there will be an answer to most of them at least.

Mr. President, sections 1 and 2 provide for a short title and declaration of policy.

TITLE I-REORGANIZATION

Title I deals with reorganization and reassignment of functions performed by the United States Department of Agriculture—hereinafter called the Department. Soil conservation and other functions requiring direct dealing with farmers are decentralized so as to bring their exercise closer to farmers, provide for greater farmer participation, and to coordinate services at the local level.

ADMINISTRATION OF CONSERVATION AND OTHER PROGRAMS REQUIRING FARMER PARTICIPATION

Section 101 creates a new agency, the Bureau of Agricultural Conservation and Improvement, and centralizes in it, at the departmental level, administration of:

First, functions now administered by the Soil Conservation Service;

Second, functions now administered by the Agricultural Conservation Programs Branch of the Production and Marketing Administration;

Third, other functions related to soil conservation; and Fourth, other functions requiring direct dealings with farmers.

This is in accordance with the testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture before a joint committee of Congress on a long-range agricultural program.

At State, county, and local levels, the major educational, informational, and demonstrational features of these functions will be exercised by the State extension services, and research will be performed by the State experiment stations, which is a reaffirmation of present practice provided for in several legislative acts. Other features will be performed by the State agricultural councils, the county and community agricultural program committees and the county agricultural program executive committees, hereinafter discussed. However, the furnishing of technical assistance and machinery and equipment to soil conservation districts will be performed by the Bureau of Agricultural Conservation and Improvement.

It is not the committee's intention that the Bureau of Agricultural Conservation and Improvement should carry out educational, informational, or demonstrational programs of its own, except insofar as such activities are incidental to the carrying out of its expressly assigned programs. Likewise it is not the intention that the Extension Service will carry out soil and agricultural action programs except insofar as such activities are an integral part of educational, informational, and demonstrational activities.

Regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service are to be abolished, unless the State agricultural councils elect to retain them or establish similar offices between two or more States.

Sections 102 and 104 provide additional (unmatched) funds for the State extension services and experiment stations to carry out any additional functions given them by section 101.

Section 103 sets up an establishment within the Office of Experiment Stations to cooperate with the State experiment stations in carrying out the functions assigned to them by section 101.

At present most of the Soil Conservation Service research work is carried on cooperatively with the State agricultural experiment stations.

COMMUNITY AND COUNTY AGRICULTURAL PRO-GRAM COMMITTEES, COUNTY AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM EXECUTIVE COMMITTEES, AND STATE AGRICULTURAL COUNCILS

At present, pursuant to section 8 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U. S. C. A. 590h (b)). the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter called the Secretary) utilizes local, county, and State committees chosen as provided in that section in administering the agricultural conservation payment programs. Pursuant to section 388 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U. S. C. A. 1388) these same committees are utilized in administering the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. These committees are chosen as follows: First, the farmers in local areas (designated by the Secretary) elect (A) "local committees" and (B) delegates to a county convention; second, the county convention elects a "county committee"; and third, the Secretary appoints a "State committee." Under S. 2318 these committees would be replaced by new organizations to be known as

"community agricultural program committees", "county agricultural program committees", "county agricultural program executive committees", and "State agricultural councils."

I may say that this organizational procedure has the approval of the Department of Agriculture, and for the most part simply writes into law many of the practices which they are already employing.

Under the provisions of section 105 of S. 2318, the local committee would become a "community agricultural program committee."

I want to say here something about the definition of "farm operators." In this section 105 the committee used the term "farm operators" in a broad sense to include sharecroppers and tenants. The term "farm operators" has a narrow connotation in some areas, but the committee had no intention to exclude anyone in the use of this term who receives a substantial part of his income from the land. I am making that explanation now so that if the question of the definition of a farm operator should come up later, it will be plain.

Section 106 provides for a county agricultural program committee consisting of the members of the community agricultural program committees in the county, the agricultural extension agent, and representatives of such soil-conservation districts or other agencies as the State agricultural council may specify. Since S. 2318 was reported your committee has prepared an amendment to this section providing that the county agent shall be ex officio and shall have no vote.

Under the provisions of section 107, each county agricultural program committee elects from among its members a county agricultural program executive committee of not less than three nor more than five members.

Section 108 provides for a State agricultural council, consisting of at least six elected members and three ex officio members, in lieu of the present State committee appointed by the Secretary. Provision is made for election of additional members in the larger States

I want to say here that since the bill was reported out, the committee has decided on an amendment which will be printed and will be available tomorrow, which provides that the Secretary of Agriculture will appoint the members of the State council who are to be nominated by the farmers of the State through their county chairmen. will have to be three persons nominated for each position to be filled by the Secretary. We felt that by using this method we would retain that continuity of the program from the Secretary right straight down through to the farmer. but at the same time, while the Secretary appoints a State council, every member whom he appoints has to be approved and nominated by the farmers of the State before he can be appointed.

The committees and council provided for in sections 105, 106, 107, and 108 assist the Secretary in the administration of soil conservation and other programs requiring direct dealings with farmers. Section 109 makes provision for administrative expenses of the various committees and the State agricultural council and prescribes limitations upon expenditures.

Section 110 limits any one person to membership in one council or executive committee.

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

STATE PLANS

Section 201 provides that no State soil-conservation plan submitted under section 7 (c) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U. S. C. A. 590g (c)) shall be approved by the Secretary except "after consultation with" the appropriate State agricultural council, and unless it contains certain provisions for participation and cooperation by the State agricultural council and the community and county agricultural program committees and executive committees.

The committee has decided upon another amendment at this point, and the Department of Agriculture has suggested that instead of requiring the Secretary to approve the State program after consultation with the State council, that we require him to approve the program upon the recommendation of the State council, which, in our opinion, concentrates a little more authority with the State, although as the bill is written it would be almost impossible for the State, the local, and the national levels to work any way except in full cooperation with one another.

EXTENSION OF CONSERVATION-PAYMENT PROGRAMS

Section 202 extends to December 31, 1950, the period within which conservation payments or grants may be made directly by the Secretary instead of through grants-in-aid to States.

As the bill was set up originally in 1938, it was contemplated that it would operate as a grant-in-aid program. However, only 23 States so far have shown interest enough in having it operate as a grant-in-aid program to enact the necessary legislation. Therefore, we are extending for 2 years more the time in which they can put themselves in shape to operate on a grant-in-aid basis if they see fit. If they do not see fit in 1950, after having 12 years in which to decide. I think we might conclude that they prefer to have it operate as a national program and not bother with the grant-in-aid proposition any longer. However, we did feel that we should give them 2 years more to see if they wanted to operate on that basis.

UTILIZATION OF COMMUNITY AND COUNTY AGRI-CULTURAL PROGRAM COMMITTEES AND EXECU-TIVE COMMITTEES AND STATE AGRICULTURAL COUNCILS

Section 203 amends existing law to provide for utilization in agricultural conservation-payment programs of community and county agricultural program committees and executive committees and State agricultural councils, in lieu of the committees now utilized.

The committees utilized now are set up in accordance with plans promulgated by the Secretary, and for the most part it will be seen that we are simply writing the present method into law. That is the effect anyway, except for the State council, which is now appointed as he sees fit by the Secretary, but which in the future will be appointed by members designated or nominated by the farmers of each State.

LIMITATIONS ON CONSERVATION PAYMENTS AND

Section 204 provides that payments or grants of aid for soil building or conserving practices, whether made under a State plan or by the Secretary, may be made only for practices, first, approved by the Secretary after consultation with the appropriate State agricultural council: and that would be changed to be approved by the Secretary on recommendation of the appropriate State agricultural council; and second, having (except in the case of demonstration or experimental farms) long-term value. Such payments would be divided among landlords, tenants, and sharecroppers on the basis or the relative value of their contributions to such practices. section also provides for a limitation of $1,000 upon the total payments which may be made in any year to any person (except with respect to demonstration or experimental farms); but payment for practices having long-term effect may be distributed over a period of 5 years.

In other words, while the payments are limited to $1,000 in 1 year, yet the farmer might do a $5,000 soil-conservation job and be paid at the rate of $1,000 a year for 5 years. This amount of $1,000 is a controversial figure. Last year the Appropriations Committee restricted the amount which could be paid to any one farmer to $500. This year it is $750. The recommendation of the Department of Agriculture was that it be made $2,500 for any 1 year.

There are good arguments to be made for all these figures. There are some truck farms in the East, large ranches in the West, and large cotton farms in the delta district of Arkansas and Mississippi where the acreage is so large that the payments would amount to several thousand dollars each year, either for the application of lime or for ditching, terracing, or for whatever sort of program the State council authorized payments. I think only 1 percent of the farms of the United States, however, would draw more than $750 a year under the present law. We are not changing the basic soil-conservation law at all in this bill, and we are not changing the basic phases of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

Section 205 amends section 11 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act to substitute references to the community and county agricultural program committees and executive committees, and State agricultural councils for references to the present local, county, and State committees.

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

This is the title dealing with price supports. It differs materially from either the 1938 Agricultural Act or the Steagall amendment in that this plan bases price supports on the supply as well as upon market prices, thus giving flexible price supports.

Section 301 amends section 301 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 in the following respects:

First. The method of computing parity prices would be changed to the extent necessary to give appropriate recognition to changes in relationships between the agricultural commodities themselves occurring since the base period, 1910–14, such as those resulting from the discovery of new uses or new methods of production.

As an example of change in use, during the period from 1910 to 1914 practically no soy beans were produced. Now it is a major crop, involving in excess of 12,000,000 acres. As an example of shift in method of production, or mechanization in production of crops, the best example is probably wheat.

While it is essential that the proper balance be maintained between farm and nonfarm prices, in view of changes in uses and methods of production, any parity price formula will necessarily become an unworkable standard in the course of time, if it does not permit adjustment in the prices of the agricultural commodities as among themselves. In fact, this has already occurred to such an extent that the 1910-14 base-price of the commodity is used in computing the parity prices of only 47 of the 157 items for which parity or comparable prices are now calculated. S. 2318 would provide a formula which, while preserving the 1910-14 relationship between farm and nonfarm prices, will reflect the developments of recent years. Thus, while parity prices on the average would be based on the differences between the 1910-14 and the present prices of things that farmers buy, the new parity price formula in S. 2318 accepts the prices of individual farm commodities for the 10 immediately preceding years as reflecting the current relative supply of and demand for different farm products better than the price relationships between different farm commodities in 1910-14. However, the period 1910-14 is retained as the base period in showing the over-all relationship between the prices of things farmers buy and the prices of farm products. The period of 1910-14 has advantages as a base period for farm products as a group because no large segment of our economy was badly out of adjustment with other segments of our economy at that time due to the absence of war, depression, or seriously disturbed international trade conditions. On the other hand, changes in population, consumption of products, trade, total production, and other factors have had a marked effect in changing the relative demand for different farm products now as compared to the period 1910-14.

PARITY PRICES OF BASIC COMMODITIES

Corn (per bushel): New, $0.953 (10-year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $0.567 times $2.50 equals $1.42; old, $0.642 (present base price) times $2.50 equals $1.60.

Wheat (per bushel): New, $1.22 (10-year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $0.726 times $2.50 equals $1.82; old, $0.884 (present base price) times $2.50 equals $2.21.

Cotton (per pound): New, $0.1808 (10year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $0.1076 times $2.50 equals $0.2659; old, $0.124 (present base price) times $2.50 equals $0.3100.

Peanuts (per pound): New, $0.062 (10-year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $0.37 times $2.50 equals $0.091; old, $0.048 (present base price) times $2.50 equals $0.120.

Rice (per bushel): New, $1.44 (10-year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $0.857 times $2.50 equals $2.12; old, $0.813 (present base price) times $2.50 equals

Tobacco (per pound): Flue-cured, new, $0.336 (10-year average price)<sup>1</sup> divided by $1.68 equals $0.200 times $2.50 equals $0.500; old, $0.229 (present base price)<sup>2</sup> times $2.12 and $0.500; old, $0.229 (present base price) times $2.12 equals $0.485; Burley, new $0.340 (10-year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $0.202 times $2.50 equals $0.505; old, $0.222 (present price) times $2.12 equals $0.471.

PARITY PRICES OF SELECTED NONBASIC COMMODITIES

Cottonseed (per ton): New, $44.60 (10-year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $26.50 times $2.50 equals $66.20; old, $22.28 (present base price) times $2.50 equals

Hogs (per hundredweight): New, $12.50 (10-year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $7.44 times $2.50 equals $18.60; old, $7.28 (present base price) times $2.50 equals $18.20.

Beef cattle (per hundredweight): New, $10.90 (10-year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $6.49 times $2.50 equals $16.20; old, $5.41 (present base price) times $2.50 equals $13.60.

Milk (per hundredweight): New, $2.81 (10year average price) divided by $1.68 equals $1.67 times $2.50 equals $4.18 *; old, $1.60 (present base price) times $2.50 equals

In making these calculations, the following data were used to tie the new parity formula to the 1910-14 base period: The 10-year average of prices received by farmers for their products-1938-47-was 168 percent of the 1910-14 base period, and the May 15, 1948, index of prices farmers paid for products purchased, including interest and taxes, was 250 percent of the 1910-14 base period. The new parity price calculation uses the preceding 10-year average price—1938-47—of the individual commodity to determine the current relationship of the commodity to all farm products sold. The old parity price calculation uses the 1910-14 individual commodity price-unless some other base period has been accepted, as in the case of tobacco-to show the price relationships between farm products.

COMPUTATION OF PARITY PRICES

Using corn as an example, the calculation of parity under the new parity formula is as follows: The 10-year average price of corn-1938-47-was $0.953. Average prices of all farm products during the last 10 years is 168 percent of the average prices of all farm products during the 1910-14 base period. Thus, $0.953 is divided by 1.68 to show the parity price of corn in 1910-14, which would amount to $0.567. Since the prices

July 1939 equals 100. Not adjusted for seasonal trends. of things farmers buy are now 250 percent, or 2.50 times as high as in 1910-14. the current parity price of corn would be 2.50 times $0.567, or $1.42.

In calculating the parity price for corn under the old formula, the actual price of corn from 1910-14 is used, which was $0.642. Since the prices of things the farmer buys are 2.50 times as high as in 1910-14, the 1910-14 price of corn, $0.642, is multiplied by 2.50, which gives $1.60 as the old parity price of corn, as figured under the present method. It would be $1.42 under the new method, 18 cents a bushel less than under the old method. I shall explain why that is not a disadvantage as I go on.

It should be noted that while the parity prices of some products are higher and others lower under the new formula, the average parity price of all commodities will be the same under the old and new formulas. In the change from the old to the new parity formula the parity price of livestock, livestock products, and oil seeds are higher, while parity prices for grain crops are lower. It is because the relationships between prices of individual farm commodities have changed materially since 1910-14 that there is need of revising the parity formula to use current price relationships between individual farm commodities.

A provision in Senate bill 2318, however, provides that where there is a difference between the two parity prices for a product exceeding 5 percent of the old parity price, the adjustment to the new parity will not take place at the rate of more than 5 percent in 1 year. The main reason for that it so there can be no abrupt drop in the parity price of any commodity. The main reason for the lower parity prices for the basic commodities under the new parity formula, except for rice and tobacco. for which the parity prices will be high-er, is the low prices for the other products in the years 1938, 1939 and 1940. For instance, cotton had three 9-cent years-in 1938, 1939 and 1940-as compared to a probable average of 30 cents a pound during the last 3 years. Insofar as the prices in 1948, 1949 and 1950 may be higher than in 1938, 1939 and 1940 for these products, their parity prices under the two formulas will come closer together in the next 3 years, and the new parity for a product may exceed the old if the 10-year average price of the product becomes relatively higher than those of other commodities. The formula provides for the annual adjustment of dropping the first and adding a new year's price to the 10-year average price of farm products.

It is desirable that the new parity prices for livestock and oil seeds be somewhat higher relative to grain prices because 85 percent of the corn crop and a large part of other grains are normally fed to livestock. This change in the relationship of parity prices for livestock and grains will encourage the feeding of grain which is the most desirable means of utilizing grain when supplies become burdensome.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Can it be said that the formula which takes a 10-year period as the criterion might permit or require, as the decade moves up toward a higher 10-year period of prices, that farm prices start upward at a time when the prices of the things the farmers buy would be tending downward, so that one would be moving in the opposite direction from the other, whereas generally they would be expected to move in the same direction?

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator repeat his question, please?

Mr. PEPPER. If the 10-year bracket is the period that influences the parity figure, as you move from a lower-price structure, let us say, up into a decade all of which has high-price structures, you would tend to raise the parity price, under the formula, would you not? The parity price would tend to rise. I was wondering whether there could be a case in which there would be a tendency for farm prices to rise at the time when the prices of the things the farmers buy would have tendency to be falling.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not think so. I think there would tend to be a relationship between the prices of the things farmers buy and the prices they receive for the things they sell, that is that the purpose of parity is to give the same or constant purchasing power to a given amount of farm products.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder whether the Senator from Vermont has an estimate as to the difference in cost of the new program, as now proposed, as compared with the cost of the old program, annually.

Mr. AIKEN. I think there probably could be no accurate estimate of the cost; but it is my belief that the cost of the new program will be lower because it lowers the incentive price of the commodities of which we have too large a We provide here for a lower price-support level for potatoes and eggs and some of the other commodities on which we have been spending a good many millions of dollars. On the whole, I believe it will be a fairly inexpensive program to administer.

Of course, no one can tell for sure. We have had the best agricultural economists in the country, not only in the Department of Agriculture, but those of the farm organizations, and other economists, such as Dr. Black, of Harvard, working with us; and the bill is a result of their combined knowledge, although I must state that they did not always agree, any more than economists in any other line always agree.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The implication of the Senator's answer, then, is that although this program has been modernized and, to use his explanation, has been improved in the light of experience, nevtherless, barring unforeseen happenings, the program will not cost as much to administer as the program as we have had has cost. Is that correct, or, rather, is that the Senator's belief?

Mr. AIKEN. Personally, I am satisfied as to that, for the simple reason that we encourage the production of the items we are short of, and discourage the overproduction of the commodities of which we already have too large a supply.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Vermont said he would yield for questions tomorrow. Is that correct?

Mr. AIKEN. Yes. Mr. WHERRY. I hope the Senator will follow that arrangement.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator is to yield, I have a number of questions to ask, which would lengthen this discussion considerably. I had understood that it would go over until tomorrow. I know that other Senators also have questions.

Mr. AIKEN. I should prefer to have it go over until tomorrow, if that is agreeable to the Senator. I shall take about 10 or 12 minutes more to make my general presentation and analysis of the bill.

Mr. President, I continue with the analysis:

Second, "Parity" as applied to income is redefined for the purpose of establishing a more useful and accurate stand-This change has no substantive

Third. The term "carry-over" as applied to corn, rice, peanuts, and cotton is redefined to include imports. This term was not previously applied to Fourth. The term "normal supply" as applied to corn, cotton, rice, wheat, and peanuts is redefined to represent current requirements more accurately than has heretofore been the case. In defining "normal supply," the estimated exports for the marketing year for which normal supply is being determined and estimated domestic consumption for the preceding marketing year would be used. The allowance for carry-over provided for in the existing definition of "normal supply" remains the same as in the present law, except in the case of cotton, which would be 23 percent in the bill as reported, in lieu of 40 percent in exist-ing law. Since the bill was reported, however, your committee has prepared an amendment which would make this allowance 30 percent, instead of 23 percent. The definition in existing law of "normal supply" is not applicable to peanuts, but the new definition would be made so under the bill. The allowance for carry-over in the case of peanuts would be 15 percent. Provision is made in the bill for necessary adjustments for current trends in consumption and for unusual conditions. The term "normal supply" as applied to tobacco would not be changed.

Fifth. The term "total supply" has been redefined to cover peanuts; and in the case of cotton, wheat, corn, rice, and peanuts, to include imports. The term as applied to tobacco has not been changed.

PRICE SUPPORT

Section 302 contains the price-support provisions of the bill.

Price supports have proven to be an effective and sound device for improving farm prices, influencing production, and, in the case of storable commodities, accumulating reserve stores which have been of great value in times of war and crop disasters. They are an essen-tial part of any well-rounded farm program. The committee devoted a great deal of time and study to this question, in the light of past experience, and arrived at several general principles which we believe should characterize future price-support programs.

First. Price supports should take into account both market prices and the supply of farm products.

Second. Mandatory price-support operations should be limited or conditioned to the storability of the products.

Third. The minimum price-support level (in periods of heavy supply) should be below the desirable long-time price level, in order to encourage producers to shift part of their productive resources to those products in short supply or greatest demand.

Fourth. There is need of giving considerable discretionary power in adjusting the price-support plan to meet changing or unforeseen conditions.

However, there should be discretionary power to establish support levels on any commodity above the mandatory level in order, in time of emergency, to encourage or maintain needed production. An example of that this year is the case of flax, where the Department of Agriculture is supporting the price at 150 percent of parity, because of the acute shortage and the national need.

With these principles in mind, section 302 of S. 2318 would amend section 302 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938—which contains the principal permanent price-support provisions-to provide as follows:

First. Price support of any agricultural commodity through loans, purchases, payments, or other operations would be authorized. This authorization provides the necessary flexibility in the choice of methods to be used in supporting prices. Thus it authorizes not only loans and purchases but also direct payments to farmers. The use of indirect methods such as the development of improved merchandising methods is encouraged. In determining the methods to be used, as well as the other terms and conditions of price-support operations, the Secretary and the Commodity Credit Corporation are required to give consideration to, first, the supply of the commodity in relation to the demand therefor; second, the price levels at which other commodities are being supported; third, the availability of funds: fourth, the perishability of the com-modity; fifth, its importance to agriculture and national economy; sixth, the ability to dispose of stocks acquired through a price-support operation; and, seventh, the ability and willingness of producers to keep supplies in line with Compliance with acreage demand. allotments, production goals, and marketing practices may be required as a condition of price support on either basic or nonbasic commodities.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if I may inquire, does the Senator desire to yield before completing his speech?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has said he would like to finish his speech without interruption.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to finish. I am nearly through. I shall be glad tomorrow to try to answer all the questions that I may be asked pertaining to the

In the case of the basic commodities, cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts, the authority to impose marketing practice requirements as a condition of eligibility for price support would not authorize the imposition of marketing quotas if they have been voted down by farmers, and the acreage allotments used for purposes of eligibility would be the same as those determined pursuant to the marketing-quota provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

Before deciding upon the farm-support schedule, the committee examined the farm price and production data over the past 25 years and found that even with an 85-percent price-support program, let alone a 90-percent support as under the Steagall amendment, that some of our major farm products would have had Federal support about three-fourths of the time over the 25-year period. That is a heavy burden to place on the Treasury and it encourages farmers to produce the things that they are accustomed to producing without considering what the Nation needs. Probably there is no better guide to production needs than a flexible price system that reflects supply and demand conditions, just so price does not fluctuate so widely or so quickly as to bring economic ruin to producers.

A flexible price support schedule varying inversely to supply in like manner will encourage farmers to adjust production

High support prices-near the normal market price-also have the tendency to freeze production or acreages in undesirable patterns rather than to encourage adjustment in production to meet demands.

In the case of the basic commodities price support at from 60 to 90 percent of parity, the minimum level depending upon the relationship of the total supply of each commodity to its normal supply would be required to be made available to cooperators (those who do not exceed farm acreage allotments); except that if marketing quotas have been disapproved by producers the level of price support would be reduced to 50 percent of parity. Your committee felt that this minimum price support of 50 percent should be given even though marketing quotas should be disapproved since the complete lack of price support for a basic agricultural commodity would so seriously lower the income of a particular producer group as to impair the general welfare. If, however, marketing quotas are approved by producers, the level of price support which would otherwise be given to the commodity would be increased under the bill as reported by a minimum of 10 percent of parity, but not beyond 90 percent of parity.

Since reporting the bill the committee has recommended that instead of a premium of 10 percent of parity plus an additional percent to be given by the Secretary if he felt it desirable, the premium for quotas be 20 percent of the support price computed without regard to the premium. It would be 20 percent of the support price but not exceeding 90 percent of parity. Under the bill price support is not required to be made available to noncooperators, but at the Secretary's discretion such support may be provided at levels not in excess of those provided for cooperators.

Third. Price support for nonbasic commodities is discretionary with the Secretary up to a maximum level of 90 percent of parity. It is difficult to provide any procedure for controlling the marketing of certain products in order to make price support effective. Potatoes constitute one of the most difficult problems although the Secretary may prescribe conditions pertaining to compliance and a large percentage of the producers follow the plan, difficulty arises with the nonccoperator who proceeds to dump all of his production on the market. The problem is further complicated because the early, medium, and late potato markets overlap. though the cooperators follow prescribed conditions and may hold their cull potatoes off of the market and receive a minimum price for them, noncooperators may benefit from marketing their entire production. This will tend to help break the market for the cooperators. This difficulty arises because potatoes, unlike tobacco, do not pass through central markets where controls can be exercised. One of the most promising approaches to this problem is that of potato-marketing agreements. Last year such an agreement was developed for Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North Dakota for the marketing of late potatoes. One is being considered by the Maine potato growers for the current year. Also Virginia and North Carolina have developed a potato-marketing agreement for the current year. Potato-marketing agree-ments entered into by the growers promises to be an effective way of holding low-grade potatoes off of the market. The growers who enter into such an agreement will help to make it effective in their localities. If a price-support program for potatoes is developed, the language of the bill would make it possible for the Secretary to give preference to the producers who are operating under marketing agreements.

The price of wool, however, is required to be supported at such level between 60 and 90 percent of parity as the Secretary considers necessary in order to encourage an annual production of approximately 360,000,000 pounds. The present production of wool is approximately 300,000,000 pounds, which is not considered adequate and which places this country in too great a state of dependence upon foreign countries for wool. There has been a consistently decreasing number of stock sheep and lambs on farms and ranges in this country until now we have only thirty and a half million—the lowest since 1867.

Fourth. In case the national interest requires, price-support operations at levels in excess of 90 percent of parity are permitted with respect to either basic or nonbasic commodities.

I have already mentioned flax as this year's example of that.

Fifth. The Commodity Credit Corporation is prohibited from using its funds to carry out any operation to support the price of any nonbasic agricultural commodity which is so perishable in nature as not to be reasonably storable without excessive loss or excessive cost, but this prohibition does not prevent the Commodity Credit Corporation from using its funds to support the price of such perishable commodities by operations with respect to storable commodities processed therefrom. For example the Commodity Credit Corporation could support the price of milk through the purchase of powdered dry milk, or the price of citrus fruit through the purchase of canned concentrated juice. The bill expressly permits direct price support for perishable nonbasic commodities through other means available to the Secretary. Thus section 32 funds would be available for such price support. Since the bill was reported, the committee has recommended an amendment which would make it clear that the Commodity Credit Corporation's facilities could be utilized in carrying out section 32 and school lunch programs, involving the procurement of perishable commodities. The cost of such programs would, of course, be defrayed from section 32 or schoollunch program funds. The basis for differentiating between storable and nonstorable commodities is that on storable commodities the Corporation has a reasonable prospect of avoiding losses by disposing of its inventories during times of shortages or increased demand. The price support operations of Commodity Credit Corporation with respect to the basic commodities have in the aggregate been carried out without loss to the Corporation. Perishable commodities must be disposed of promptly and the losses involved are often great. the yields of the more Moreover. perishable commodities are so variable and so subject to the control of the producer, as by the application of fertilizer, insecticide, and water in the case of irrigated crops, that the acreage planted may have little relationship to production. Section 32 is the recognized medium for the disposal of surpluses of perishable commodities and provides for such disposal largely through donation to charitable institutions and through the school lunch program. It should also be noted that in the case of all the basic commodities, there is in effect a statutory system for adjusting production to demand through the establishment of marketing quotas and penalties.

Sixth. Limitations are imposed upon the price at which Commodity Credit Corporation can sell farm commodities subject to a number of exceptions. These limitations and exceptions are generally comparable to those now in effect and are intended to prevent sales of farm commodities by Commodity Credit Corporation in a manner which would impair price-support operations with respect to such commodities.

MARKETING QUOTAS

Sections 303, 304, 305, and 306 change the conditions which must be determined by the Secretary to exist before marketing quotas can be imposed upon corn, wheat, cotton, and rice. As reported, the sections would provide that whenever the Secretary determines—

First, that the total supply of the commodity for the marketing year beginning in the then current calendar year will exceed the normal supply for such marketing year by more than 15 percent, or Second, that the total supply of the commodity for the marketing year ending in such calendar year is not less than the normal supply for the marketing year so ending and that the average price for the commodity for three successive months does not exceed 70 percent of parity, the Secretary shall proclaim marketing quotas for the marketing year beginning in the next succeeding calendar year.

Since reporting the bill, your committee has reported out amendments to each of these sections which would increase the amount by which total supply must exceed normal supply from 15 percent to 20 percent, and would decrease the requirement with respect to the average farm price from 70 percent of parity to 66 percent of parity, except that in the case of cotton the amount by which the total supply is required to exceed the normal supply would be reduced to 8 percent.

A careful study of available data indicates that the amendments set up comparable conditions of supply and prices as a guide in voting quotas for the different basic commodities.

ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS—IMPORTS

Section 307 requires the Secretary to take imports into consideration in determining acreage allotments for corn, wheat, and rice for the purposes of marketing quotas.

UTILIZATION OF COUNTY AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIA-TIONS AND EXECUTIVE COMMITTEES AND STATE AGRICULTURAL COUNCILS UNDER AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

Section 308 provides for the utilization of the community and county agricultural program committees and executive committees and State agricultural councils in carrying out the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS SECTION 32 FUNDS

Section 401 provides for accumulation. up to $300,000,000, of section 32 funds not currently required for program purposes. Section 32 of the act of August 24, 1935 (7 U. S. C. 612c), appropriates for each fiscal year an amount equal to 30 percent of the customs duties for the preceding calendar year, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to encourage exportation and to increase (by means of diversion programs) domestic consumption of agricultural commodities and products and to reestablish farmers' purchasing power. To the extent that funds annually appropriated by section 32 are not fully utilized during any fiscal year, this provision would permit the balance of the funds not utilized to be carried over to subsequent fiscal years and used for the purpose for which such funds were appropriated. This provision would make it possible to formulate longrange surplus-disposal programs.

PARITY-OTHER STATUTES

Section 403 conforms the definitions of parity contained in other statutes to the definition of parity contained in section 301 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended by S. 2318.

SECTION 22

Section 402 would amend section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act as reenacted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937. The bill is designed to strengthen price-support programs for American agricultural commodities and to prevent their disruption through excessive imports of foreign

The revision of section 22 would carry out recommendations heretofore made by the President to the Congress and more recently requested of this Congress by the Secretary of Agriculture.

In requesting revision of section 22, the Secretary of Agriculture stated:

The field within which the authority granted by section 22 may be exercised is so limited that the authority cannot be of much aid to the Department of Agriculture in discharging its price-support obligations this period of adjustment. If a program of the Department is not undertaken pursuant to one of the three statutes referred to in section 22, the authority conferred by that section may not be utilized to control the importation of an article the importation of which is materially interfering with the successful operation of the program by the Department;

The principal changes contemplated by this section of the bill are:

First. To extend the authority of section 22 so as to cover not only agricultural commodities, but also the products thereof:

Second. To extend such authority so as to cover articles the import of which affects any loan, purchase, or other programs or operations undertaken by the Department of Agriculture (including price support and stabilization operations) with respect to any agricultural commodity or product thereof;

Third. To make the provisions with respect to quantitative limitation restrictions applicable to the total quantity of an article imported during a representative period as determined by the President, rather than to each country's average annual quantity of the article imported during the period from January 1, 1929, to December 31, 1933, as now provided;

Fourth. To authorize the President, by a specific grant of authority, to describe designated articles by physical qualities, value, use, or upon such bases as he determines;

Fifth. To clarify the definition with respect to the fees authorized, which are considered duties for some purposes, as now provided, so that they shall not be considered as duties for the purpose. of granting any preferential concession under any international obligation of the United States, as, for example, our duty preference arrangements with Cuba; and Sixth. To prohibit enforcement of a proclamation under section 22 that would be in contravention of any treaty or international agreement to which the United States is a party.

I understand that this proposed amendment to section 22 has been cleared with the State Department, and we are assured there will be no veto of it this time.

EFFECTIVE DATE

Section 404 provides that the act shall take effect on January 1, 1949, except that section 402 would take effect upon enactment. Present price support provisions under which the basic commodities are supported at 90 percent of parity-921/2 percent in the case of cotton-expire with the crops of such commodities harvested prior to January 1, 1949. The Steagall amendment, under which the so-called Steagall commodities are required to be supported at not less than 90 percent of parity, expires on December 31, 1948.

Since reporting out the bill, your committee has reported out a number of additional amendments, some of which have been discussed in the foregoing analysis. All of the remaining amendments are technical and perfecting in nature with one exception, as follows:

A new section 309 would be inserted. The section would amend section 312 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 to require the Secretary, first, to proclaim a national marketing quota for each marketing year for each kind of tobacco for which a national marketing quota was proclaimed for the immediately preceding marketing year, and, second, to proclaim a national marketing quota for Virginia sun-cured tobacco for each marketing year for which a quota is proclaimed for fire-cured tobacco. This would mean that, once the Secretary proclaims a marketing quota for any kind of tobacco, he is required to proclaim a marketing quota for that kind of tobacco for each succeeding year without regard to the supply conditions presently required by the statute, unless growers vote to discard the quota system. Since marketing quotas have been proclaimed for the marketing years beginning in 1948 for flue-cured, burley, and fire-cured tobaccos, this section would require marketing quotas to be pro-claimed each year hereafter for these three kinds of tobacco, and also for Virginia sun-cured tobacco.

Because of the long period for which tobacco is held to properly age, tobacco presents problems of market supply not found in other commodities.

I shall be glad to discuss that further tomorrow if it has not been made clear.

Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy of my colleagues in bearing with me and giving me an opportunity to present this preliminary analysis of the bill tonight.

I have some amendments, practically all of them technical in nature, we might say, relating to crossing "t's" and dotting "i's," which I shall submit so that they may be printed and be available

The PRESIDING OFFICER. amendments will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. So long as the Senate does not get out of patience.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall not take any time. I merely wish to send to the desk sundry amendments to the bill which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. amendments will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. WHERRY and Mr. MAYBANK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield the floor? Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. On behalf of the senior Senator from California [Mr. Downey] and myself, I send to the desk an amendment to be offered to the bill, to be printed and to lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. amendment will be received and printed and will lie on the table.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont a ques-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Vermont technically still has the floor. He did not yield the floor. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, as I understand this long-range agricultural bill, insofar as cotton is concerned and so far as the Commodity Credit Corporation is concerned, it makes a reduction in cotton parity from 90 percent to 75 percent, with an additional 4-cent reduction and an additional variation in regard to other commodities.

Mr. AIKEN. It would mean 75 percent for normal supply. Beginning last year the supply was just a trifle over normal. It would probably be normal next year.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Vermont will admit that the Commodity Credit Corporation made over $100,000,-000 on cotton last year, as stated by C. C. Smith, the chairman of the Commodity Credit Corporation. In other words, the parity on cotton is going to be reduced from 90 percent to 75 percent?

Mr. AIKEN. No, not in 1 year. We provide that parity cannot be reduced over 5 percent in any 1 year. In the meantime, the bad years of cotton, when it brought only 9 cents, 1938, 1939, and 1940, will be dropped from the 10-year period, and the 30-cent years will be added, so that the parity price of cotton is very likely to come up, and possibly in 3 years might exceed what the parity would be under the old method of computing it. I have no figures with me tonight, but I shall be glad to produce them tomorrow.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator will remember the late John Bankhead, of Alabama, who took such an interest in the cotton growers, and Representative Steagall, who was a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives. The Senator from Vermont well knows that cotton was not at parity in 1939 and 1940, but also was not during the war years, 1941, 1942, and 1943, and am I now to be told. coming from a cotton State, that the plan is further to reduce the parity on cotton, after the cotton farmer has been robbed of millions of dollars, so that the Government can ship it to Japan to run MacArthur's business, and to make a record for the Army and to run the Govern-ment of Japan? The farmer seems to be forgotten. I merely wish to say to the Senator from Vermont that I think it is an outrage and a disgrace that cotton should be reduced and the loan should be reduced from 90 to 75 percent in the face of what has happened to cotton.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I refuse to yield further, but I do hope the Senator from South Carolina will not forget the efforts I have put in to help the cotton growers when they needed it most, and I say to him tonight that this new parity formula I know will increase the price of cottonseed 20 percent, and will, I believe, more than offset the slight reduction in cotton. But I refuse to yield further.

Mr. MAYBANK. If I may make a remark as one coming from a cotton State, the cottonseed is only used to pay the expense of ginning and baling the cotton and the picking of cotton. That has nothing to do with the price of raw cotton.

FOREIGN AID APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily set aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6801, the so-called Economic Cooperation Administration appropriations.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6801) making appropriations for foreign aid for the period beginning April 3, 1948, and ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, at this time I wish to present from the Senate Committee on Appropriations the recommendations for foreign aid appropriations for the coming year. It is my belief that the Senate will not consider during this year a bill of greater import to our economy or of more lasting significance to the security of this Nation and the world.

In its simplest terms, the appropriation which the committee recommends calls for the expenditure of American dollars to aid the recovery of Europe and to extend help into many war-ravaged areas of the world. In its broader aspects, however, this bill provides for the shipment of American production and wealth at a cost of personal sacrifice of every citizen of the Republic. The appropriation is a venture in faith on the part of this Nation. It expresses the belief that the freedom-loving people of the world, by sharing their resources and their strength, can withstand the tyrannous forces of a philosophy and government that holds in slavery the peoples of more than half of Europe. The appropriation is recommended because there is in America a widespread conviction that the free people of the world must stand or fall together and that a portion of the resources of this Nation should be put temporarily at the disposal of other free peoples until the non-Communist governments can recover their mutual strength.

The great bulk of the money will be distributed in western Germany and the 16 nations of Europe who were signatories at the Paris Conference. Members of the Senate Appropriations Committee traveled during the past year through these various countries. We have seen at first hand the conditions which we seek to correct through this appropriation. We have seen the shattered cities and towns that were destroyed by a war which has disrupted also the normal patterns of industry and trade. We have seen people in Europe who have turned to the false promises and early disillusionment of communism because the difficulties of ordinary living have made them lose confidence in the institutions of free government. Members of the committee believe, as most Americans believe, that free governments can be maintained in Europe if two conditions are fulfilled. The first condition is that the European nations must make a total effort to help themselves. The second condition is that some limited outside assistance be given them to start again the flow of raw materials, the movement of goods in trade and the stabilization of inflated currencies.

Obviously the resources of the United States are not adequate to meet the full needs of the world. Such aid as we can extend to nations on whose strength we can count in future years must be extended wisely and with great caution. Those of us who have seen Europe since the war have seen also vast stores of American equipment dumped in foreign fields. We have seen the production and wealth of American workers spent to no good purpose whatsoever. I can conceive of no more tragic a conclusion than that this appropriation should follow the pattern of past appropriations made by this Government in some instances for foreign aid. If such should be the case, then we should be guilty of having exploited human hope to waste the substance of this Nation.

With adequate precautions on the part of Congress and with responsible administration by those to whom these funds will be entrusted, no such consequences need occur. In the hope that such consequences will not occur the committee presents its program.

Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Appropriations recommends that the sum of $6,125,710,228 be provided for assistance to the people of foreign countries during the coming year. This amount is $408,000,000 below the budget estimates for the program. It is $245,-000,000 above the amounts allowed by the House action on the foreign-aid bill.

To present a proper perspective of the action of the Senate Appropriations Committee in relation to that of the House, however, it will be necessary to state in greater detail the differences between the bill as it passed the House and the bill that is recommended to the Senate. Actually, the committee recommendation, if adopted, would increase expenditure under this program by an indefinite amount, in excess of $1,100,000,000. The effect of the possible Senate action upon the expenditures for foreign aid can be stated in terms of the amounts recommended for the European recovery program and for China.

FOR THE EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAM

The budget estimate requested $5,300,-000,000 for 17 countries for 12 months. The House allowed $5,055,000,000 for 21 countries for 15 months.

The committee recommends the sum of $5,055,000,000 for 18 countries for 12 months.

FOR THE CHINA PROGRAM

The authorization provided for $463,-000,000 for 12 months, of which $125,000,-000 was for grants sought by the Chinese Government.

The House allowed $400,000,000 for 15 months to be expended in accordance with the provisions for Greek-Turkey aid.

The Senate Appropriations Committee recommends that $460,000,000 be provided for 12 months, of which $125,000,000 shall be given in grants for military and other requirements of the Chinese Government.

The committee recommends that other programs which are provided for in this bill be furnished the following amounts:

Government and relief in occupied areas should have $1,325,000,000, of which $125,000,000 is earmarked for recovery in the Japanese area, and the remainder is designated for the prevention of disease and unrest in Germany, Austria, and the Japanese area.

The sum of $250,000,000 should be applied to the Greek-Turkey program, which is an increase of $50,000,000 over the House amount and a decrease of $25,000,000 below the budget estimate.

The full budget estimate of $70,710,228 is recommended for the use of the International Refugee Organization of $20,000,000 is allowed for the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, which is $40,000,000 below the amount allowed by the House.

Although this bill is reported in the rush of the closing days of this session, and is presented to the Senate within a week of the vote in the House, the bill has had careful study by the Senate Appropriations Committee. We began our hearings more than a month ago without any bill before us and with no knowledge of what action the House would take. Such a procedure is highly unusual and to my knowledge has only the precedent that the Appropriations Committee made when we proceeded in advance, without waiting for House action, to study the interim aid bill.

In the committee hearings testimony was offered by many witnesses of the Government, by the individuals who will administer the funds appropriated, and by private citizens who the committee felt had pertinent experience and knowledge.

There was evidenced strong support for the aims and purposes of the foreign-aid programs, and particularly for the European recovery program, but in all the great detail of testimony submitted to the committee there was little information on which the committee could base a firm, precise, stable, and undisputed appropriation figure.

Let me discuss with the Senate very briefly the type of evidence on which we have had to recommend this appropriation.

We were given detailed analyses of the type of goods which might move from the Western Hemisphere to the participating countries of western Europe. It was on this trade movement that the estimates for the program were computed by the executive branch of the Government, yet the committee was told, also, that ECA purchases will not be limited to the Western Hemisphere and that the dollars we appropriate in this bill may be spent anywhere on earth.

The committee was given an estimate that $22,000,000 will be required out of ECA funds to meet shipping costs and other dollar deficits during the next 12 months. The figure was derived by deducting miscellaneous dollar income from the total dollar payments for shipping of the participating nations. It was testified that, without reservation, the $22,000,000 figure is utterly unrealistic as a statement of the payments which the Administrator of the program must make to move the goods furnished.

The justifications by which the committee had to determine the amount of the appropriation were extremely general. We were not asked to provide money to purchase any particular goods or to meet any specified needs. In effect, we were told that we were buying recovery and the price tag was established by a deficit in the balance of payment arising out of projected trade patterns. The proponents of the program did not justify the expenditure of $5,300,-000,000 on a reasonable basis. Instead, the committee has been challenged to justify a cut in a program that has shifted its figures constantly as the Congress has questioned the propriety of the various component parts.

From the testimony which the committee heard on the European recovery program, the members of the committee felt that for many reasons the executive branch of the Government had set some of its estimates too high.

In the list of 50 items studied there were many instances where it appeared that shipments for the coming year, in view of past European imports, were unrealistically large. Such commodities as tobacco, petroleum, agricultural machinery, fertilizer, fats and oils, and cotton were listed to move from the Western Hemisphere in relatively large quantities.

There was a fundamental doubt in the minds of many members that $4,000,000,000 can be expended wisely in the short space of a year, and there is a remaining fear that expenditures may be forced, and will result in a repetition of UNRRA tactics with wholesale dumping of American wealth in foreign lands. In this respect the committee presents the four-billion-dollar figure with hopes that the Watchdog committee, so-called, established in the authorization act can be successful as a deterrent to unwise expenditure.

Over the months in which the justifications for the foreign-aid program have been before this Congress the executive branch has shifted its studies constantly, obtaining ever-new subtotals out of the same set of facts, yet remaining always within the same $5,300,000,000 grand total of the program. Despite the vast improvement in crop prospects in Europe, imports of food and tobacco were estimated to total $308,000,000 more in March than they were estimated in December. The proposed imports of seven nations were reduced by $800,000,-000 in late revisions of the estimates, and the estimated needs of the remaining nations were increased by the same amount.

It is the earnest hope of the Senate Appropriations Committee that more realistic justifications will be presented for any appropriation to be made after next January for further expenditure in 1949 and in 1950. There is no reason why this appropriation cannot be sought in terms of expenditures that somebody actually proposes to make. The Congress should be asked to provide fixed sums for relief, for development of power, for shipping costs, for inland transportation, for administration, and for various recovery items. There is no reason why this Congress should be asked to appropriate money freely for worldwide expenditure for any commodity under the sun on the basis of studies of possible trade movement between the western Western Hemisphere and

The funds the committee recommends at this time are extremely generous. It is the largest recommendation for an appropriation ever made in peacetime for foreign aid in the history of our country. If the money is expended wisely, it may result in savings in our national military budget. If the recovery program is successful to any appreciable degree, it will open certainly whole new areas of trade and enterprise to American commerce.

With faith that a better world can be built out of the hopes of mankind; with hope for the promise of restored stability of European government and trade; with hope for a strong United States in a prosperous and peaceful family of democratic nations, the Senate Committee on Appropriations presents this bill to the Senate for action and asks for its passage.

Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "for", to strike out "the period beginning April 3, 1948, and ending June 30, 1949" and insert "such periods as are specified herein ending not later than June 30, 1949."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title I—Economic Cooperation", on page 2, line 1, after the word "until", to strike out "June 30" and insert "April 2."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this is the key amendment in the bill, and I shall ask for the yeas and nays, because I think it is highly important that the position of the Senate should be unmistakably plain.

I wish to say in a sentence to the able chairman of the Appropriations Committee that I am personally profoundly grateful to him and his committee for the good faith and good spirit in which they have approached this entire problem. It has never occurred to me that the figures which came down in the estimates were untouchable. As the Senator may recall, in my own plea to the committee I was chiefly urging against the general horizontal cut of more than $1,000,000,000 involved in the pending amendment, rather than challenging any of the specific figures.

I would not undertake to say that I was in accord with the committee in respect to all the various amendments which it made; but, speaking generally and over all, I think the report is a highly acceptable one under all the circumstances, and I feel that the committee has proceeded in full accord with the tremendous undertaking which we are underwriting in the bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. On behalf of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, I thank the distinguished Senator from Michigan for his statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 2, line 1.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "International Children's Emergency Fund," on page 5, line 17, after the numerals "1948", to strike out "$60,-000,000" and insert "$20,000,000."

Mr. MORSE. I would like to have an explanation by the distinguished chairman of the committee in regard to that reduction, and I perhaps can save time by asking him whether I am correctly advised that one reason for the reduction from $60,000,000 to $20,000,000 for the International Children's Emergency Fund was the belief or finding of the committee that a certain portion of the fund was to be used behind the iron curtain.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is correct. More than 60 percent of it last year went to countries behind the iron curtain. The committee found no evidence that there was any guaranty that the money going behind the iron curtain went to children of parents who were free with respect to their own political affiliations. In other words, the assistance, according to many of the reports which the committee received, went to children who were affiliated in some way with families who were Communist or were in favor with the governments, not to the children of parents who favored the democracies or who had no Communist feelings. This in no way shuts off all the funds. It allows a fund to go forward, but it does not provide them with as much money as they would like to have; and I have stated one of the major reasons for that.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask a second question of the Senator in regard to this particular item, referring to the information which I am sure many Senators have been receiving concerning the need for an increase in the funds for use among children in countries which are not behind the iron curtain. I inquire as to whether or not the committee is satisfied that $20,000,000 will meet the needs of children in the countries which are not behind the iron curtain?

Mr. BRIDGES. I believe the answer to the question is yes. The fund already has a substantial carry-over. For instance, of the amount we appropriated last year there is a balance of something over $12,-000,000, and certain other amounts are going into the fund from UNRRA. All in all, in cash and in matching funds, there is available at this time around $57,-000,000. So there are adequate funds to work with, so the next objective should be to avoid indiscriminate feeding of those behind the iron curtain who are pro-Communist.

Mr. MORSE. I do not want to take any more time at this late hour, other than to call the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee to my hope that when this matter goes to conference-and it is bound to be the subject of discussions in conference—that the Senate conferees will keep in mind, as I am sure they will, that there could hardly be a better expenditure of American dollars under the economic recovery program than the expenditure of American money for the benefit of the thousands upon thousands of homeless and orphan children in the devastated areas of Europe, the solution to whose problems after all will determine in large measure I think on the way Europe will go in the future. I certainly hope-and I shall take the Senator's word for it-that in conference the committee will make absolutely certain that all the money actually needed-and I think if we err at all on this item, we should err in the direction of over-generosity rather than of parsimony-for the help of those thousands of children will be made available. I would rather save elsewhere in the bill than save on giving aid to children, who, after all, are going to become the adults of Europe in a very few years, and will determine in large measure future American-European relations.

Mr. BRIDGES. I may say to the Senator from Oregon that there are $5,300,-000,000 earmarked for children and adults of the participating countries. Much of that, of course, will find its way to the children of the free countries as well. This fund goes to the United Nations, and through United Nations participation must go to the countries all over Europe, including those behind the iron curtain. Reports of dozens and dozens of cases have come to us that this money is being used to foster Communists in countries behind the iron curtain, while others who believe in freedom and who are tinged with anticommunism in those countries are prevented from sharing in those funds, due to Government controls. There are certain steps taken by the Administrator to prevent abuses, insofar as possible, and they are making progress in that direction. but nevertheless that situation continues on a large scale.

Mr. MORSE. I am sure the Senator from New Hampshire knows the junior Senator from Oregon does not want any of our money used to aid communism. On the other hand, if we can work out the checks within the United Nations that would make it possible even for us to help children behind the iron curtain itself, I would be willing to see some American dollars used for that purpose, if we could have at least some reasonable assurances that it would have an influence in leading the child away from communism, rather than have to implant in him more deeply doctrines of communism.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Lyield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, reference to page 3 of the committee report shows that the budget estimate for the Economic Cooperation Administration is $5,300,000,000 for 17 countries for 12 By the House action the months. amount is $5,055,000,000 for 21 countries for 15 months. The committee recommendation is $5,055,000,000 for 18 countries for 12 months.

In other words, Mr. President, the Senate committee has increased by a considerable amount the amount of the appropriation for the Economic Cooperation Administration, and yet the item now under consideration shows that the committee reduced by $40,000,000 the appropriation for the International Children's Emergency Fund.

Mr. President, I shall not ask for a vote, and I shall not offer any amendment, because I am hopeful that the matter can be worked out in conference, but I wish to say that it is a sad commentary upon this bill that we increase by millions the amounts available for the 18 countries of western Europe, and diminish by one-third the amount of the appropriation for the 20,000,000 hungry children of the world. What will be the comment by those who look at the action of the Senate, when they see that we have increased one fund and have diminished another that actually goes to the survival of 20,000,000 children of the world?

I mentioned in the debate on the ERP bill that the International Children's Emergency Fund needed $250,000,000; not $60,000,000, but $250,000,000. That is needed in order to give one meal a day, with matching by the countries affected, to the 20,000,000 hungry children of the world. What is to be the answer to those children, Mr. President-that we have not enough money to help them to get one meal a day?

In instance after instance we claim we are supporting the United Nations, that every individual unilateral action we take is in support of the Unifed Nations, and yet when we look at the facts we find that when we cooperate at all with the United Nations we do it only to a very limited degree. It is an international agency functioning under the United Nations organization, yet we have given them only a pittance. ident, it will not make any difference at this time, but some day someone reading the report will pass judgment upon what we do.

I simply want to register a protest against a policy which allows almost unlimited and uncounted millions for certain purposes, and nothing but penury, poverty, continued hunger, and continuing lack of cooperation with the United Nations to furnish one meal a day to the 20,000,000 hungry children of the world

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Florida, who speaks of hundreds of millions of dollars going to the participating countries, that a substantial part of the amount will go to the orphans and other children. very large part of the appropriation will find its way into a program to strengthen the children of Europe. Sixty percent of the fund last year went to countries behind the iron curtain. On the day when anyone can stand on the floor of the Senate, or come before the Appropriations Committee, and say that a child born to non-Communist parents, in one of those countries behind the iron curtain, will receive an even break with children of Communist parents, I shall be willing to support appropriations. But it makes me sick and tired to appropriate money that helps to promote communism in those countries, and at the same time. have it denied to the only friends we have in those particular countries. How must it seem to a father or mother who desires an element of freedom and does not want to bow down to Soviet domination, to find that their children are denied food from the United States, while food supplied through the International Children's Fund goes to children of Communists in slave states?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I vield.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator tell me what children are not included?

Mr. BRIDGES. In the International Children's Fund?

Mr. LANGER. are not included? Yes. What children

Mr. BRIDGES. Those participating in the fund last year were children in Albania, Australia, Austria, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Finland, France, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Luxemburg, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Rumania, South Africa, Switzerland, United Kingdom, Uraguay, and Yugoslavia.

Mr. LANGER. I take it that the children in Germany are not included?

Mr. BRIDGES. The children in Germany are not included in this appropri-

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. May I inquire of the able Senator whether, under this amendment, all children in Communist countries will be excluded from the relief?

Mr. BRIDGES. No. All we did was to reduce the amount. We did not offer any amendment to exclude them.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the amount was cut from $60,000,000 to $20,-000,000, and the same countries which have been given relief heretofore will continue to receive it?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes. Because we have no control over that. It is a United Nations program. We put the money into an International Fund which is administered by the United Nations. have no control over where the money

Mr. LUCAS. I do not quite see under what theory we should make a contribution to children in outright Communist countries.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not, either; but, as a matter of fact, the only way we can prevent that is to make no contribution, because we are only one of the United Nations, and, although we supply most of the money, we cannot exercise a veto over the Fund. Therefore we must either withdraw from it, or continue our participation.

Mr. LUCAS. It seems to me that $60,-000,000 for the relief of children is a small sum, to begin with, if it is properly distributed. If we cannot have it dis-tributed to those to whom it should go, to people who are friendly to our cause, it strikes me that we should establish an organization of our own to the end that we make a contribution of $60,000,000 or more to children in the nations which are in sympathy with our ideals.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will say to the Sen-ator from Illinois that I am very willing to appropriate $60,000,000 and more than that in $5,300,000,000 to go to children in countries which are participating in the European recovery program, but I am unwilling to throw the money to countries behind the iron curtain, unless I have assurance that the children of parents who love and want freedom will receive an even break with the other children.

Mr. LUCAS. I have great respect and compassion for every child, wherever he might be, but I definitely know that the child that is tutored under the Communist regime will grow up to be a Communist. That is a certainty. However, I would not hesitate to give to children in countries controlled by the Communists who resist communism if I knew they were getting the relief-that I seriously question?

Mr. BRIDGES. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wish to suggest that probably the United Nations itself, in the distribution of this fund, is not free to discriminate against any of the members of the United Nations, and a number of the nations to which reference has been made here are members of the United Nations, and therefore theoretically are on the same basis with other nations. I doubt whether the United Nations itself would feel authorized to discriminate against the children of these particular countries because they happen to be behind the iron curtain, but are still members of the United Nations. and must be dealt with as such. Therefore the only way by which we could control that probably would be in the reduction of the amount.

I deeply appreciate the inadequacy of the sum of $20,000,000, even for the nations which are sympathetic with us and on our side in the controversy. Yet the $60,000,000 probably would have to be distributed under the United Nations in approximately the same proportion as it has been heretofore, because the countries are members of the United Nations, and they would not feel justified in discriminating.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator has the figures at hand, will he tell us what the total amount appropriated for the International Children's Fund has been for the present fiscal year, during the time of the existence of the organization?

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator mean by the United States?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; by the United States.

Mr. BRIDGES. A hundred million dollars was authorized, and $40,000,000 has already been appropriated by the There are still $60,000 .-United States. 000 authorized, but we are recommending an appropriation of $20,000,000.

Mr. PEPPER. Here is the figure I wish to call the Senate's attention. On page 12 of the committee report the following appears:

This year the Children's Fund had an aption under Public Law 84 of $40,000,-000 to be matched with funds of other nations in the feeding of children. Under its original matching formulas the fund was able to distribute only $15,000,000 of the amount awarded by the United States.

That means that only $15,000,000 was actually employed, because the other countries could match only $15,000,000. So we put up only $15,000,000.

I continue to read from the report:

A revision of the matching formula in the passage of the ECA authorization bill enabled the fund to distribute in the past few months an additional $12,652,364.

That makes a total of not quite $28 .-000,000 we have actually disbursed. I read further:

However, an unobligated balance of $12 -347,636 remained in the fund as of May 1, 1948. In addition to funds directly appropriated by the Congress, the Children's Fund has been the recipient of several million dollars arising out of the liquidation of UNRRA. Money from this source continues to be received even at this late date.

What I wanted to suggest was, would the Senator say I was correct if I supposed that, let us say, $75,000,000 would be the outside limit of all the United States has thus far contributed to this International Children's Emergency Would I be in error if I should say $75,000,000 was the outside limit?
Mr. BRIDGES. We have not given

We gave $40,000,000 in an appropriation last year, of which there still remains in the fund $12.652.364.

Mr. PEPPER. That is the point I wanted to make. Now we are cutting it down to $20,000,000, in addition to what has been appropriated in the past. I do not think anyone would question the fact that this international organization said there were from twenty to thirty million needy children in the world, that the funds should be made available on a matching basis. I heard on the floor of the Senate that the leader of the International Children's Emergency Fund said the children were having good meals, that the Organization was getting good cooperation from all these countries, and was gradually expanding the program. Yet the record convicts us—of course not with any evil design—on the facts and the figures, even with this appropriation, of not having made $100,000,000 available to feed the twenty to thirty million hungry children in the world.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me point out to the Senator that this is just one fund. The United States has been donating billions and billions and billions of dollars over the world, some $23,000,000,000. since the war ended; and I might say to the Senator that a very large part of that has gone to feed the people of the world, a large percentage of whom have been children. So children all over the world have been among the prime beneficiaries of this very generous aid by the United States. This is just one particular project.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, Mr. President, but if the Senator will allow me, I think it is substantially accurate at least to say that that was the UNRRA program, under which that kind of relief was distributed. The children's emergency fund came along as the successor to the UNRRA program.

I am not talking about the children in only one part of the world. I am talking about a child, whether it is black, or yellow, or brown, or red, or white, whereever it is under God's shining stars.

Mr. President, the able Senator has referred to the fact that some of these children are behind the iron curtain. I wonder if it is not a fact that in the memory of Senators on this floor there was nothing that so embittered the German population, probably nothing that gave Hitler more fuel for his evil designs, than for him to be able to point to the fact that the Allies kept a blockade around Germany's coast after the end of World War I and starved the German children. I wonder whether this odious communism, which we hope will at some time, like a pest, pass from the earth, will be more aided and expedited in its passage and dissolution by making friends out of children whereever they are.

I do not question the motives of the committee, of course, but I do question the policy of showing the world that we have $5,000,000,000 to spend upon the economic recovery of 18 western European countries, but could not even match the House appropriation to meet the hunger of the world's children.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator from New Hampshire and the Committee on Appropriations on what they have done with this appropriation. I think they have performed an exceptional service, and I thank the chairman and all the members of the committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am grateful to the Senator for his comment.

Mr. HATCH. But I am wondering if the committee has not made a mistake in this particular item. It occurs to me a grave and serious mistake may be made right here. In the first place, we are going to herald throughout the world that the chief reduction made is in the children's fund

Everything that has been said here tonight about hungry children is, of course, appealing to all of us, but I wish to suggest to the Senator and to the Senate that merely because a country is behind the iron curtain is no sign at all that the people of that country are Communists, or that any considerable number of them Take, for instance, the country of Poland, a country behind the iron curtain, or take Czechoslovakia, which is now behind the iron curtain. We can take nearly every one of the countries behind the so-called iron curtain and find that from 85 to 90 percent of the people are opposed to communism. It is only the very small minority, which has obtained control of the government by police methods, and by forcing their will upon the great mass of the population, that belongs to the Communist class. The children of those people who are not Communists are discriminated against because they happen to be behind the iron curtain.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will permit, they are the very ones who do not get the food when it is sent into those countries.

Mr. HATCH. We cannot send food into Poland.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly not. Mr. HATCH. But the great majority

Mr. HATCH. But the great majority of the children of Poland are from among those who are opposed to communism.

Mr. WHERRY. And they are the very ones who do not get the food when it is sent in there. I was over there and saw the conditions.

Mr. HATCH. If I knew that they would not receive the food, I would agree with the position taken by the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator brought UNRRA into the discussion. UNRRA was mentioned.

Mr. HATCH. I did not bring it up.

Mr. WHERRY. It was brought up in the discussion. I wish to say that I should like to support the children's fund. I certainly would on the basis of the humanitarian plea which is made to us. But the argument the distinguished Senator from New Mexico is making is the very argument by reason of which the committee did not increase the fund, but reduced it. The reason why the reduction was made was because those to whom the Senator would like to give the food over there, those who are holding out against communism, will not receive the food. We cannot reach them. I was in Russian-occupied territory. I went to the city of Wiener Neustadt, 50 miles inside the Russian-occupied territory, and I saw the conditions which prevailed there. I tell the Senate that in the distribution by UNRRA those who opposed communism were being discriminated against in the matter of food that was being distributed. I saw the discrimination with my own eyes.

Mr. President, I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and I supported the committee in its action. have a great deal of sympathy for the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], who in his heart wants to help the children. So do I. I also wish to endorse what the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] said. With all the power at my command, I endorse the statement made by the chairman of the committee, who said that if we can be assured that the people we desire to help will receive the food, we would provide it. If I were certain of it, I would vote for any appropriation the Senate might want to make.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I had not intended to yield. I wanted to get through with what I had to say as quickly as possible. The hour is late. I merely wanted to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a grave and serious mistake may be made right here and now. I will say when the word penetrates into Poland, into Czechoslovakia, and the other countries behind the iron curtain that these funds have been cut off, it may result in the making of Communists out of 85 to 90 percent of those who are this day fighting against communism as best they can, and who in the future hold the hope to overthrow the communistic governments under which they live.

Mr. BRIDGES. I may say to the Senator from New Mexico, whom I know is very sincere in what he says, that a great deal of the information which came to us formed the basis upon which we took action. The information which came to us from Czechoslovakia, from Poland, from Yugoslavia, and from other nations was that the children of those who are not in the Communist clique running the government right down to a village level, although hungry and in squalor and in desperate circumstances, did not receive the food that was sent to nourish them, while the little children of the Communists and their followers received That was one of the reasons why we took the action we did. I do not now know how we can help relieve that situation. The Senator was fair when he said we might or might not be making a mistake by the action we now propose to take.

Mr. HATCH. I know the Senator from New Hampshire does not want to make a mistake, and certainly if the money is going to the Communist children, whereas the children of non-Communists would be discriminated against. none of us would want to do anything that would result in such discrimination. But I am not at all sure that that is what is happening. I am not a member of the committee. I have not had the advantage of the information the committee has had. But with what little knowledge I possess of the conditions I feel that a grave mistake is being made. While there will be no yea-and-nay vote on the amendment, I personally now register my protest and disapproval of the Senate amendment, and express the hope that the House figure will remain in the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Did the Senator from New Hampshire receive any evidence on the situation in Finland? I am very much concerned with Finland, because the information I have received is that the Finnish children need this help desperately. The people of Finland have been 100 percent loyal to the things we believe in. I want to be very careful that we do not overlook some of the people who are trying to make this fight, by cutting this aid too fast and too low. I have not received the latest information on the subject, but I want to raise the question with the Senator from New Hampshire with respect to Finland, so that when the conferees meet they will look into that question, so that we may not make the mistake which the Senator from New Mexico has spoken of, and which he fears might be made.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that even with the cut which the committee made, assuming it will stand, that with the money the fund is carrying over the organization will have more money to spend next year than it spent this year.

Mr. SMITH. I was told recently by a representative of the fund that they have just $4,000,000 now in the bank; that that is all they have to use.

Mr. BRIDGES. If that is what the Senator has been told, it is different from what the committee has been told. If the information to you is true, then testimony presented to us was false.

Mr. SMITH. I have attempted to get the accurate figures, but I have not been able to do so

Mr. BRIDGES. If they falsified the records to us. then, so far as I am concerned, they will never get another cent until such time as we learn the true situation. They seem to have said to the Senator, on the one hand, that they have but $4,000,000 left, but they certified to us they have over $12,000,000. If there is such a discrepancy, then someone is committing a very grave breach of truth. I believe in dealing with people who tell the truth. If they cannot tell the truth to us, of course, we cannot have any faith in them.

Mr. President, let us clearly under-stand the issue. We have dished out $23,000,000,000 for foreign aid since the war ended. We have shown ourselves to be the most generous Nation on the face of the globe. We have given aid to peo-ple all over the world. We have helped hundreds of millions of people, and tens of millions of children have been fed by reason of the appropriations we have made to aid people in foreign countries. We did not cut out the children's fund altogether. We are willing to continue it. But we cannot control the United Nations. If the committee could be sure that the children of those who have freedom in their hearts, children who are hungry and cold and who live in poverty and squalor were not going to be denied, but would receive the same aid that is given to the children of Communist parents, then we would have taken a different attitude. But as it was we left the children's fund sufficient money so that next year they will have more money to spend than they did this year.

(Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President—— The PRESIDING OFFICER. All in favor will say "Aye."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield. Mr. MORSE. The Senator has been very helpful to me in presenting facts on this matter of which I was not aware when the debate started, and I think I have two more questions to which I am going to seek to obtain an answer from the Senator and I know he will cooperate with me in giving the answers. Am I correct in my understanding that this is the only part of the bill that involves the appropriation to any United Nations organization?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; more than $70,-000,000 is provided for the International Refugee Organization, which we left as budgeted, which was the exact amount requested.

Mr. MORSE. There are two appropriations then in the bill to divisions of the United Nations.

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. And this one affecting the children involves a cut from $60,- 000,000 to $20,000,000. Now I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey if it is not true that when we appropriate the $20,000,000 and assume that the $20,-000,000 stands in conference the same proportion of the $20,000,000 will go supposedly to children behind the iron curtain that would go to them if we appropriate the $60,000,000. We are in no way changing the fact that we are aiding children behind the iron curtain who may be of Communist heritage except we are not giving so much money of the total program?

Mr. BRIDGES. That is correct. might say that the moral effect might be that the United Nations group administering the fund might tighten their regulations so that they can have stricter control and see that the true objective is reached.

Mr. MORSE. I think I have made clear to the Senator from New Hampshire that I share his views that I am not in favor of building up communism in the world, but does the Senator think that there is any danger that the proposed action on this particular item may result in the reaction throughout the world that when it comes to giving support to the United Nations this is another evidence of our retreating from cooperating with the United Nations rather than giving this particular division of the United Nations support?

Mr. BRIDGES. I will say to the Senator that this last year we gave so much that they could not match it. It looks as though they may not be able to match the appropriation this year.

Mr. MORSE. I am greatly impressed by the fact that apparently they are going to have more money under this appropriation this year than they had last year.

Mr. BRIDGES. Slightly more.

Mr. MORSE. I am very much concerned about the propaganda abroad in the world that we talk about supporting the United Nations only when it is favorable to us to support the United Nations, but that when we are called upon to give aid which may be of special benefit to some other nation, and not necessarily to us, then we find a spirit of noncooperation with the United Nations creeping into American policy. I am inclined to share at least a part of the view of the Senator from New Mexico. that this cut might result in further propaganda. I admit that we are going to be faced with Russian propaganda anyway, but the result may be further Russian propaganda that this is another evidence that we are not giving actual support, but only lip service to the United Nations.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. As I understand, the reduction will apply just the same among the free nations as it does among the nations behind the iron curtain, so all the children will be affected. Is this sum sufficient to carry out the matching program, or are we reducing aid to all the nations, whether they are behind the iron curtain or not?

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the Senator from New Mexico overlooks one fact-

Mr. HATCH. I am merely trying to get the facts. I am not familiar with Mr. BRIDGES. In this appropriation we are giving more than $5,000,000,000 for economic relief.

Mr. HATCH. Let me interrupt to say that I realize full well that that relief is of decided advantage and benefit so far as helping children is concerned.

Mr. BRIDGES. The people of the free countries who receive direct relief will probably

Mr. HATCH. They will probably not need so much.

Mr. BRIDGES. They will be taken care of to a large degree, so the cuts will come in the countries behind the iron curtain, because we are supplementing our aid in such a generous way in other

Mr. President, it seems to me that it was a reasonable attitude for us to take.

Mr. HATCH. I am still concerned that a mistake is being made, but I want to be very straightforward and say that I certainly understand that the committee intends no mistake. However, in connection with these complicated matters it is very easy to make a mistake. If we are to make a mistake, I would rather make it anywhere else than in connection with aid to children.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. In fairness, and so that the RECORD may contain the statement which the committee had before it. Mr. Maurice Pate, Executive Director of the International Children's Organization, on page 144 of the hearings, in response to an inquiry by the chairman, testified as follows:

Mr. PATE. In each country we have set up small mission of international staff, that is, of citizens of countries other than the country in which they operate, and these missions run anywhere from one in the case of a very small country like Albania to half a dozen in a larger country like Poland.

The mission is in constant contact with the government or with local agencies handling the distribution of food. In each country the staff moves about observing the distribution, seeing that the general policies of the fund are carried out.

I thank the chairman of the committee for allowing me to place that statement in the RECORD.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to say to the Senator from Florida that I was one member of the committee who had some misgivings, along with others, about cutting the funds. On the other hand, I wish to say to the able chairman of the committee that I sat through the hearings and listened to Mr. Pate. The testimony before us showed that a number of heads of missions in countries behind the iron curtain were citizens of other countries behind the iron curtain. During the hearings I raised the point as to why, for example, a Swiss citizen rather than a citizen of Yugoslavia was not used as head of a mission.

Rather than Yugoslavia using a Pole as the head of a mission, I raised the question as to why they did not use Swiss, Swedes, or someone else, so that we could feel sure that there was not the type of discrimination to which reference has been made. I believe that if the United Nations itself will try to solve that problem, it will find the Congress in a more generous mood.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will

the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield. Mr. CAPEHART. I rise to pay tribute to the American people and the American taxpayers for their generosity and their charity, and for the help which they have given to the peoples of the world since the war ended, and before. We have been the most generous people in the history of the world. I am sure that the Congress of the United States, and particularly Members of the Senate, will join me in paying great tribute to the American taxpayers for their generosity and their charity, because they have been generous and they have been charitable. They have paid the bills which the Congress has incurred through appropriations since the war ended, and during the war, and they have accepted the burden with a smile. I, for one, want to pay great tribute to the taxpayers of America. I pay tribute to their generosity and their charity. I know of no equal in the history of the world. No other peoples have been so generous. It would be appropriate for the Senate of the United States to stand for at least half a minute in silent tribute to the generosity of the American people.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I made it known earlier in the evening that I wanted to speak on the bill. I would have preferred to speak before the vote was taken on the second amendment, shortening the time; but it was said that it was desired to get the vote over so that some of the older Members could go home, because they were tired. Therefore I take it that all Senators left in the Chamber are young, hale, and hearty. However, I do not intend to abuse the privilege of the floor. I had estimated, and so stated, that I might speak for half an hour; but I shall cut that time in two, and hope to get through sooner than that.

Mr. President, I voted against the socalled Marshall plan when it was before the Senate, because I felt that it bypassed the United Nations. If I had it to do over again—and I do have in another form tonight—I would still vote against it. I intend to vote against the bill. I am opposed to the plan. I think it is becoming apparent—to me, at any rate that this is the most colossal hoax ever perpetrated upon any people, including the American taxpayers.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPE-HART ] just paid tribute to the generosity of the American people. I think they are being sadly imposed upon in this socalled European Economic Cooperation Administration scheme.

Recently I purchased a copy of the New York Times. I bought it in North Carolina, so it was an early edition. I saw an article in it which astounded me. When I returned to my office I told my staff about it and they could not believe that what I told them was true. I said, "Get the New York Times and read it for yourselves." We get a copy in the office. They got the New York Times for that particular day, and looked all through it; and they said, "There is nothing like you say in the New York Times.'

So I looked at it and, lo and behold, the article was not there.

So I went home and got my copy of the New York Times, and brought it down to the office and spread that page of my copy down beside the corresponding page of the office copy of the New York Times. I found that the two pages were identical, with the exception of the one article which I had quoted. That article had been left out of the other edition of the Times, and another one had been substituted.

Since then I have come to have a better understanding of why such a thing could happen, since I have learned that $10,000,000 of the money to be appropriated here is to go to the New York Times, the New York Herald Tribune, and to the magazines Time, Life, News Week, and Reader's Digest, I believe, as their part of a reward for helping sell the Europeans, presumably, on the Marshall plan. But of course it is hard to separate the funds. When those publications get the money, they are anxious to sell the plan to anyone.

Of course, Mr. President, the American people, including the Members of the Senate, were told that the European Recovery Program was necessary because people were starving, or that it was necessary because people in Europe were in imminent danger of starving. I read an interesting item in the Wall Street publication Financial Aid. I do not know whether they were boasting about how clever the advocates of the Marshall plan were, or what their object was in printing this statement: but the article said that the State Department sent out two different groups of speakers-with many teams to each group, of course; but one group of speakers went to women's clubs and church organizations, and told them, "The Marshall plan is to feed hungry people, especially starving babies; and you good religious people, you women, certainly will support the Marshall plan, won't you?"

And of course those people said, "Yes." Another group of speakers was sent out by the State Department to businessmen's organizations, such as chambers of commerce, manufacturers' associations, and what not. They told those businessmen, "Don't let anybody kid you at all. This Marshall plan is going to get business for American business and American products." They were that cynical in selling the Marshall plan.

Anyway, I heard those arguments.

I should have liked to vote for the Marshall plan in the first instance, if it had been channeled through the United Nations, because I want to see the United Nations work; I believe it should be strengthened; I think it is our one best hope. I was elected on the basis of supporting the United Nations, and I intend to keep that pledge.

Now I shall read the headline of an article which appeared in the New York Times; it will be sufficient to read the headline, and then I shall describe "on the cuff" the material following the head-

Europe feels pang-

Mr. President, a pang is a pain; it is bad; it is not good-

Europe feels pang of-

Mr. President, what do you imagine the pang is that Europe feels? After all the sad tales we have been told about the necessity of the Marshall plan, surely the pang Europe feels must be a pang of hunger or of starvation, or perhaps it is pestilence as a result of starvation.

No; it is none of those things. The headline says:

Europe feels pang of overproducing.

Is not that a terrible pang for our friends in Europe to suffer? We must hurry up with the Marshall plan, so as to alleviate that situation and ease that pain, that pang that is afflicting our brethren across the ocean.

The article following the headline states that in Holland food is being destroyed; that in many parts of Europe production is being curtailed because in many lines they have produced more than they can sell.

To substantiate that, I shall quote from the United States News and World Report for May 14. This is a publication aimed at businessmen. In speaking about Europe, it says:

Surpluses are beginning to show here and

Mr. President, the reference is to Europe, of course.

Surpluses are beginning to show here and there. Dutch vegetables, Italian fruits, German textiles, are examples. These things are spoiling or sitting in warehouses. It is not that they are not needed by neighboring countries. At the bottom, it is money trouble that is blocking trade.

Imagine, Mr. President! Food spoiling in warehouses in Holland; Italian fruit spoiling-fruit that is needed by everyone to maintain health, and that is needed especially by children. Of course, I imagine that in Italy they raise a good many oranges. But that fruit is spoiling because people do not have little pieces of paper with certain figures and pictures on it, possibly. Italy, with the lowest standard of living in Europe, is destroying food; and even in Germany, textiles are piling up in the warehouses, unused.

Mr. President, in view of this information, I can come to no other conclusion than that the Marshall plan is a hoax. I can see reasons for it, other than feeding hungry people. It is evident that is not the reason. If all the people of Europe lack is money with which to buy their own products, it strikes me as rather foolish that we should have to send them money with which to buy their own products. The New York Times and the United States News and World Report say their products are spoiling.

Here is something that may give us a clue as to what the Marshall plan is really for. I read from the New York Times of May 14:

Pressure is urged on Latin-America. Banker wants ECA—

That is the Economic Cooperation Administration-buy plan used to end Argentine trade bars and spur Brazil payments.

In other words, you bribe them with Marshall plan funds to lower their trade bars so our monopolists can grow richer; and in Brazil they have already bought stuff they cannot pay for, so we give them some Marshall plan money to pay our monopolists for stuff they have sold on credit and cannot collect for.

Mr. President, it seems to me that in the case of Marshall-plan funds, so far as I can find out, the object is to enable our cartelists and our monopolists to gain control of the economic life of foreign nations with these bribes to corrupt politicians, enabling our businessmen to infiltrate and get control of foreign business.

Of course, we are sending billions of dollars' worth of our products abroad. It may be only a coincidence that makes things here at home scarce and keeps prices high in this country. That may prices high in this country. That may be only a coincidence, although the Marshall plan was conceived and perpetrated on the American people, it happens, at a time when we were just about to get over the hump of production, here at home, and be able to buy an automobile or a Frigidaire, or whatever we might happen to want, at a respectable price. But along came the Marshall plan and a big armament program to keep things scarce again.

So we have the Marshall plan going through the Senate at a very late hour at night, when one is hesitant to discuss it at any length. There are a great many things I should like to say about it

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am happy to yield to my good friend from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I wonder if the Senator saw the article in the Times-Herald a few days ago, saying that the New York Times was getting nearly a million dollars out of the amendment on page 5. line 2.

Mr. TAYLOR. I read that article, not in the Herald Tribune. I read it some place, though, about the bonus being paid to the newspapers and maga-

Mr. LANGER. The Times-Herald was getting $850,000, according to that article; is not that correct?

Mr. TAYLOR. The Times-Herald in Washington?

Mr. LANGER. No. I mean the Herald Tribune of New York.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, yes, yes. Mr. LANGER. And Fortune magazine, and Life?

Mr. TAYLOR. Time.

Mr. LANGER. And Time?

Mr. TAYLOR. And the New York

Mr. LANGER. I mean Time maga-

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; Time magazine and the newspaper, the New York Times.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator remember whether in that list any single newspaper opposed to the Marshall plan received one single dollar?

Mr. TAYLOR. No. no; no newspaper opposed to the Marshall plan got any-thing. In fact, the Chicago Tribune, which was opposed to the Marshall plan, was very much upset over the whole

Mr. LANGER. Is it not a fact also that the various magazines I have mentioned time and time again have carried beautiful photographs of some of the leading Members of this distinguished body?

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, anybody who has been for the Marshall plan could get plenty of space in those publications.

Mr. LANGER. I understand some of that money is going to the movie magnates.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; I guess they need the movies to help them sell the plan. They need every means of propaganda to sell a scheme like this. There is no doubt about it at all.

Mr. LANGER. Under the amendment they have reduced it from $15,000,000 to $10,000,000, I understand.

Mr. TAYIOR. That is to make the people feel good and think how much they have saved.

Mr. LANGER. I take it that is covered by line 2 of the amendment on page 5, which says, "That guaranties of investments in enterprises producing or distributing informational media provided under section 111 (b) (3) of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 shall not exceed $10,000,000 in the first year.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is a very clever technique. First, they are to be given $15,000,000; then, when it is cut down to $10,000,000, the people are duly grateful and very happy that it only costs them $10,000,000 to learn all about the Marshall plan. Of course, Mr. President, it is difficult for the people to find out about these things because of this subsidy to the press, which has pulled the wool over the eyes of the American people. So we have the sorry prospect of using the taxpayers' money also to guarantee the profits of American industry.

Here is another little item from the United States News and World Report, "How to Earn Dollars Abroad," is the title of it. It says, "Guarantees of payment in U. S. currency." This is from the United States News and World Report of May 14 again. The heading on the article says, "Money invested in Europe by private investors is to get some Government protection. Profits, if any, will be paid in dollars."

There is the answer to the Marshall plan. Our businessmen are muscling in on the folks over in Europe, taking over; but they cannot get their profits out. Marks, lire, and francs are no good to them, so they figure out a Marshall plan, and now the taxpayers are going to be taxed to guarantee the profits in dollars to our businessmen over there in those countries. The article goes on to say, "The idea is to lessen the risk of doing business abroad and encourage new enterprises." Listen to this next line: "European recovery, too, will be helped." That is the whole thing they worry about—"European recovery, too, will be helped." That is wonderful. Hallelu-

Mr. President, I could go on and talk all night about this thing and never say the same thing twice.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am happy to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. As I understand the bill, then, we are appropriating $20,000,-000 to feed all the hungry children in this world; then we are appropriating half as much for the New York Times, the New York Herald, Fortune magazine, Newsweek, and Time magazine.

Mr. TAYLOR. Time and Life. Mr. LANGER. And Life, and a few movie institutions.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. Is that right?

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, of course, they got The Iron Curtain out of that money given to the movies, and they will get I do not believe the people who are foisting these measures on the American people are generally worried about the Communist threat; they are just stirring it up all the time so they can get away with these great appropriations for armament profits, for the Marshall plan to guarantee their profits abroad, and to pay the newspapers and magazines for selling the people on the idea.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 5, line 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 21, after the word "Congress", to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That expenditures may be made hereunder for the purposes of economic rehabilitation in Japan, Korea, and the Ryukyus in such manner as to be consistent with the general objectives of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 1, after the numerals "1948", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That funds appropriated hereunder and unexpended at the time of the termination of occupation by the United States, of any area for which such funds are made available, may be expended by the President for the procurement of such commodities and technical services, and com-modities procured from funds herein or heretofore appropriated for government and relief in occupied areas and not delivered to such an area prior to the time of the termination of occupation, may be utilized by the President, as may be necessary to assist in the maintenance of the political and economic stability of such areas: Provided, That before any such assistance is made available, an agreement shall be entered into between the United States and the recognized government or authority with respect to such area containing such undertakings by such govern-ment or authority as the President may determine to be necessary in order to assure the efficient use of such assistance in furtherance of such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 18, after the word "purposes", to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That such agreement shall, where applicable, include requirements and undertakings corresponding to the requirements and undertakings specified in sections 5, 6, and 7 of the Foreign Aid Act of 1947 (Public Law 389, 80th Cong.).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 23, after the word "Congress", to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That funds appropriated hereunder may be used, insofar as practicable, and under such rules and regulations as prescribed by the Secretary of the Army, to pay ocean transportation charges from United States ports, including Territorial ports, to ports in Japan, Korea, and the Ryukyus for the movement of supplies donated to, or purchased by, United States voluntary nonprofit relief agencies registered with and recommended by the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid or of relief packages consigned to individuals residing in such countries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 7, after the word "countries", to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That under the rules and regulations to be prescribed, the Secretary of the Army shall fix and pay a uniform rate per pound for the ocean transportation of all relief packages of food or other general classification of commodities shipped to Japan, Korea, or the Ryukyus regardless of methods of shipment and higher rates charged by particular agencies of transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 14, after the word "transportation", to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That service during the fiscal year 1949 of an individual rendered to the Department of the Army under this appropriation as an expert, consultant, or technician shall not be considered as service or employment bringing such individual within the provisions of section 109 or 113 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), of section 190 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99), or of section 19 (e) of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, or of any other Federal law imposing restrictions, requirements, or penalties in relation to the employment of persons, the performance of services, or the payment or receipt of compensation in connection with any claim, proceeding, or matter involving the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, there is an article in yesterday morning's newspaper which expresses very well the thought which I have before expressed, particularly regarding the authorization of this legislation. I want to read one paragraph of the article in the nature of a summary of what I think is the truth about the program. This is an article by Mr. Walter Lippmann. I read:

The failure of the European governments and of the State Department to promote the political unity of Europe and to uphold the authority of the United Nations has sapped the only foundation on which sustained American support of the recovery program could rest. No doubt it required high states-manship to put the program on a construc-tive foundation. It was much easier to put it across as a measure of the cold war, to depend on the fear of communism rather than on faith in a new democratic order.

I realize that it is rather late in the discussion of this question again to refer to the subject, but I merely want to reiterate my belief that this program has been and is continuing to be restricted too closely to the economic aspect, and that the political aspect, particularly the political unity of Europe, has been neglected. I doubt very seriously, unless something is done along that line, that it will be successful.

I ask unanimous consent to insert the entire article in the RECORD at this point in my remarks

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> AMERICAN EXPECTATIONS (By Walter Lippmann)

"Until then I beg of you," said Senator and Englishment, "that you give ECA a fair VANDENBERG, chance." Until when? Until "next January when we shall know whereof we speak. When the second annual appropriation impends, we shall know what kind of job Administrator Hoffman and his staff are doing. We shall know to what extent self-help and mutual cooperation are meeting our ex-pectations."

Though these words were part of Senator VANDENBERG'S appeal to Congress to honor a solemn commitment, they carry an urgent warning to the leading governments of Europe and also to the President and the Department of State. It is a warning that the continuation of ECA is not assured by the original authorization, nor will it be if the Martin-Taber raid is repulsed. It is notice that "a general overhaul," as Mr. Vandenberg put it—that is to say a general reconsideration of the basic policy—will be undertaken by the next Administration and the next Congress. It will be undertaken not merely by the enemies of ECA but by its strongest supporters,—who will then "know to what extent self-help and mutual cooperation are meeting our expectations."

No doubt 6 months—for that is what it comes to-will seem like an exceedingly short time in which to prove that ECA should be-continued. But if the European govern-ments, and particularly the British and French, make a serious effort to understand the real attitude of this country, they will know what kind of action on their part will in fact meet American "expectation."

They will find, I believe, that the key to the mystery is that while the European re-covery program has been "justified" by a torrent of statistics, in fact this extraordinary enterprise, unique in the history of the world, will have to be justified by intangible, un-economic, political and moral results. The American people hope, of course, that production will rise, that trade will increase, that inflation will be mastered, and that the balance of payments will be righted. But what they are really looking for are signs which they can take seriously that a new Europe is in the making.

It is because signs of that kind are lacking that even the first appropriation for ECA is in danger. For the Martin-Taber at-tack reflected not so much the strength of the opposition to the recovery program as it did the lack of strong conviction on the part of its supporters. They were absent from the House in large numbers, and those who were present did not fight very effectively. Why? Because, so it seems to me, the governments in Europe and the State Department here have deflated the hopes of the people. In the past few months they have seen "western union" degenerate into little more than an impotent military alliance. They have seen the United Nations maltreated. They have seen the Labor government cold shoul-der the movement for European union They have seen their own government invite the Russians to talk, and then unable to think of anything to say.

As a result, if they have not become isolalationists, they are certainly disillusioned at the prospect of huge subsidies, huge arma-ments, and the draft, all at the expense of housing, health, education, and internal development, with no progress toward a new and better international order.

The failure of the European governments and of the State Department to promote the political unity of Europe and to uphold the authority of the United Nations has sapped the only foundation on which sustained American support of the recovery program could rest. No doubt it required high statesmanship to put the program on a constructive foundation. It was much easier to put it across as a measure of the cold war. depend on the fear of communism rather than on faith in a new democratic order.

But fear will not sustain a continuing effect. It will work for a few emergencies but not for 4 years. It is good for a sprint but not for a long run. The Russians, once they are bright enough to realize that we are depending on their provocations to generate the steam to carry on, have only to stop being quite so irritating in order to reduce the pressure. Then, no longer frightened but without a sustaining faith in place of their fears, the people's interest languishes. It is languishing now. That is where MARTIN and Taber saw their opportunity.

These are the imponderables, I think, which men like Attlee, Cripps, and Bevin, Schumann, Rene Mayer, and Bidault will do well to take very seriously if—6 months hence when the ECA must undergo a more crucial test than the Martin-Taber affairthey intend to meet what Senator VANDEN-BERG called American "expectations" about the extent of self-help and mutual cooperation in Europe.

It will not be good enough for them to complain about the uncertainty of American public opinion. If they are fair about it, and also wise, they will recognize that what the American public is being asked to do is something which no reople has ever before been asked to do, and that, therefore, this altogether unprecedented enterprise can be sustained only if they contribute to it not merely sweat and austerity but also audacity and faith.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, have all the amendments been acted on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All but one. The clerk will state the last amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 3, to change the section number from "207" to "206."

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now open to further amendment.

The Chair agreed to recognize the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM].

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I had intended to discuss this bill at considerable length. For rather obvious reasons I shall not do so. I do want to say, however, that I believe this scheme to effectuate European recovery by the appropriation of this very large sum of money may undermine the American economy and may well make our Nation as vulnerable to communism as are those we are seeking to aid.

Such a plan entails the risk of an unparalleled price debacle at home. Already the American housewife is beginning to feel the inflationary effects of the artificial foreign demand created by our gifts of dollars. Only a few days ago we read headlines telling of record high meat prices. A Missourian recently sent me a telegram complaining of the rising cotton prices, particularly as they affected the cost of his cotton shirts. I went to the Department of Agriculture and was informed there that the upsurge in the cotton market is due in no small part to the placing of orders by foreign purchasing agents to be filled when the $511,000,000 in the Marshall plan funds for the purchase of cotton is forthcoming for the use of their respective foreign governments.

Every ton of steel and every barrel of oil we send abroad without the benefit that comes from ordinary foreign trade weakens by that much our own national economy. The United States simply does not have an inexhaustible supply of resources. Although this vast dumping operation may serve to prolong the Truman artificial prosperity, anyone who supports this plan upon that theory, or for such a reason is living in a fool's paradise.

In my judgment, the plan we are about to implement by this gigantic appropriation, poses a grave threat to our traditional capitalist economy. Heavy tax rates necessitated in no small part by heavy spending abroad, combined with the rise in consumer price levels, have drastically reduced the savings of our middle-income group available for capital accumulation. There is real danger that there will not be sufficient accumulated savings and invested capital to supply the needs for machinery and tools in our industry of the future.

Mr. President, I stated before my belief that the welfare of the people of the United States, and not the people in foreign lands across the seas, should be the first concern of the American Congress.

Mr. MALONE: Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MALONE. Am I correct in understanding the Senator's trend of thinking in this matter to be that if these large appropriations are used for the purchase of goods in this country, the effect is further inflation?

Mr. KEM. I do not see how it could be otherwise. We are already seeing the effects, and the process has just begun, in my humble opinion.

Mr. MALONE. Am I to understand further, then, that the making of these huge loans and the consequent siphoning off of incomes and the increases in the wages of workers, which was done first, according to Mr. Roosevelt and others of the administration for the past 10 years, with the announced purpose of preventing inflation, prevents, in the Senator's opinion, the proper accumulation of venture capital for investment?

Mr. KEM. Precisely so. I think evidence of that is already available.

Mr. President, I should like to correct the Senator from Nevada in one respect. I prefer to refer to these remittances to foreign countries, not as loans, but as gifts or grants. I do not see how anyone who reviews our experience of the past 20 years in distributing our wealth around the world can regard these remittances otherwise than outright gifts and grants. I think we are living in a fool's paradise if we call them anything else.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator know how much of the money is going for to-bacco?

Mr. KEM. I shall get to that in a very few minutes. It is a very surprisingly large amount.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HAWKES. Why does the Senator think that there is not an inexhaustible supply of funds in the United States so that we can continue this course for-

Mr. KEM. I think the figures we have indicate the answer, and I believe there is already evidence of the supply of funds and goods being drained away.

Mr. HAWKES. Does not the Senator think we are acting in everything we are doing in connection with those great gifts, as though there were no bottom to the barrel?

Mr. KEM. Exactly so.

Mr. HAWKES. And does not the Senator realize that in every bit of this money we are giving, in excess of that which is necessary to keep people from starving, we are taking a chance of about 10 to 1 of making a contribution to communism, because when the barrel bottom is reached, so that we can no longer buy friendship, I say that if communism is going to spread in Europe, it will spread then, and the Communists will take over all the contributions we have made and all the gifts we have given.

Mr. KEM. I thank the Senator. I think that was very aptly said.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President will the

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. KEM. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. JENNER. Can the Senator tell me whether he knows when the European recovery program got the "new look?" It is now the "European Cooperation Administration."

Mr. KEM. I think it was originally known as the Truman plan. Then it became the Marshall plan. Then it became the European recovery plan, and I think it now has the "new look," to which the Senator from Indiana has referred, and I believe it is called the "Economic cooperation plan".

Mr. JENNER. Is it the Senator's understanding that Europe has already made sufficient recovery so that the program does not need to be called a recovery program?

Mr. KEM. I cannot advise the Senator why the frequent change in name.

Mr. JENNER. The Senator was here the other day when we passed the displaced persons bill, was he not?

Mr. KEM. Yes.

Mr. JENNER. When we passed the European recovery program, as I understood the proposal—and I believe the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg] made the address outlining it—he explained to me and the other Members of the Senate that the main purpose of the European recovery program was to help the European people get up off their knees so that we would not have to go on taking care of them forever. Is not that correct?

Mr. KEM. I believe it was something along that line.

Mr. JENNER. It was said that what they needed most was production, but under the displaced persons program, as I understand it, 200,000 are to be permitted to come into the United States, and of the 200,000, 50 percent are to be agricultural workers, and the remaining 50 percent are to be skilled mechanics and skilled technicians. So, following the theory that the idea was to have Europe get on its feet so that it could help itself, what business have we today permitting 200,000 of their skilled workmen to come to America? Why should we send them our money and our material wealth, and then bring over 200,000 skilled workmen from Europe, when they are needed there? Can the Senator explain that to me?

Mr. KEM. Perhaps some other Senator can explain it. I cannot.

Mr. JENNER. Can anyone explain it to me? In the absence of response, I will sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I appreciate the very pertinent suggestion the Senator from Indiana has made, and I thank him for it.

I pointed out on a previous occasion my belief that emotional interest exhibited in some quarters today in favor of distributing around the world the accumulated wealth of the people of this country, accumulated by many generations of thrifty and frugal-minded people, appears to be one of those strange emotional epidemics or moral manias which have excited the minds of men from time to time at many stages in the world's history. For example, there were the children's crusade of the Middle Ages, the South Sea bubble, the tulip craze, the witchcraft persecutions in Europe and America.

Mr. President, I shall be as brief as I can, and merely sketch the points I have in mind.

I wish to say that tonight we are confronted with the question of providing billions of dollars called for by a seemingly endless series of foreign adventures. Tonight we are confronted face to face with a proposition that 2 and 2 make 4 and always have.

Those who oppose the authorization of these plans are, of course, faced with a difficult decision. We can either vote to provide the funds asked for by the Administration and allow these experiments to run their course, a course which some of us believe to be perilous to the welfare and happiness of our people, or we can make an effort to salvage as much of the taxpayers' money as possible by cutting down as much as we can the pouring out of money of American taxpayers in these foreign schemes.

I must admit, Mr. President, that I gave serious consideration to offering no objection, either by word or vote, to allowing Mr. Truman and Mr. Marshall to carry out what may perhaps prove to be a last futile fling at global spending. However, I could not bring myself to evade the responsibility I feel to the people of my State, just as I could not bring myself to fail to raise my voice tonight. I cannot help but remember the solemn pledge I made to the people of my State in the last election to make every effort to reduce governmental expenditures wherever possible. Furthermore, I cannot shirk my duty to the American people to take every step I can, as futile as it may be, to protect and preserve our American institutions, which have given us the highest standard of living the world has ever seen.

Now we are told, Mr. President, there is nothing to justify a reduction in appropriations for foreign aid in 1948. Economic Cooperative Administrator Hoffman stated, according to the press, in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee that less money means less recovery. The Secretary of State characterized the action of the House in reducing these funds as changing the picture from a calculated risk of success to a calculated risk of failure.

I should say that there not only can but should be a sharp reduction for 1948, and here are some of the reasons. In the first place, Mr. President, the House of Representatives was guilty of no hasty and ill-considered action. In the second place, the House of Representatives is the traditional source of decision on matters of appropriations. I shall not. as I intended to do, sketch the history of that situation, but I should like to quote the word of a man whom I hope is still honored in America. A grand committee of the constitutional convention recommended that "all bills for raising or appropriating money shall originate in the first branch of the Legislature, and shall not be altered or amended by the second branch."

A member of that committee was Dr. Benjamin Franklin. He was asked what purpose was intended to be served by the restrictions on the second branch. He remarked that it was always of importance that the people should know who had disposed of their money and how it has been disposed of. "It was a maxim," said he, "that those who feel, can best indee."

So it would seem to me to be wise to give very careful consideration and attention to the recommendations of the branch of Congress which must answer to the people this year for what is being done in connection with this appropriation. Certainly it was the intention of the founding fathers that we should do so.

In the second place, foreign aid is no substitute for national defense. During the hearings held before the Foreign Relations Committee Secretary of the Army Royall said:

Without such effort-

That is, the passage of the pending the Army budget and the Army itself should be increased.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Langer] has asked me something about tobacco. I should like to review very briefly, so the people may know just what is being done in that connection in the appropriation bill. According to the latest estimates available $138,000,000 of the Marshall plan funds would be utilized for the purchase of tobacco during the first 15 months of the program. I suppose under the Senate amendments that amount will apply to the first 12 months of the program. Is that correct, I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LANGER. Let me say, Mr. President, I understand it is $299,000,000. In other words, we give $20,000,000 to feed all the children in the world, and 10 times as much for tobacco.

Mr. KEM. The figure I have received is $138,000,000. My authority is the United States News.

Mr. LANGER. I have the figures;

$299,000,000----

Mr. KEM. For tobacco alone?
Mr. LANGER. That is the total for tobacco alone, of which we supply $110,-200,000.

Mr. KEM. I am frank to say, Mr. President, the situation is much worse than I had understood. In other words, I understand that this enormous sum of money, more than $200,000,000 of the American taxpayers' money, will be used to send gifts of tobacco abroad to countries whose people are said to be starving, and whose economic recovery is at stake. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if that is correct.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is about correct respecting the amount of tobacco that is being sent abroad.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if $35,000,-000 is the amount provided for coffee to be distributed free of charge among the participating nations.

Mr. BRIDGES. One hundred and eighteen million three hundred thousand dollars worth of coffee will move from the Western Hemisphere, of which amount we will pay $26,100,000.

Mr. KEM. Our portion of the gift is $26,000,000; is that correct?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes, plus.

Mr. CAPEHART. Who pays for the difference between $118,000,000 and $26,000,000?

Mr. BRIDGES. Forty-four million eight hundred thousand dollars will be paid out of their own dollar earnings or from some other source. Sixteen million two hundred thousand dollars is paid out of loans and credits which they receive from some other sources. Twenty-six million one hundred thousand dollars is what we pay for.

Mr. CAPEHART. In other words, we loan them other moneys, but in reality do not we pay for it?

Mr. BRIDGES. I cannot tell the Senator where it comes from. It is listed in the justification as loans and credits from other sources.

Mr. KEM. When this plan was first suggested, representatives of the tobacco industry came to my office and suggested that they had a plan to send a large amount of tobacco abroad, and they suggested that, Missouri being a tobacco-producing State, I should be interested in the project. I inquired who was to pay for the tobacco. I was told that under the plan it would be paid for by the United States Government. I asked what was to be done with the tobacco, and was told it was to be given to the starving peoples of the world.

Mr. President, it seemed to me when that proposition was presented by the representatives of the tobacco interests that it was too preposterous even to be considered seriously by the Congress of the United States. Yet, Mr. President, that is exactly what is now about to be done.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator know how much Coca-Cola we are going to send abroad?

Mr. KEM. I do not have the figures on that. Perhaps the Senator from New Hampshire could give them.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will answer that question. We export about $398,000 of sweetened sirups to participating countries, but it is not my understanding that that comes directly out of these funds. It is out of some other exchange or dollar credits.

Mr. KEM. But the American Treasury pays for it in the end, does it not?

Mr. BRIDGES. They have other dollar earnings which are used for that particular purpose.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if there is not this difference between tobacco and coffee: When tobacco is given away, something comes back to the American producer; when coffee is given away, the proceeds gc to South America, Java, or some other place in the world.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KEM. So it is a total loss to the American economy.

As I understand, the only reply which has come from the Administration with respect to these items is this: They say simply that the programs have been scaled down to rock bottom, and that we must not appropriate a penny less.

Mr. President, there is another reason, it seems to me, why we should pause and consider what we are doing, and that is that a large part of the funds we are about to grant will be granted to participating countries—that is, the 16 countries of western Europe—to meet obligations to the United States. Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, in his testimony before the House Appropriations Committee on May 25, stated:

In arriving at the estimates of aid requirements the National Advisory Council assumed that the countries participating would be required to use their present and future exchange income to meet their existing financial obligations falling due to the United States and third countries, including both obligations to governments and to private citizens.

What this means, as I understand, is that in the last analysis the American taxpayer is being asked to give money to France, Britain, and other participating countries in order that those countries may continue to pay interest to us, or perhaps installments on debts. In other words, we are making gifts of money to our debtor nations in order that they may pay us what they owe us. What I should like to ask is this: How in the name of common sense, if we start that kind of business, are we ever going to collect any debt anywhere in all the world?

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. What reason has the Senator for thinking that they are going to pay us anything-interest on our debts or anything else? I had not heard that they were going to do that.

Mr. KEM. I do not think they are. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that the reason why I am so particularly concerned about this situation is that in my judgment we are creating a precedent that will make it impossible for our children and our children's children to carry on foreign trade with other nations of the world, because those nations will have acquired the idea that they do not have to pay America, that America will give them the money to settle the debt.

Mr. HAWKES. I am thoroughly in agreement with the Senator. I should like to remark that I have never in my life seen anyone who was able to buy a friend and keep that friend after his funds were exhausted so that he could not continue buying the friend. I wish I could throw this off as lightly as do some other Senators. I do not believe that we can get out of this thing when we want to do so. When we start a program such as this, it is like taking on one's back a poor relative who is per-fectly able to do things for himself ultimately, but who will not do them because he has found an easy place. The greatest contribution any man can make in Christianity is to teach people to take care of themselves, to endure hardships, and solve their own problems. So long as they find that we will solve their problems for them we shall be destroying the initiative which is the only hope for the redemption of the world. Mr. KEM. I thank the Senator. the Senator knows, one reason why I am so concerned about this situation is that it puts the Senate in the position of showing a disregard for the realistic approach undertaken by our brethren at the other end of the Capitol. Let me read a short excerpt from the House committee report on this appropriation bill. I ask my colleagues if this language does not indicate an effort to approach the matter in an intelligent, common-sense American way.

Mr. KEM. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. HAWKES. I have tried very hard to find out whether the American people-the ordinary man and womanunderstand in the slightest degree that we now have on our backs a national debt of $253,000,000,000, and whether they comprehend what that means. I find that there is a total disregard of it on the part of the American people. If I am wrong I should like to have some Senator correct me, but in my judgment there is a failure on the part of the American people to recognize the fact that the national debt is a mortgage on right to tax and the power of taxation. Does not the Senator agree with me? Mr. KEM. I agree absolutely. I was very much impressed by the statement in the address of the Senator from New every industry, every business, every piece of property which every citizen of the United States owns, because of the Jersey in which he pointed out that the debt of the American people today is greater than the combined debt of all the nations to which we are giving away our property and our sustenance.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the Senator. Mr. KEM. This is the language of the House committee:

It would seem that the administration is not only disregarding the basic principles of sound business practices, but also is in a sense undermining the character of international agreements. Anyone with the slightest experience in business realizes that when one owes a debt and is not able to pay it, the way to maintain his morale is to extend the time for the payment of his debt, rather than directly or indirectly to pay the debt for him. If you give him the funds with which to pay the debt, he will expect the same treatment every time he owes any money, and nothing but complete demoralization may result.

Mr. President, I think we ought to stop and consider whether we are undermining the whole basis of international trade throughout the world for generations to come, in what we are doing in a few hours tonight.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. The Senator realizes that God has been pretty kind to the American people throughout the entire tragedy of the past few years.

Mr. KEM. God has been kind, and we are now in a period of inflation.

Mr. HAWKES. The Senator realizes that God has given us crops year after year. He has given us the material with which we have done these charitable things in feeding the world-with which I am in perfect harmony. I am in perfect agreement that we should have done the things we did to prevent starvation. But the Senator must realize that in time the American people will wake up and find out what this debt means, and what their situation is. They will realize that they will be accused of bad faith at the time when they find themselves unable to proceed further along the path on which we have started. That is the time when we are going to wake up.

Mr. KEM. When the Senator and I were young fellows we used to call it "the cool, gray dawn of the morning after."
Mr. HAWKES. The Senator realizes that this is not a pleasant thing which he and I as Senators are doing. It would be much more pleasant to say, "Come on in, boys, the water is fine"-and go on with this great program, rather than to think of the American people, and, I say to the Senator from Missouri, think of the people of the world, because we have to reestablish their faith in themselves and their initiative if we expect them to get on their feet again and stay on their feet.

Mr. KEM. Not only the people alive in the world today, but generations yet unborn. Does the Senator from New Jersey agree with me that what we are about to do may affect our children and our children's children?

Mr. HAWKES. I could not agree with the Senator more.

I find that those who stop, look, and listen, and look down the pathway of cause and effect, often are not understood.

Benjamin Franklin said a very wonderful thing in 1772:

Often those who serve in public office are misunderstood, and what they are doing is not appreciated. But that should not keep them from persevering in trying to do the right thing for the people, in the hope that some day the people will understand that their minds were right and their hearts were right, and will understand what they were trying to do.

Mr. KEM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I have been talking about giving the British, the French, and the other nations of the world money with which to pay their debts to us. But there is another consideration, and that is that we are giving the British money with which to pay the Argentine and the people of other creditor nations throughout the world. If there is any reason in the world why we should put the British in funds so that they can pay their debts to the bankers and entrepreneurs of the Argentine, so far as I know it has not yet been suggested in this discussion. reason or no reason, that is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. President, I had intended to speak at considerable length; but I shall bring to a close what I have to say.

I have set forth a few reasons why in my judgment the appropriations for this program should be cut, or the reductions should be held to coincide with the recommendations of the House of Representatives, or perhaps cut to an even greater extent. It is imperative that at this time the Congress take every possible step to safeguard our remaining national resources and preserve our domestic economy.

If we are to remain one of the last democratic strongholds in all the world. we must eliminate the grapeshot scattering of American commodities around the world, with no return.

Tom Paine once spoke of three classes of men. Of the third class, he said:

A certain set of moderate men who think better of the European world than it deserves, and this last class by an ill-judged deliberation will be the cause of more calamities to this continent than all the other

Mr. President, applying that language to the situation today, I wish to say that I hope Tom Paine was not a prophet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I have discussed with the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] an amendment to be added in line 23 on page 16; and the Senator from New Hampshire is going to accept the amendment. He desires to have the record show a sentence or two of intent, because the purpose of this amendment is to make certain at long last that we are going to take care of our domestic needs for anhydrous ammonia necessary to keep certain fertilizer plants in this country in operation, in order to supply American farmers with the fertilizer they need.

Therefore, I offer the amendment, with the understanding that the language can be perfected in conference, in order to carry out the intent I have enunciated, which is to see to it that the Army must take out from foreign allotments a small quantity of anhydrous ammonia-in the neighborhood of from 3 percent to 5 percent—that is to say keep for domestic use from 3 percent () 5 percent of the amount now being exported—or, in other words, whatever is needed to keep these plants in operation.

So on page 16, line 23, after the word 'Treasury", I offer this amendment:

Provided, That the Administrator and the Secretary of the Army shall adjust the export allotments of fertilizer materials and compounds herein provided, including anhydrous ammonia, by taking into account do-mestic needs of anyhdrous ammonia for the manufacture of fertilizer, to the end of supplying domestic fertilizer plants with that quantity of anhydrous ammonia necessary to meet domestic fertilizer needs.

Mr. BRIDGES. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the en-grossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. AIKEN voted in the affirmative when his name was called.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Is it not a fact that the calling of the yeas and nays had begun, and the Senator from Vermont had voted, when his name was called, before the suggestion of the absence of a quorum was made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from South Carolina was on his feet and was addressing the Chair before the Senator from Vermont had answered to his name. The Chair apologizes to the Senator from South Carolina and to the Senator from Ver-

So the bill (H. R. 6801) was passed.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments. request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. Gurney, Mr. Brooks, Mr. Reed, Mr. McKellar, Mr. Hayden, and Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF IMMIGRATION ACT OF 1917—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 3566, to amend subsection (c) of section 19 of the Immigration Act of 1917, as amended, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. conference report will be read.

The conference report was read, as

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3566) to amend subsection (c) of section 19 of the Immigration Act of 1917, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recom-mend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as fol-

ing in lines 9 to 20:

'If during the session of the Congress at which a case is reported, or if a case is reported less than 90 days prior to the close of the session, then during the next session of the Congress, the Congress passes a resolution stating in substance that it favors the suspension of such deportation, the Attorney General shall cancel deportation proceedings. If during the session of the Congress at which a case is reported, or if a case is reported less than 90 days prior to the close of the session, then during the next session of the Congress, the Congress does not pass such a resolution, the Attorney General shall thereupon deport such alien in the manner provided by law."

And insert in lieu thereof the below quoted

"If during the session of the Congress at which a case is reported, or prior to the close of the session of the Congress next following the session at which a case is reported, the Congress passes a concurrent resolution stating in substance that it favors the suspension of such deportation, the Attorney General shall cancel deportation proceedings. If prior to the close of the session of the Congress next following the session at which a case is reported, the Congress does not pass such a concurrent resolution, the Attorney General shall thereupon deport such alien in the manner provided by law."

And the Senate agree to the same. Chapman Revercomb, ALEXANDER WILEY, JAMES O. EASTLAND, Managers on the Part of the Senate.

FRANK FELLOWS, LOUIS E. GRAHAM, EMANUEL CELLER, Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1948

The House met at 10 o'clock c. m.
The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Father, by whose power we live and by whose mercy we are spared, we thank Thee for the endless renewing of our daily blessings. Keep us this day without sin and free from the bondage of fear.

Bless richly our Speaker and all Members; grant that they may so serve that they may be models of rectitude, with every root of bitterness cast out and the good of all the goal of each. Help us to believe the best we know and the best our hearts have hoped for; hence we shall be delivered from haste and dismay. Keep us constant in our labors, just in our decisions, relating our vocations to the Divine One who taught as never man taught. O fill us with Thy spirit that we may be armed and guided in the path of the perfect day. In our Saviour's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. Con. Res. 201. Concurrent resolution accepting the invitation to attend the meeting of the Empire Parliamentary Association in Bermuda; and

H. Con. Res. 204. Concurrent resolution authorizing the disposal of certain obsolete Government publications now stored in the folding rooms of the Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate, having proceeded to reconsider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 296) entitled "Joint resolution to maintain the status quo in respect of certain employment taxes and social-security benefits pending action by Congress on extended social-security coverage," returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, and passed by the House of Representatives, on reconsideration of the same, it was—

Resolved, That the said joint resolution pass, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 655§. An act to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. CONNALLY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6705. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Wherry, Mr. Gurney, Mr. Ball, Mr. Cordon, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma, and Mr. O'Mahoney to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 3735) entitled "An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to donate and convey to Okaloosa County, State of Florida, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a portion of Santa Rosa Island, Fla., and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Saltonstall, Mr. Morse, and Mr. Byrd to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6419) entitled "An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Revercome, Mr. Malone, Mr. Martin, Mr. McClellan, and Mr. Holland to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5883) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture (exclusive of the Farm Credit Administration) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33 to the above-entitled bill; that the Senate further insists upon its amendment numbered 1 to said bill, disagreed to by the House, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Brooks, Mr. Gurney, Mr. Reed, Mr. Bushfield, Mr. Russell, Mr. Hayden, and Mr. Tydings to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5524) entitled "An act making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6430) entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 34 and 39 to the above-entitled bill

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2237) entitled "An act to increase certain benefits payable under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act."

WE MUST HAVE A STOCK PILE OF STRATEGIC MATERIALS

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD on the Russell bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise in support of the Russell bill which provides for incentive payments for exploration and development of our domestic production of strategic materials.

First, I wish to discuss the legislation from the standpoint of national defense. In 1939 Congress passed a Stock Pile Act with the intent of building up a supply of strategic materials. When we were attacked by Japan at Pearl Harbor in 1941, we found that there was no stock pile because of the failure of the administration of the act to carry out the intent of Congress.

Our failure to have such a stock pile of strategic materials placed us in a precarious position and unquestionably resulted in extending the length of the war and the loss of more lives than would have been the case if these strategic materials had been ready for use.

We are facing a similar situation today. In 1946 Congress passed another Stock Pile Act known as Public Law 520. Two years later in 1948 we find that there is no stock pile and if war were to break out tomorrow, we would be in dire need of such materials. Administrative policies have permitted many mines to close and it would take months to reopen these mines for production.

During this session of Congress we have appropriated billions of dollars for European aid. We have appropriated billions of dollars for military purposes. We are again about to draft our young men for military service to protect the Nation in case of war.

All of these billions will be of no avail unless we in some way or other provide the metals which are provided for in this bill. We cannot produce steel without manganese. We cannot produce the necessary types of steel alloys without many of the metals listed in this legislation. We need them all in either peace or war.

In case of war the only safe source of supply is mines within the United States. Submarines can block imports. Revolutions in other nations, strikes and embargoes can shut off supplies from other nations. We cannot risk the welfare of the United States in depending upon ores from nations that lie across thousands of miles of sea lanes.

I maintain that if we can spend $20,000,000,000 for European aid and military purposes that it would be the height of folly to neglect the very production of the materials which are required. I realize full well that the policies of this administration have been geared to obtaining these materials through trade and that many of our large mining companies are contemplating foreign investments to produce these minerals which I maintain should be produced in the United States because of the safety which lies in a source of supply that cannot be disrupted or shut off.

Second, I wish to discuss this legislation from an economic standpoint. Regardless of economic theories, new wealth still finds its source in the soil. The income of the United States depends directly upon the production, processing, and distribution of this new wealth in the form of finished goods. Our supply of new wealth determines our standard of living and times price determines the income which will determine whether we have prosperity and national solvency.

We are still a young Nation and in the case of mineral resources we have merely scratched the surface of our landed area. Who knows how much we have in the way of strategic materials? Who knows the tonnage of ore that may be uncovered by the development of an outcropping of ore? No one, and it is only by exploration and development that this can be determined. For the Congress of the United States to provide legislation which will make possible such development should be considered as an investment in the future of the United States. Failure to pass this legislation will bring upon us the indictment of future generations that the Congress of the United States did not have the vision to legislate for the future welfare of the United States

In my opinion we are in the same position that Congress found itself in the year 1852. At that time Congress was considering the building of railroads to open up the western part of the United States. At that time Daniel Webster, then a United States Senator, spoke as follows during the debate:

What do we want with this vast, worthless area, this region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts of shifting sands and whirlwinds of dust, of cactus and prairie dogs? To what use could we ever hope to put these great deserts or those endless mountain ranges, impenetrable and covered to their very base with eternal snow? What can we ever hope to do with the western coast of 3,000 miles, rockbound, cheerless, uninviting, and not a harbor on it?

Mr. President, I will never vote one cent from the Public Treasury to place the Pacific Ocean one inch nearer to Boston than it is.

That, Mr. Speaker, was less than 100 years ago and today the State of California ranks third in population. Yet if that Congress had followed the advice of Daniel Webster, we would still be a Nation of oxcarts and wagons. The building of the railroads and the development of the Middle West and the Western States brought forth the new wealth that built our present system.

There are those today who like Webster, say that the West has little ores and that we must go to other nations. There are those who are against the investment of these funds to develop the future resources which the generations to come will need. I hope that this Congress will have more vision than Daniel Webster and pass legislation before we adjourn which will make it possible to develop and tap new sources of wealth which abound in these western mountain ranges as well as in other sections of our Nation, our Territories included, especially Alaska.

Finally I wish to point out that these incentive payments are an investment and should not be classed as subsidies. A careful examination of our economy will reveal that for the past 25 years each $1 of new wealth produced in the United States from the farms, mines, and sea combined has translated into $5 of national income, regardless of depression or prosperity. We have had depressions, only because of our failure to properly price our production of new wealth.

Applying this turn of raw material income let us assume that by the payment of $100,000,000 a year in incentive payments, we can bring into production an additional $1,000,000,000 of new wealth. In the normal process of production and use it will provide the foundation for $5,000,000,000 of national' income and with the present rate of tax levy for Federal revenue of 20 cents on the dollar, the increased income will provide the revenue to pay the bill. In addition it will give us the permanent supply of materials for either peace or war.

As you all know we have approximately $260,000,000,000 of national debt. If that debt is ever to be paid it must be paid from the production of new wealth from the soil of the United States. It will never be repaid by imports or production of these strategic materials in other nations.

A FRIEND OF MINE IS DEAD, FOR ISRAEL

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the Record, and to include a copy of a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I lost a friend, my country lost a truly great man, and the Jewish community of the world lost a hero who now belongs to history, when "Mickey" Marcus died in the hills of Palestine.

Truly it may be said, he died that men might live.

I knew Col. David Marcus well, and Physically, he was no giant; but in his heart he had the courage and the vision of King David.

By temperament and environment he was a civilian citizen of America who served his country well; but by his West Point training and the compulsion of compassion he was a soldier who served the world and died for democracy.

Whatever "Mickey" Marcus did, he did well. He was a capable assistant United States attorney; he was an outstanding commissioner of corrections for the city of New York; he was an American soldier who proved his patriotism at risk of his life.

He was a Jew-who gladly and voluntarily left all that men hold dear to help create the new state of Israel, and I know that if he had one moment in which to reflect before his soul fied, he died without regret, because he died for an ideal of a happier human society which was bigger than he was.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can say here which can add to the stature of a brave man. His life is a shining monument to Colonel Marcus which no fleeting words can improve.

But that the record of the life and death of a good man may be written where all may read, I ask unanimous consent that I may insert as part of my remarks the touching requiem written by Loy Warwick and printed in the June 13 issue of the New York Post.

DACHAU MADE DAVID MARCUS, UNITED STATES - HERO, A ZION MARTYR

(By Loy Warwick)

David Marcus died at his post in the hills of Jerusalem. And now Palestine seemed so much closer to home.

To many an American, to countless New Yorkers, that "Mickey" Marcus had given his life that others might live in freedom, there was something intensely personal.

The question came naturally: Why?

Why had this American, a West Pointer, a hero of World War II, a successful, respected citizen and public servant—why had he chosen again to forsake the safety and security of home to die in battle on the seemingly remote battlefield of Jerusalem?

The answer was not altogether lost.

Gideon Ruffer, of the Israeli delegation at the United Nations, had at least a part of it:

Marcus had been at the head of an American tank column that liberated the Dachau concentration camp.

"He was one of the first Americans to enter Dachau, and see the terrible things the Nazis had done," Ruffer said. "He remembered the tragedy and horror and the piles of Jewish bodies.

"This he never forgot. He told us:

"'It made me fiercely interested in a Jewish state, a state where the Jews would not be a minority at the mercy of the majority's whims.''

It was when Ruffer was studying at the Jewish Agency Public-College in Jerusalem that he met Marcus.

"He stayed with us at the school, instead of going to a hotel," Ruffer recalled. "He was very friendly, very popular. He danced with us and told us stories—stories of how he had become a Zionist.

"Mickey Marcus was deeply impressed by the spirit of Jewish youth. He believed that the spirit of the Jewish people is more valuable as a military factor than the numerical superiority of the Arabs.

"For this reason, he was convinced the Jews would win the war. He never lost his faith in final victory."

Marcus' presence in beleagured Palestine had been a closely guarded secret. As he went about the grim, vital task of creating—almost singlehanded—the Army of Israel, there were not many who knew the real identity of this likeable, purposeful man of 47.

Few knew, for example, that this man who had responded so unselfishly to the urgent appeal from the Jewish agency, had once served New York City as commissioner of correction. Only a handful were aware that he was a former United States Army colonel, twice decorated by the United States during World War II.

Marcus held the Distinguished Service Cross for his part in the surrender of Italy and Germany and the Bronze Star Medal for gallantry in action. He saw service in nearly every theater of operations, helped draft the surrender terms for Italy and Germany, and the legal aide to the United States delegation at Dumbarton Oaks, Yalta, Tehran, and Potsdam.

With all his fine legal talent and value as a planner and a strategist, Colonel Marcus was no swivel-chair soldier. He didn't enter Normandy in a command car—he came down in a parachute. And, when the Americans swept into Dachau in 1945, Colonel Marcus rode at the head of a rumbling tank column.

The death of Marcus in the Jerusalem hills was the first officially recorded by the Israeli Government of a former high-ranking United States Army officer, although several former American soldiers have died in Palestine while serving with Israeli forces.

Marcus had been appointed supreme commander of the forces of Jerusalem only a short while before he fell Thursday night on the field of battle.

"Please inform Mrs. David Marcus that her husband fell last night at his post in the hills of Jerusalem," said cablegram from Israeli Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion to his widow, Mrs. Emma Marcus, of 485 Westminster Road, Brooklyn.

Mrs. Marcus was prostrated by the tragic news.

PLAN TRIBUTE

There will be a tribute to his memory from his friends and legal associates in Kings County Court, just before the session opens at 10 a. m. Monday.

Many joined Ben-Gurion Saturday in paying tribute to Marcus. In performing the sad duty of disclosing Marcus death, Ben-Gurion had said: "His name will live forever in the annals of the Jewish people and we feel confident American Jewry will be proud of its great and gallant son who has given his life for the liberation of Israel."

Said Dr. Emanuel Neumann, president of the Zionist Organization of America:

"The memory of the late Col. David Marcus will be enshrined in the hearts of all Americans along with the names of Lafayette and Kosciusko, who fought for the rights of human dignity and freedom. As Americans we are proud of his contributions and sorrowful at the passing of a great spirit."

Said Mayor O'Dwyer: "I knew him well enough to know that, if he had to die, that was the way he would have preferred to go fighting for freedom."

BROOKLYN NATIVE

David Marcus was born February 22, 1901, in Brooklyn, where he was graduated from Boys High School. He attended West Point and was commissioned in the infantry in 1924. Two years later he resigned and went into law—receiving a degree from Brooklyn Law School, at that time part of St. Lawrence University.

He became an assistant United States attorney in 1929, and in 1933 was appointed by Mayor LaGuardia first deputy commissioner of correction. He was made full commissioner in 1940, rejoining the Army that same year.

After the war he served on the German occupation staff of General Clay. In 1946 he was decorated by the British Government, "in recognition of the distinguished service performed in cooperation with the British armed forces during the war."

ANSWERED PLEA OF ZION

Marcus remained in the service until January 1947, and had just resumed his law practice here—at 545 Fifth Avenue—when he answered the plea of the Jewish Agency and went to Palestine, there to accomplish in 6 months what had seemed an insurmountable task.

He was smuggled into the Holy Land shortly after Christmas and immediately began transforming the Haganah into a modern fighting army. He worked day and night,

He wrote military manuals, established officers' training schools, organized a general staff and supervised field and school training.

Marcus fell at Jerusalem and a spokesman of the Israeli Government said:

"He died trying to open the road to get food through to the people of Jerusalem. This was not the responsibility of the Jewish government. It was a world responsibility."

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, after any other special orders heretofore granted, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs may sit today during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

TRADE AGREEMENTS EXTENSION ACT.OF 1948

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6556, an act to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That this act may be cited as the 'Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948.'

"SEC. 2. The period during which the President is authorized to enter into foreign trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (U. S. C., 1946 ed., title 19, sec. 1351), is hereby extended from June 12, 1948, until the close of June 30, 1949.

"SEC. 3. (a) Before entering into negotiations concerning any proposed foreign trade agreement under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, the President shall furnish the United States Tariff Commission (hereinafter in this act referred to as the 'Commission') with a list of all articles imported into the United States to be considered for possible modification of duties and other import restrictions, imposition of additional import restrictions, or continuance of existing customs or excise treatment. Upon receipt of such list the Commission shall make an investigation and report to the President the findings of the Commission with respect to each such article as to (1) the limit to which such modification, imposition, or continuance may be extended in order to carry out the purpose of such section 350 without causing or threatening serious injury to domestic producers of like or similar articles; and (2) if increases in duties or additional import restrictions are required to avoid serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or similar articles the minimum increases in duties or additional import restrictions required. Such report shall be made by the Commission to the President not later than 120 days after the receipt of such list by the Commission. such foreign trade agreement shall be en-tered into until the Commission has made its report to the President or until the expiration of the 120-day period.

"(b) In the course of any investigation pursuant to this section the Commission shall hold hearings and give reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings.

"(c) Section 4 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930," approved June 12, 1934, as amended (U. S. C., 1946 ed., title 19, sec. 1354), is hereby amended by striking out the matter following the semi-colon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'and before concluding such agreement the President shall request the Tariff Commission to make the investigation and report provided for by section 3 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948, and shall seek information and advice with respect to such agreement from the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, from the National Military Establishment, and from such other sources as he may deem appro-

"Sec. 4. The Commission shall furnish facts, statistics, and other information at its command to officers and employees of the United States preparing for or participating in the negotiation of any foreign trade agreement; but neither the Commission nor any member, officer, or employee of the Commission shall participate in any manner (except to report findings, as provided in section 3 of this act and to furnish facts, statistics, and other information as required by this section) in the making of decisions with respect to the proposed terms of any foreign trade agreement or in the negotiation of any such agreement.

"Sec. 5. (a) Within 30 days after any trade agreement under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, has been entered into which, when effective, will (1) require or make appropriate any modification of duties or other import restrictions, the imposition of additional import restrictions, or the countinuance of existing customs or excise treatment, which modification, imposition, or continuance will exceed the limit to which such modification, imposition, or continuance may be extended without causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or similar articles as found and reported by the Tariff Commission under section 3, or (2) fail to require or make appropriate the minimum increase in duty or additional import restrictions required to avoid such injury, the President shall transmit to Congress a copy of such together with a message accurately identifying the article with respect to which such limits or minimum requirements are not complied with, and stating his reasons for the acton taken with respect to such article. If either the Senate or the House of Representatives, or both, are not in session at the time of such transmission, such agreement and message shall be filed with the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House or Representatives, or both, as the case may be. "(b) Promptly after the President has transmitted such foreign trade agreement to Congress the Commission shall deposit with the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a copy of its report to the President with respect to such agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. RAYBURN. What is the request? The SPEAKER. That the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. Nobody has spoken to me about it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cooper] was here a moment ago and he did not know what was going to be done. Of course, I am going to object for the present because we do not know what the amendment is.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is to be gained by holding it up?

Mr. RAYBURN. I object because the gentleman has not said anything to me or to any Member on the minority side that he was going to submit this request. That is a very good reason.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the gentleman from Minnesota withdraw his request.

The Chair wishes to state at this time that many matters will be disposed of by unanimous consent this week. To facilitate the dispatch of that business it is advisable, in fact, it is imperative. that Members submitting such requests first confer with both majority and minority leaders.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the fact that it was necessary to consult anyone with regard to taking a matter off the Speaker's table, and if I have offended in the matter. I apologize

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary, of course, but it will help expedite matters if that course is followed.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is rather neces-

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an advertisement of the postal and Federal employees which appeared in all the newspapers of the country entitled "The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire."

Mr. CARSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. ARENDS. Will not the gentleman withhold it until after the pending business is disposed of to pass the bill we had under consideration last night?

Mr. RANKIN. I think if we are going to wreck the Republic the Members ought to be here to participate, and I shall insist. We may not want to pass it. I am going to insist.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALLECK. As I understand, the unfinished business before the House is the vote on the bill which was under consideration as we adjourned last night.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. Mr. HALLECK. May the gentleman from Mississippi insist upon his point of no quorum, then?

The SPEAKER. He may if he wishes. Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold my point of order until that vote is taken, if it will be worth any-

The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that two-thirds had voted in favor thereof.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCK. Last night when the vote was taken I objected to the vote on the ground that a quorum was not present and then the House adjourned. I understood that unanimous consent was given that the roll call would be taken as the first order of business this morn-

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was given that the vote be taken again. The gentleman still has the right to object to the vote.

HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask Mr. unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, with reference to this bill, H. R. 6527, extending the period for providing assistance to certain school agencies still overburdened with war-incurred school enrollments, I discussed the situation in my district with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Landis], who reported this bill from the Committee on Education and Labor and also other members of the committee, which I wish to be included in this debate for clarification.

As there were only 40 minutes debate because the bill is being considered under suspension of rules, I did not feel that I should endeavor to inject the discussion of some particular project. The bill is too important to jeopardize by trying to adjust each particular situation that might apply to some one project.

I have supported this program from its inception. I believe it is only fair and just that the Government bear the necessary expenditures imposed on school districts by the great influx of students in war areas necessary to our national de-fense. If the school districts are willing to burden themselves by taking care of these children and helping to educate them even though it became necessary for the Government to bring them there in the interest of the war and our national defense, the Government should in my opinion take care of the added expense

Many of these areas become highly congested. It is impossible for the school districts to take care of the sudden increased attendance. In our own State we are heavily taxed for school purposes. Our school districts and State education program are providing far above the national average in percentage of tax money for school purposes. Many of these war projects are being continued causing the continuous burden on the school districts and therefore, this legislation is highly desirable and thoroughly justified.

But the situation I have in mind in my district, Mr. Speaker, is one that I wish to call to your attention. As you know, I represent the Seventh District of Arkansas in the southern part of our State. During the war the Navy Department established Schumaker Naval Ammunition Depot near Camden, Ark. It is not only in my district but the home of Senator McClellan.

This project requires thousands of people in its construction and operation. It is a highly important project in the operation of the Navy and the Navy still carries it as one of its necessary operations

This project is in Harmony Grove school district, which is a fairly large consolidated school. The school is several miles from the project and to get to the school by bus it is necessary to go through the Camden district.

As it is much more convenient and facilities are more readily available, the Camden school district receives and takes care of these students, several hundred of them.

Under the provisions of the Lanham Act, which this bill would extend, it is provided that Federal assistance is continued to those schools that previously received Federal contribution. Under this bill, it is provided that contributions for operation and maintenance of school facilities to local school agencies requiring assistance will be made to those that are still overburdened with school enrollment caused by war activities and the transition from war to peacetime conditions and who have received during this fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, Federal contributions administered by the Federal Works Agency for such operation and maintenance.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Harmony Grove School District under the act would be the one to receive the funds because the application originally was made by that school district to take care of these school children. Harmony Grove School District has in return transferred the funds to the Camden School District. The Camden School District has been providing for and taking care of these students.

Therefore, this bill extends to those districts, and logically so, that heretofore have received contributions. means that Camden actually is entitled to continue receiving contributions for taking care of these schools, but because of the situation, the Harmony Grove District must make the application and transmit the funds to the Camden District. The Federal Works Agency has recognized this practical situation before and I have talked with them about this extension, and they recognize the problem now. It is generally understood that this relief can be obtained under such agreement and administration of the funds as we have experienced in the past.

I feel sure there will not be too much trouble in working it out as has been indicated by the provisions of this legislation and with those I have discussed it with in the Federal Works Agency. I recognize the Harmony Grove District would like to keep this money for their own operation and would be glad to take care of these schools to the best of their ability if it were convenient for them to go there. Nevertheless, the money is being provided to take care of the schools which are providing for the children, and I want this statement in the interest of these children who must receive their educational training to be made in order that it might help not only to clarify but explain the history of the legislation insofar as it affects this project.

H. R. 6923 AND H. R. 6924

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced today H. R. 6923 which is for the purpose of providing permanent housing for the flood victims in the Vancouver-Portland area deprived of their houses as a result of the disaster, most of whom were occupying federally owned housing which has been destroyed, and unless relief is granted they will be without habitations. This bill provides as follows:

H. R. 6923

The attached bill to authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to make loans to provide housing accommodations for families in the Vancouver-Portland area deprived of their homes as a result of the flood disaster, briefly provides:

(1) A $30,000,000 Vancouver-Portland area flood-disaster fund to be made available to the Housing and Home Finance Administrator through the issuance and sale of notes to the Secretary of the Treasury;

(2) Authorizes the Administrator to make loans to public and private agencies to enable them to construct and sell or rent dwelling accommodations for families deprived of their homes by the disaster with a first preference to families who had been tenants in the Vanport housing project. One hundred percent loans based on necessary current cost would be available for both sales and rental housing, at a 4-percent interest rate in the case of private corporations or persons and a 3-percent rate in the case of loans to public bodies;

(3) Loans to public agencies cannot be made without the prior approval of the local governing body. To enable such housing to be made available to low-income families deprived of their homes by the flood disaster, the Administrator may agree to waive principal and interest payments during the first 5 years of occupancy to the extent necessary to permit adjustment of rentals, provided that the State, municipality, or other local public body or agency shall similarly agree to make a contribution to the project for such low-rent purposes in the form of cash, land, community services or facilities for which a charge is usually made, or tax remissions or tax exemptions in an amount not less than 20 percent of the amount of the principal and interest payments waived by the Administrator;

(4) Loans for housing built for sale may not exceed 25 years, and the aggregate amount of the loan and any other obligation shall not exceed: (A) $7,500 if such dwelling is designed for a single-family residence, or (B) $12,500 if such dwelling is designed for a two-family residence, or (C) $16,000 if such dwelling is designed for a three-family residence, or (D) $18,500 if such dwelling is designed for a four-family residence;

(5) Loans for rental housing shall have

(5) Loans for rental housing shall have maturities satisfactory to the Administrator and shall not exceed $7,500 per family unit for such part of the property or project attributable to dwelling use;

(6) In addition to the usual administrative provisions and authority to issue and sell notes to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Administrator is authorized to make necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of the act, and he shall maintain a separate set of accounts for this program and report to the Congress annually on the program authorized by the act;

(7) No loan shall be made under the act after March 31, 1949, except pursuant to a commitment to make a loan issued before March 31, 1949,

Mr. Speaker, I have also introduced today H. R. 6924 which authorizes an additional $10,000,000 to the Federal National Mortgage Association for loans under section 2 of the National Housing Act. The bill provides as follows:

H. R. 6924

STATEMENT ON BILL TO AID PRODUCTION OF PER-MANENT HOUSING IN THE PORTLAND, OREG .-VANCOUVER, WASH., AREA

This bill would encourage the extension of necessary credit to assist in providing lowcost housing urgently needed in the Portland-Vancouver area as a result of recent floods. The bill would authorize the Federal National Mortgage Association (a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corpoto purchase first mortgages made, after the enactment of this bill, for the purpose of financing the construction of new residential structures in that area, if the financial institutions from which the mortgages are purchased have insurance under section 2 of the National Housing Act with respect to such mortgages. Any such purchase would have to be made within 2 years from the date of the mortgage at a price equal to the unpaid balance plus accrued interest.

Under this section 2 of the National Housing Act, financial institutions may be insured against losses, up to 10 percent, on the total amount of their loans made for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and improvements of existing structures or financing the building of new structures. Any such loan for building a new structure (referred to as title I, class 3 loans) may not presently ex-Legislation (S. 866) is pending ceed $3,000. which would increase this amount to $4,500.

The total amount of funds the bill would make available to the Federal National Mortgage Association for this purpose would be $10,000,000, which would be provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The total amount of authorized investments, loans, purchases, and commitments of the Corporation would be increased accordingly. The bill would not require any appropriation of funds by the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the emergency in the Columbia River area due to the disastrous flood is growing worse from day to day. The river is still at top flood level and many thousands of acres of farm land, suburban, city, and village areas are completely flooded out and more than 50,000 people have been deprived of their homes, and the damage will run far in excess of $100,000,000. I am sure that the people of this area are grateful to the Congress for the enactment of legislation last week, Senate Joint Resolution 231-my companion bill, House Joint Resolution 423-which provided some temporary stopgap housing. But permanent housing relief is necessary as well as funds for reconstruction of public facilities, both Federal and local, in order to protect the lives and welfare of this vast area 120 miles in length up and down the fertile Columbia River Valley.

Owing to the imminent adjournment of the Congress it is essential that extraordinary steps be taken to secure the necessary legislation and appropriations to meet this great emergency which has overtaken our own people. We have been very generous with our aid to many distressed peoples around the world. We now have an opportunity to give some of our largess to some of our own people. I hope the Congress will pass H. R. 6923 and H. R. 6924, and other bills pending to provide housing, emergency aid, and the repair, restoration, or replacement of dikes, highways, and facilities of the Federal Government, and any needed aid to local communities. COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on House Administration may be permitted to sit today during the session of the House

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? There was objection.

INTER-AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION CONFERENCE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 56.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the Inter-American Bar Association will hold its sixth conference at Detroit, Mich., during the month of May 1949; and

Whereas this is the first time that the Inter-American Bar Association has planned a conference in the United States; and

Whereas the purposes of the association, as stated in its constitution, are to establish and maintain relations between associations and organizations of lawyers, national and local, in the various countries of the Americas, to provide a forum for exchange of views, and to encourage cordial relations among the lawyers of the Western Hemisphere; and

Whereas the high character of this international association, its deliberations, and its members can do much to encourage cordial relations among the countries of the Western Hemisphere: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States welcomes the Inter-American Bar Association to the United States, and wishes the association unparalleled success in its sixth conference; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Secretary General of the Inter-American Bar Association.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution passed the Senate yesterday. It was before the full committee on the Judiciary of the House this morning, and as chairman I was unanimously directed to make this request. I have cleared through the Speaker, the majority leader, and the minority leader, and there is no objection. This resolution will not become a law: it is merely an expression of good will and welcome. It will cost no money. I cannot imagine any objection,

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mich-

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman what we can do here about this. They sent that over here, as I understand, unanimously. Now, we have a conference report, and the House conferees all signed it. Two of the Members of the other body have signed it, but the other one is carrying it around in his pocket. Now, my question is, How do we get that one out?

Mr. MICHENER. That is a parliamentary question that should be directed to the Speaker. I would be usurping the prerogatives of the Speaker if I attempted to answer.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Could the gentleman answer it in the lobby afterward?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. Mr. HOFFMAN. That will be satisfactory. Thank you.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection. The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first individual bill on the Private Calendar.

LT. GEN. LESLIE RICHARD GROVES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5596) to authorize the promotion of Lt. Gen. Leslie Richard Groves to the permanent grade of major general, United States Army, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas the development of an atomic bomb by the Manhattan engineer district, United States Army, during World War II the greatest achievement represents not only in weapon production but also one of the greatest achievements in the coordination of science, industry, and management in world history and was also a major factor in bringing that war to an earlier victorious close resulting in the saving of thousands of lives and great stores of resources; and

Whereas this accomplishment has also opened unlimited possibilities for peacetime and humanitarian application and expansion of atomic science for future use for the benefit of mankind; and

Whereas this initial achievement was successfully concluded under the leadership, supervision, and direction of Leslie Richard Groves, as Director of the Manhattan engineer district, with superior judgment and courage and in accordance with the highest traditions of the United States Army; and

Whereas the said Leslie Richard Groves has requested that he be retired from service as an officer of the United States Army and such retirement has been authorized; and

Whereas the American people and the Congress of the United States deeply appreciate the outstanding and unique service to the Nation and to humanity thus rendered by the said Leslie Richard Groves and desire to express this appreciation by means of official recognition thereof: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized and requested to appoint, without confirmation by the Senate, Leslie Richard Groves, Army serial No. 012043, lieutenant general, Army of the United States, to the permanent grade of major general in the Regular Army, such appointment to be effective as of the day prior to the effective date of his retirement from the active list of the Regular Army and such appointment shall entitle him to receive the retired pay of major general of the Regular Army.

SEC. 2. The President is further authorized and requested, without confirmation by the Senate, to place the said Leslie Richard Groves on the retired list with the rank and grade of lieutenant general with honorary date of rank thereof as of July 16, 1945, which date commemorates the first explosion by man of an atomic bomb, at the Trinity site, Alamogordo, N. Mex. Such advancement in grade and rank on the retired list, however, shall not result in any increase in retired SEC. 3. This act shall result in no permanent increase in the authorized number of major generals on the active list of the Regular Army.

ROBERT A. ATLAS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4601) for the relief of Robert A. Atlas.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert A. Atlas, of Minneapolis, Minn., the sum of $615. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Robert A. Atlas against the United States for services rendered to the War Department during February and March 1946, when he served as civilian optometrist at Fort Snelling, Minn: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DIMITRI PETROU

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4881) for the relief of Dimitri Petrou.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of the alien Dimitri Petrou, of New York, N. Y., as of the 18th of July 1945, the date on which he entered the United States temporarily as a visitor, if he is otherwise admissible under the provisions of the immigration laws.

Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the quota of Greece for the first year such quota is available.

With the following committee amend-

On line 8 after the word "visitor", strike out the balance of line 8 and all of line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANDREW FERDINAND DEWITT, JR.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5145) for the relief of the legal guardian of Andrew Ferdinand DeWitt, Jr., a minor.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Anderw Ferdinand BeWitt, Jr., of route 21, Alexandria, La., a minor, the sum of $10,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the death of his father, Andrew Ferdinand DeWitt, Sr., in an accident caused by a United States Army vehicle, near the city of Alexandria, La., in the parish of Rapides, State of Louisiana, on March 15, 1941: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appro-priated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amend-

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$6,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal guardian of Andrew Ferdinand DeWitt III, a minor.'

A motion to reconsider was laid on the

JOHN KEITH

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5339) for the relief of John Keith.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Keith, Los Angeles, Calif., the sum of $9,000. Such sum represents the loss sustained by Mr. Keith with respect to a contract entered into with the Federal Works Agency in 1944 for the construction of the Frontier Elementary School in San Diego, Calif. An error in transposing estimate figures to determine bid resulted in contracts drawn up for a sum lower than had been intended by the contractor. However, the correct sum of the bid was much lower than that submitted by any other contractor on this project.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of bill add: ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1.000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

E. NEILL RAYMOND

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5423) for the relief of E. Neill Raymond.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to E. Neill Raymond, examiner, Farmers Home Administration, Denver, Colo., the sum of $130.78, which represents the cost of transporting his immediate family from Washington, District of Columbia, to Denver, Colo., on August 21, 1946: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "pay", insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5201) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to convey by quitclaim deed certain mineral rights in certain lands situated in the State of Oklahoma to Alfred A. Drummond and Addie G. Drummond.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? There was no objection.

DORIS E. SNYDER

The Clerk called the bill (S. 165) for the relief of Doris E. Snyder.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, I unanimous consent that this bill, Calendar No. 664, and Calendar No. 665, and Calendar No. 666 be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

TRADE AGREEMENTS EXTENSION ACT OF 1948

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6556), an act to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Senate amendment has already been read, I ask unanimous consent that it be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6556 and agree to the Senate amendment?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS AT THIS POINT

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I shall support the motion to concur in the Senate amendments to H. R. 6556, the bill to extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. When the bill was considered in the House, I made two principal objections:

First, that the requirement that the President obtain a report from the Tariff-Commission as to the maximum permissible reduction to avoid injury to a domestic producer would involve such interminable delay as to make negotiation of any new trade agreements almost impossible with the limited 1-year extension. The Senate amendments have substantially answered my criticism of the House bill in this respect. A time limitation of 4 months is placed upon the preparation of a report by the Tariff Commission. If the Tariff Commission does not file its report on the articles proposed for negotiation in a trade agreement to the President within such 4 months' period, then the President is authorized to proceed to negotiate, just as under existing law, without regard for the recommendations of the Tariff Commission.

Moreover, the Tariff Commission, in conducting its hearings and investigation, would not be limited to consideration of the effect of proposed changes in tariff rates upon the welfare of individual domestic producers, but rather of the effect upon an entire domestic industry. Not only is this sound policy, but it would also expedite the work of the Tariff Commission in making its findings and report to the President.

My second objection to the House bill was the requirement that the President submit to Congress for review and possible disapproval any trade agreement which would modify any duty or other import restriction to an extent greater than that recommended to him by the Tariff Commission. I argued that this proposal would constitute a return to the old Republican logrolling tariff policy embodied in the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930. The deletion by the Senate of this requirement is, in my opinion, an important recognition by the other body, in which I wholeheartedly concur, that the Congress is in no position to scientifically fix specific tariff rates upon the thousands of diverse articles coming into this country.

Under the Senate amendments the President would be required, within 30 days after a trade agreement exceeding the recommendations of the Tariff Commission has been entered into, to send to the Congress a copy of the agreement together with a message accurately identifying the articles with respect to which such recommendations are not complied with and stating his reasons for the action taken with respect to such article. In my opinion, this requirement is not unduly restrictive upon the President, and in fact may be a constructive contribution to the reciprocal trade agreements procedure.

Mr. Speaker, while I should have preferred a 3-year extension of the Trade Agreements Act, both because it would have permitted better planning by the President for negotiating additional trade agreements and would have provided additional assurance to foreign countries that the Hull reciprocal trade policy will not be abandoned, I am convinced that H. R. 6556, as amended by the Senate, is infinitely preferable to allowing the present act to expire.

It is for these reasons, therefore, that I am supporting the Senate amendments.

FOREIGN TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say regarding the unanimous request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] with regard to his request to concur in the Senate amendments to the extension of the Foreign Trade Agreements Act, having had an opportunity to consider the matter, we, the minority, have no objection to the gentleman's request that the House concur in the Senate amendments. The bill as amended by the Senate is less objectionable to the minority Members than the House bill, and with the restrictions and limitations with which the conferees would have to contend in their deliberations we see no reason for the delay which would be necessitated by sending the bill to conference. We have no objection to his request.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2122) to authorize the Coast Guard to operate and maintain ocean stations, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That the Coast Guard is authorized to operate and maintain floating ocean stations for the purpose of providing search and rescue, communication, and airnavigation facilities, and meteorological services in such ocean areas as are regularly traversed by aircraft of the United States.

"SEC. 2. The Coast Guard is authorized, subject to approval by the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics, to operate, on floating ocean stations authorized by section 1 hereof, such air-navigation facilities as the Administrator may find necessary or desirable for the safe and efficient protection and control of air traffic. The Coast Guard, in establishing, maintaining, or operating any air-navigation facilities herein provided, shall request the cooperation of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics to the end that the personnel and facilities of the Civil Aeronautics Administration will be utilized to the fullest possible advantage."

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2122) to authorize the Coast Guard to operate and maintain ocean stations, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Section 1 of the Senate bill authorized the Coast Guard to operate and maintain such floating ocean stations as may be necessary or desirable to serve the needs of the armed forces and commerce of the United States and to fulfill the international obligations of the United States. Such stations were to be established to provide adequate meteorological, communication, search and rescue facilities for the safe, regular, and economic operation of air services over regions regularly traversed by commercial or military aircraft of the United States. The House amendment accomplished substantially the same objectives in different language, but (a) omitted reference to the establishment of such stations for the purpose of fulfilling the international obligations of the United States, and (b) added a proviso requiring the certificate of the Secretary of Defense as a condition precedent to the establishment of any such station. The conferees agreed to adoption of the language employed by the House amendment, after eliminating the requirement that the Secretary of Defense certify the need for such stations.

Section 2 of the Senate bill (a) provided that the Coast Guard should obtain the approval of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics for the operation, on such floating stations, of such air navigation facilities as the Administrator might find necessary or desirable to protect and control air traffic. and

(b) directed the Coast Guard to solicit the cooperation of the Civil Aeronautics Administration to insure the utilization of personnel and facilities of the Administration to the fullest possible advantage. The House amendment omitted this section. The conferees agreed to the restoration of such section with one minor change in phrasing.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (H. R. 1853) to au-thorize the Coast Guard to establish, maintain, and operate aids to navigation, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate bill-

(1) Authorized the Coast Guard to establish, maintain, and operate aids to maritime navigation and air navigation required to serve the needs of the armed forces, and also loran stations required to serve the needs of such forces, the maritime com-merce of the United States, and the air commerce of the United States;

(2) Specified that such aids might be established within the United States, its Territories and possessions, and at other places, including military or naval bases, beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the United States;

(3) Prescribed that loran stations so established to serve the needs of the air commerce of the United States be such as may be determined by the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics to be required;

(4) Specifically required the Coast Guard to solicit the cooperation of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in obtaining the fullest utilization of the personnel and facilities of the Civil Aeronautics Adminis-

(5) Specifically required the Coast Guard to obtain the consent of the Secretary of the armed service concerned before establishing any such aids on military or naval bases or regions;

(6) Specifically required the procurement of the consent of any foreign country before establishing any such aid therein; and
(7) Provided expressly that nothing in the bill should limit the authority granted by certain cited statutes.

Section 1 of the House amendment consection 1 of the Rouse amendment contained in substance the provisions of the Senate bill referred to in paragraph (1) above, but omitted the remaining elements of the Senate bill. Section 2 of the House amendment contains in substance the provisions of element (2) of the Senate bill, and in addition provides authority for the establishment and operation of such aids other than the loran stations "at other places where such aids to navigation have been established on the date of the enactment of this Act."

The conferees agreed to a bill which, in three sections, contains all elements of the Senate bill and the House amendment there-to. Section 1 includes elements (1) and (3) of the Senate bill. Section 2 contains all other elements of the Senate bill. Section 3 contains the text of section 2 of the House amendment.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6628) to provide for a program in the field of lighter-than-air aeronautics under the direction of the United tates Maritime Commission, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: Section 1 of the House bill authorized and directed the United States Maritime Commission to formulate and carry into effect a program for the development, experimentation, procurement, and operation of lighter-than-air aircraft, and provided authority for the making of purchases and the execution of contracts necessarily incident thereto. The Senate amendment merely authorized the Commission to prepare a study and plan for experimental lighter-than-air rigid airship construction and operation, and required a report to be made to the Congress as soon as practicable during the first regular session of the Eighty-first Congress. The House recedes, with an amendment which directs the preparation of such report to the Congress.

Amendment No. 2: The House bill authorized the Commission to (a) confer with and (b) utilize the personnel and facilities of other Government agencies in carrying out the provisions of the bill. The Senate amendment omitted element (a), but included element (b) in revised language. The House recedes, with an amendment making mandatory the rendition of assistance by other Government agencies to the Commission in carrying out the purposes of the bill.

Amendment No. 3: Section 3 of the House bill authorized the appropriation of such sums as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of the bill. The Senate amendment thereto accomplished substantially the same objective, but in revised language. The House recedes.

CONVERSION, MERGER, OR CONSOLIDA-TION OF NATIONAL BANKS INTO STATE BANKS

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6570) to provide for the conversion of national banking associations into and their merger or consolidation with State banks, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, feeling as I do about the potential effect and the implication involved in this bill, I was compelled to say when the matter was considered in the committee that I could not go along with the enactment of this legislation. As you may have observed, it is a bill to change the long-standing policy and law of the Nation with respect to the conversion, merger, or consolidation of national banks and State banks.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is the most dangerous time and period in our economy when this action could be taken. When I came to the Committee on Banking and Currency I spent about 3 months studying the law with respect to the Treasury Department, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Reserve System, the latter, of course, being relatively a newer set-up in our economy and financial structure. The result of that study did not yield me enough knowledge to assume or presume to write a book on it, but I was satisfied that as we have the situation now as the result of these several establishments and monetary developments that it ought not to be disturbed, and that we have a very excellent method of banking in this country, each one necessary, and the law pertaining to them very jealously guarded, or should be. The proposal in this bill is to change the manner of the conversion of national banks into State banks. We have about 14,000 banks in the United States. Nine thousand of this number, or substantially that, are State banks; about 5,005 are national banks. The Federal Reserve System is dependent upon the national banks for its exist-Under the law it is required that national banks shall be members of the Federal Reserve System; as to the State banks, it is optional with them. Some of them come in and some do not. There is some, I think, slight ground for saving a little charge for banks desiring to withhold their membership or to withdraw their membership from the Reserve System, but this is not to be compared with the value of the system that we have and which obtains in the United States today.

Substantially, our financial structure has been orderly and preserved by the Treasury, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Reserve Banking System, since it was adopted some 30 years ago, or maybe not so long. There would be, to speak frankly about it, too much of a monetary temptation on the part of some national banks to withdraw from the Federal Reserve System. which they could only do by converting themselves into State banks. Then it would be optional with them as to whether they were members of the Federal Reserve System. I can see the possibility and maybe the probability that to make it easy, as this bill does, for national banks to convert into State banks, would be a temptation to them to do this, and there is potentially more than a possibility that enough of these banks would convert into State banks for the simple objective of avoiding the monetary requirement for the support of the Federal Reserve System. And, we could have at a time when this Nation owes-nobody can state the exact amount, but somewhere between $250,000,000,000 and $260,-000,000,000, there would be difficulty in financing that and the ability to guarantee against disaster in these matters is so much fixed in the Federal Reserve System that we ought not to do anything that would lend itself to crippling our Federal Reserve System in the United States

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I am very much interested in what the gentleman is saying. I just wonder, if there is a real danger, why the Federal Reserve Board did not express opposition to the bill.

Mr. FOLGER. I did not intend to bring that up, Mr. Speaker, but you know that at this time we have as Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board a very fine gentleman, whom I have met, and whom I regard most highly, upon whom we are likely to thrust without sufficient consideration this legislation that might result in the destruction of the Federal Reserve System. Frankly, I should like to have furnished to Mr. McCabe sufficient time for him to acquaint himself with the potentialities of such legislation. I do not mean to say this, but I doubt seriously whether Mr. McCabe has had an opportunity to give what he himself would determine to be a sufficient consideration to the implications involved in this legislation. I am persuaded from the little acquaintanceship I have had with him that if he had the time he would not allow somebody to come down from the Federal Reserve System and say, "We have no objection to this legislation." We are endangering his position as a relatively new Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in insisting upon this legislation now.

I think, as a matter of fact, such legislation cught to be postponed, and ought to have been postponed until a later date. The two banking systems, the State banking system and the national banks, have run right along together in that proportion. The 9,000 State banks have remained at about that figure in number and the 5,000 national banks have remained at about that figure in number. I think there are 5,011 now.

I believe we are projecting a dangerous proposal in making it easier for banks to escape the amount of money they must keep with the Federal Reserve System to sustain it by voluntary withdrawal when they come to the State banks, and crippling the whole financial system of the United States, and I suggest that it is highly dangerous.

I am opposed to this bill, as I consider it very dangerous legislation. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.
The Clerk read the bill, as follows:
Be it enacted, etc.—

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. (a) As used in this act the term "State bank" means any bank, banking association, trust company, savings bank (other than a mutual savings bank), or other banking institution which is engaged in the business of receiving deposits and which is incorporated under the laws of any State, any Territory of the United States, Puerto Rico, or the Virgin Islands, or which is operating under the Code of Law for the District of Columbia (except a national banking association).

(b) For purposes of merger or consolidation under the act the term "national banking association" means one or more national banking associations, and the term "State bank" means one or more State banks.

CONVERSION OF NATIONAL BANK INTO AND MERGER OR CONSOLIDATION WITH STATE BANK; PROCEDURY

SEC. 2. A national banking association may, by vote of the holders of at least two-thirds of each class of its capital stock, convert into, or merge or consolidate with, a State bank in the same State in which the national bank is located, under a State charter, in the following manner:

(a) The plan of conversion, merger, or consolidation must be approved by a majority of the entire board of directors of the national banking association. The bank shall publish notice of the time, place, and object of the shareholders' meeting to act upon the plan, in some newspaper with general circulation in the place where the principal office of the national bank is located, at least once a week for four consecutive weeks: Provided, That newspaper publication may be dispensed with entirely if waived by all the shareholders and in the case of a merger or consolidation one publication at least 10 days before the meeting shall be sufficient if publication for 4 weeks is waived by holders of at least two-thirds of each class of capital stock and prior written consent of the Comptroller of the Currency is obtained. The national banking association shall send such notice to each shareholder of record by registered mail at least 10 days prior to the meeting, which notice may be waived specifically by any shareholder.

(b) A shareholder of a national banking association who votes against the conversion, merger, or consolidation, or who has given notice in writing to the bank at or prior to such meeting that he dissents from the plan, shall be entitled to receive in cash the value of the shares held by him, if and when the conversion, merger, or consolidation is consummated, upon written request made to the resulting State bank at any time before 30 days after the date of consummation of such conversion, merger, or consolidation, accompanied by the surrender of his stock certificates. The value of such shares shall be determined as of the date on which the shareholders' meeting was held authorizing the conversion, merger, or consolidation, by committee of three persons, one to be selected by unanimous vote of the dissenting shareholders entitled to receive the value of their shares, one by the directors of the resulting State bank, and the third by the two so chosen. The valuation agreed upon by any two of three appraisers thus chosen shall govern; but, if the value so fixed shall not be satisfactory to any dissenting shareholder who has requested payment as provided herein, such shareholder may within 5 days after being notified of the appraised value of his shares appeal to the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall cause a reappraisal to be made, which shall be final and binding as to the value of the shares of the appellant. If, within 90 days from the date of consummation of the conversion, merger, or consolidation, for any reason one or more of the appraisers is not selected as herein provided, or the appraisers fail to determine the value of such shares, the Comptroller shall upon written request of any interested party, cause an appraisal to be made, which shall be final and binding on all parties. The expenses of the Comptroller in making the reappraisal, or the appraisal as the case may be, shall be paid by the resulting State bank. The plan of conversion, merger, or consolidation shall provide the manner of disposing of the shares of the resulting State bank not taken by the dissenting shareholders of the national banking association.

SAME ENTITY

SEC. 3. The franchise of a national banking association as a national banking association shall automatically terminate when its conversion into or its merger or consolidation with a State bank under a State charter is consummated and, the resulting State bank shall be considered the same business and corporate entity as the national banking association, although as to rights, powers, and duties the resulting bank is a State bank. Any reference to such national banking association in any contract, will, or document shall be considered a reference to the State bank if not inconsistent with the provisions of the contract, will, or document or applicable law.

FEDERAL TAXATION

SEC. 4. Without limiting the application of section 3, a State or national banking association resulting from a conversion, merger, or consolidation shall for purposes of Federal taxation be considered the same taxpayer as the bank from which it has converted or a bank which has merged or consolidated with it.

CONTRAVENTION WITH STATE LAW

SEC. 5. No conversion of a national banking association into a State bank or its merger or consolidation with a State bank shall take place under this act in contravention of the law of the State in which the national banking association is located; and no such conversion, merger, or consolidation shall take place under this act unless under the law of the State in which such national banking association is located State banks may without approval by any State authority convert into and merge or consolidate with national banking associations as provided by Federal law.

CONSENT OF FEDERAL AGENCIES

SEC. 6. Section 12B (v) (4) of the Federal Reserve Act (title 12, U. S. C., sec. 264 (v) (4)), is amended to read as follows:

"(4) Without prior written consent by the Corporation, no insured bank shall (a) merge or consolidate with any nominsured bank or institution or (b) assume liability to pay any deposits made in, or similar liabilities of, any noninsured bank or institution or (c) transfer assets to any noninsured bank or institution in consideration of the assumption of liabilities for any portion of the deposits made in such insured bank. No insured bank shall convert into an insured State bank if its capital stock, or its surplus will be less than the capital stock or surplus, respectively, of the converting bank at the time of the shareholders' meeting approving such conversion, without prior written consent by the Comptroller of the Currency if the resulting bank is to be a district bank, or by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System if the resulting bank is to be a State member bank (except a District bank). No insured bank (except a District bank). No insured bank shall (a) merge or consolidate with an insured State bank under the charter of a State bank or (b) assume liability to pay any deposits made in another insured bank, if the capital stock or surplus of the resulting or assuming bank will be less than the aggregate capital stock or aggregate sur-plus, respectively, of all the merging or con-solidating banks or of all the parties to the assumption of liabilities, at the time of the shareholders' meetings which authorized the merger or consolidation or at the time of the assumption of liabilities, unless the Comptroller of the Currency shall give prior written consent if the assuming bank is to be a national bank or the assuming or resulting bank is to be a District bank; or unless the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System gives prior written consent if the assuming or resulting bank is to be a State member bank (except a District bank); or unless the Corporation gives prior written consent if the assuming or resulting bank is to be a nonmember insured bank (except a District bank). No insured State non-member bank (except a District bank) shall without the prior consent of the Corporation, reduce the amount or retire any part of its common or preferred capital stock, or retire any part of its capital notes or debentures

SEC. 7. Section 12B (e) (2) of the Federal Reserve Act (title 12, U. S. C., sec. 264 (e) (2)), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentences: "A State bank, resulting from the conversion of an insured national bank, shall continue as an insured bank. A State bank, resulting from the merger or consolidation of insured banks, or from the merger or consolidation of a nonlinsured bank or institution with an insured State bank, shall continue as an insured bank."

EFFECT OF TERMINATION OF INSURANCE OF MEMBER BANKS

SEC. 8. The last sentence of section 12B (i) (2) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U. S. C., sec. 264 (1) (2)), is amended to read as follows: "Except as provided in paragraph (2) of subsection (e) of this section, whenever a member bank shall cease to be a member of the Federal Reserve System, its status as an insured bank shall, without notice or other action by the board of directors, terminate on the date the bank shall cease to be a member of the Federal Reserve System, with like effect as if its insured status had been terminated on said date by the board of directors after proceedings under paragraph (1) of this subsection."

CONTINUED MEMBERSHIP IN THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

SEC. 9. Section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act (title 12, U. S. C., sec. 321) as amended, is amended by inserting after the first paragraph thereof the following new paragraph: "Upon the conversion of a national bank into a State bank, or the merger or consolidation of a national bank with a State bank which is not a member of the Federal Reserve System, the resulting or continuing State bank may be admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve System by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in accordance with the provisions of this section, but, otherwise, the Federal Reserve bank stock owned by the national bank shall be canceled and paid for as provided in section 5 of this act. Upon the merger or consolidation of a national bank with a State member bank under a State charter, the membership of the State bank in the Federal Reserve System shall continue."

SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

SEC. 10. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

TRANSFERRING ADMINISTRATION OF THE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION ACT TO FED-ERAL SECURITY AGENCY

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2225) to transfer administration of the Federal Credit Union Act to the Federal Security

The Clerk read the title of the bill. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all functions, powers, and duties of the Farm Credit Administration and of the Governor thereof under the Federal Credit Union Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1751-1772), together with the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect thereto, which were transferred to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation by Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1947, part IV, section 401, are hereby transferred to the Federal Security Agency.

SEC. 2. There is hereby established in the Federal Security Agency a Bureau of Federal Credit Unions, which shall be under the supervision of a director appointed by the Federal Security Administrator. The Bureau of Federal Credit Unions and the Director thereof shall be under the general direction and supervision of the Federal Security Administrator. The functions, powers, and duties of the Farm Credit Administration under the Federal Credit Union Act, as amended, shall be exercised by the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions. The functions, powers, and duties of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration under the Federal Credit Union Act, as amended, shall be exercised by the Director of the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions.

SEC. 3. There are hereby transferred to the Federal Security Agency, to be used in the administration of the functions hereby transferred, (a) all property, including office equipment, transferred to the Federal De-posit Insurance Corporation pursuant to Executive Order 9148 of April 27, 1942, and in use on the effective date of this act; (b) all property, including office equipment, purchased by the Corporation for use exclusively in connection with the adminis-tration of the Federal Credit Union Act, as amended, the cost of which has been charged to such functions and which is in use on the effective date of this act; (c) all records and files pertaining exclusively the supervision of Federal Credit Unions; and (d) all personnel employed primarily in the administration of the Federal Credit Union Act, as amended, on the effective date of this act

SEC. 4. All funds allocated, specifically or otherwise, in the budget of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the administration of the Federal Credit Union Act, as amended, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, which may be unexpended on the effective date of this act, shall be transferred by the Corporation to the Federal Security Agency for use in the administra-tion of the Federal Credit Union Act, as amended. The Corporation shall be reim-bursed for the funds so transferred and shall also be reimbursed for all other funds expended by it prior to the effective date of this act in the administration of the Federal Credit Union Act, as amended, in excess of fees from Federal credit unions received by the Corporation, by deducting such amounts from the first moneys payable to the Secretary of the Treasury on account of the retirement of the stock of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation owned by the United States, and the Corporation shall have a charge on such stock for such amounts.

SEC. 5. This act shall become effective on the thirtieth day following the date of enactment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wolcorr: On page 3, line 6, strike out "1948" and insert "1949."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 671, providing for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6401) to provide for the common defense by increasing the strength of the armed forces of the United States, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as fol-

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 6401) to provide for the common defense by increasing the strength of the armed forces of the United States and for other purpos and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit. After the passage of the bill (H. R. 6401) it shall be in order in the House to take from the Speaktable the bill, S. 2655, and to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of said Senate bill and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H. R. 6401 as passed.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], and now yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for 3 hours of general debate. It also waives all points of order. The bill is open to amendment under the 5-minute rule. It also provides for one motion to recommit. I am not personally going to ask for a roll call on the rule, but I am going to do so upon the final passage of the bill itself. The reason I am not going to ask for a roll call on the rule is that I believe the great majority of the Members of the House, after hearing debate on the bill, will be convinced that this is not a necessary or a good bill. We all want national security. The question is, do we want national security by the American way, or by coercion, com-pulsion, regimentation, and controls? What was disclosed before the Committee on Rules at the hearings in regard to this draft bill? I know that a few brass hats and braid and others were for this bill. The only thing they say is that there is a great emergency confronting this Nation, which necessitates shackling the youth of this country. These people say there is a great emergency, an emergency that will shackle the youth of the Nation, but at the same time they are not saying that there is an emergency in Washington, so that it will be necessary that the Congress of the United States should be here to meet it. I say it confuses me to have these people say there is such an emergency throughout the world that we need to take our young men from the mines and mills, farms and factories, and at the same time, these same individuals do not say that there is an emergency that should keep the Congress of the United States here in Washington.

What about voluntary enlistments? Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that voluntary enlistments have not been given a fair trial. I went back to my own district in Illinois last year and spent considerable time delving into this method of voluntary enlistments. I saw young boys come into my district trying to enlist these young men. They could not sell a sack of peanuts to anyone, but they would contact high-school boys and talk to them about 5 minutes-vouths whom they had never seen-then go away, thinking that that 5-minute talk to a stranger would be enough to convince those young men to give up three or four of the best years of their lives.

I have heard it said, "Well, you voted for the 70-group air force. We must put in these additional young men to take care of that." The record discloses that the Air Force and the Navy are getting more applicants than they need for the Air Force and the Navy. My informa-tion is that the Air Force and Navy are not urging this peacetime draft bill.

We must all know that the history of wars shows clearly that it is not manpower in the armed services that it is most difficult to obtain when war starts, but after war is declared we know that manpower to produce equipment, airplanes, ships, and so forth, is our chief

It has been said that Russia is a great threat. I think history will disclose that Russian communism does not spread through military aggression, but the method that the Communists use is through infiltration. They did that in Czechoslovakia; they are doing it in Italy; they are doing it in France; they are doing it in America. History discloses that they do not use military aggression in spreading their unfair, unreasonable, and detestable doctrines.

While some Members of Congress have taken the floor against regimentation and controls of cattle and sugar and meat and nylons—oh, they stood here and said, "We cannot have controls and regulations on nylons and sugar and cattle and sheep," but they are willing to regiment and control the lives of human beings.

I know that a strong national security is dependent upon a contented people and a solvent government. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that you cannot have a contented people when you take the youth of our Nation off the farms-out of the mines and mills and factories. Let those young people stay on and produce. Let those young men stay on the farms, in the mines, factories, or mills to produce. We have taken on an obligation to feed and take care of most of the We know that sending these billions of dollars' worth of goods abroad has raised prices, and will raise prices up to the sky. So, I say, let these young men remain there. Let them be carpenters or mechanics in their home life because it is also important in the event of an emergency that we have some skilled laborers.

After all, who is for this draft bill? All I know for it is the brass and the braid. That is all; a few international newspapers; probably a few top American Legion officials.

Who is opposed to it? From whom do we receive hundreds of letters? Are the patriotic groups for it? Certainly they are not for it. Are the schools for it? Most of them, Mr. Speaker, are opposed to the draft. Are the colleges for it? Why, of course not. Are the churches? No. Are the farm organizations? No. Are the labor organizations? No. Are the millions of young men for it? course not, Mr. Speaker, because if they were for military service we would not have this draft bill before us; they would be in the armed forces. Some people say these young boys just love military service. Mr. Speaker, I say if they loved it they would naturally be in it.

Are the millions of mothers and fathers for this bill? If they were, we would not have this bill before us.

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. No; not now. So I will say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that I am not going to ask for a roll call vote on the rule, but I am going to ask for a roll call on the final vote. I believe that after you hear this debate you will be convinced that the Army has deliberately not tried to obtain volunteers, that they have intentionally raised the qualifications so high they cannot get recruits.

I may say that in the Rules Committee a change of one vote would have kept this bill bottled up.

I repeat, I am not going to ask a roll call on the rule, but I certainly will ask for a roll call on final passage, and I hope everyone will seriously consider the alternative: Do we want to go the American way, or do we want to go the way of compulsion, coercion, regimentation, and control?

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949, SENT TO CONFERENCE

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6705) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate, and that the Chair appoint conferees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Jensen, Fenton, Stockman, Schwaee of Oklahoma, Kirwan, Norrell, and Gore.

SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the opposition that I find to what is here proposed is something that alarms me greatly. It makes me wonder if self-defense and resistance to wrong is no longer regarded as moral law. Surely no one is insensible to the danger to liberty which impends. That our country is embroiled in a worldwide struggle that the people would like to have avoided, must be apparent to all. To use the occasion to stimulate prejudice against our armed forces is to forget the gravity of the moment and to lend encouragement to the effort to undermine the foundations upon which the Republic rests.

There is in my heart no ill will toward those who have views contrary to my own, and I would not intentionally give offense, but that the strength of the Nation must now be marshaled in its own defense is my profoundest conviction. Concern for the welfare of our country must be the guide to what we do. We should not here impeach the expressed intention of what we have done. We should not sabotage the defense program that we have set up and render useless the billions and billions of dollars that we have spent and are now spending.

That Russia means to enslave the whole of mankind, the entire world takes cognizance. Her masters have said that communism and democracy cannot live side by side, that either the one or the other must perish.

To Russia's campaign of aggression, Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, Albania, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, and Poland have fallen. Russia is in Austria, eastern Germany, and Korea. There is no place on this globe that is inhabited by man but that her agents are there promoting discord, fomenting strife, preaching revolution. Unhappily, we, simpleton-like, have permitted her to use our own resources to make war on us and the rest of the world. Shamefully, let it be confessed, we are in great measure responsible for the power which she now wields and the threat which she holds over the heads of mankind.

It has been with difficulty that the people have learned that which has here-tofore been kept concealed from them, that is, that our policy of appeasement—amounting to something of a partner-ship arrangement with Russia—has brought this country to the verge of ruin and made necessary the spending of billions in the endeavor to overcome the most colossal blunder ever committed in the international field and to expiate the greatest crime of all time.

Mr. Speaker, what is proposed in this bill which the pending resolution is intended to make in order? The Committee sponsoring the bill has reported that the armed services needs to be increased in the interest of national security. The majority report filed is a simple, direct, plain, understandable statement of the situation as it exists. The minority report is a magnificent oration, but it is neither consistent nor convincing. In the minority report there is this language: "We feel that our objections to the conscription program in no way compromises our recognition that America must remain strong and well defended." So, the Committee on Armed Services are in agreement as the bill states, "That an adequate armed strength must be achieved and maintained to insure the security of the Nation." The difference we find between members of the committee is the method by which the needed strength may be attained, whether by voluntary enlistment or by the method provided for in the bill.

It is proposed that the strength of the Army be increased to 837,000 over its present strength of 542,000, that the Navy be increased from 397,000 to 556,-882; Marine Corps from 81,000 to 110,000, and the Air Force from 364,000 to 502,600. In the light of present world conditions these increases are modest and reasonable.

Mr. Speaker, the testimony taken by the committee disclosed that the strength of all the branches of the Armed Services has been progressively diminishing with the exception of the Air Force. Let me turn to the report of the committee. From July 1947, to March 1, 1948, the Army personnel dropped from 594,078 to 469,496. The Navy fell off from 434,000 to 351,000. The Air Force increased in its enlistment from 263,000 to 317,000.

The report of the committee discloses that the Army, resorting to every means at its command, has failed to obtain the necessary enlistments by the volunteer system. That is also true as to the Navy.

If the now authorized method of obtaining enlistments has not produced men sufficient to maintain the Army and Navy at present or presently authorized strength, then is it not reasonable to suppose that it would fail to produce men in numbers sufficient to fill the requirements of an enlarged Army and Navv?

The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. ALLEN], insists that we should continue to rely upon the volunteer system, but if that plan has failed and cannot be made productive then what would he recommend? We must get the men by some means. The bill states that in a free society the obligations and privileges of such service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selection as herein provided.

Let me make disclosure to you of something of which I am proud. Gentlemen opposing this bill tell you of the number of communications that they have had, telegrams and letters, in protest to the bill. I have had from my district and from the people of my State hundreds and hundreds of letters and telegrams, and up to this moment I have not had one in opposition to the bill. Now, why am I for conscription? I favor it because I do not want my part of the country drained of its young manhood in order that the full requirements of the armed services may be met. have not forgotten that prior to World War II when relying upon the voluntary system my congressional district alone was putting more men into the armed services to fight the coming war than many of the States with their teeming millions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, obviously it is quite impossible to discuss all the details or anything like a considerable portion of the details of this legislation in a period of 6 minutes. We have before us now the matter of adopting a rule which will enable the House of Representatives to debate this question and make its own decision on the legislation. I have been contending for a good many weeks that it was the proper function, under these peculiar circumstances, of the Committee on Rules to give the House of Representatives this opportunity. The issue is too vital to be dodged, and the bill too important to be buried. For one, I rejoice that upon yesterday the Committee on Rules decided to bring in this rule which will make it possible for the Members of the House to make their decision.

I have listened, Mr. Speaker, for a good many years to debates and discussions on the problems of national defense. Some of the observations which I hear being made today and that have been made in the last several days are, unless I am very much mistaken, exactly along the same lines that I heard in 1940. Indeed, although it is not important and probably not even interesting, I heard the same sort of arguments made in 1920, when I happened to be chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. Always the contention is made that it is not necessary to do this or that for our defense. Always the contention has been made that we can get along without this or without that. Upon a good many occasions in the past those urgings were influential and were accepted in very large degree, dating back to 1920, with the result, in my humble judgment, that we have lost thousands of lives and spent billions and billions of dollars as a result of our neglect. I know people may differ with me on that, but I cannot avoid at this time expressing that opinion, for it has been deep-seated in me for 28 years.

Among other things which so many people are apt to do when a war is over is to start denouncing the military services and saying that if they would do this differently or that differently all would be at its best. Denouncing the Army seems to be the fashion amongst a good many people as soon as the Army and the other military services have won a great victory. Expressions of lack of confidence in our military leaders are very numerous. Only a short time ago they were heroes in the minds of the public, and today those same men are not worthy of confidence in the minds of some.

I have encountered a good many of those men, and never once have I found a man who loved war, never once have I found a man who did not abhor war. Yet, charged as they are with the duty of studying our national defense and its potentials and expressing their opinions decently, one should not put aside ruthlessly the evidence which they produce.

It is not only they who produce the evidence which confronts us today. Speaker, you and I know full well that this world is in an exceedingly tense situation, exceedingly tense. I am not here to say that war is to come tomorrow or next week or in this calendar year or next year, but that the situation contains a menace to the freedom of the people of the United States cannot be denied.

If all the human race were angels or angelic characters the situation would be very different, but the trouble is that every so often in the history of our race a group arises composed of wicked people, that is, wicked in the sense that we understand that word here in the United States, people intent upon doing wrong and doing it in wholesale fashion. If those regrettable characteristics did not underlie some parts of human nature we would not have to maintain police forces in our cities. Why do we maintain them? To protect society against the wicked. Today it turns out—and we have not sought the responsibility-today it turns out that the United States is the country most looked to for the protection of liberty. Obviously we protect it primarily in our own interests, but we cannot protect our own liberty without at the same time doing our best to protect the liberties of other peoples who normally are our friends. And if we are not strong in the face of this menace, strong in the cause of righteousness, then we may very well fail.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, yield 3 minutes to the gentleman. Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to my distinguished friends, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who, I am sure you will join me in saying, are two of the most valued Members of the House of Representatives. Possibly it would be the better part of wisdom for "a sparrow to seek cover when the eagles begin to fly". But I am so thoroughly convinced—I have such strong convictions about this matter that I have no hesitancy in taking issue with the two distinguished gentlemen. I listened with great care to the remarks of my friend from Georgia, whom I loveand he knows it. At times he has a tongue as blistering as the tropical sun, but he has an inner spirit and a soul as refreshing as the evening dew.

I want to discuss some features of this bill now before us. At the outset I want to say this: It is thoroughly out of place for any man on the floor of the House to begin to insinuate with reference to the patriotism of any man who might oppose this legislation. I have no hesitancy in proclaiming my patriotism. served in one war as many of you did, and if necessary to save this Nation, there is not a man in the House that I know of who would not serve in another. There is no question of patriotism involved here. It is a plain question of right or wrong. And when the gentleman from New York refers to "righteousness," he opens up a very important subject. He wants protection but is apparently unwilling to pay his protection fair compensation for services rendered unless they are commissioned officers. I am opposed to this legislation because it is undemocratic; it is not necessary. It is not in the best interests of society; it does not provide maximum safety; and it is definitelydefinitely, I repeat, to the detriment of the educational system and the future of this country. Why do I say it is undemocratic? Because we are now stepping away for the first time, in times such as these, and saying that we are going to invoke the rules of regimentation. I want a strong Army, I want a strong Navy, I want a strong Air Corps and Marine Corps-but let us get them in the American way.

I say to those gentlemen who advo-cate this, How will you get the planes made for which you have appropriated billions of dollars? You will pay men to build them, you will pay good salaries. How do you propose to get men to build machines, and buildings to house these young men that you would reach out and take with the strong arm of this Govern-ment, and say, "You must come in"? You are going to pay them for it. That is how you will get them. Yet to the private in the Army you pay $75 a month. Does that hold any future? Is there anything there that would give to a young man an inspiration for 2 years? Talk about the morale of this country! My God, there is nothing that would wreck it any more completely than this bill at this time and that I know.

I just witnessed the graduation of 2,300 young men and women at Duke University and the University of North Carolina. The young men were filled with optimism and enthusiasm to make good. What is the future for them? Do not tell me that young men will not go where it is attractive. They will. You do not have anything to do but make it attractive. Certainly, we want an insurance policy. But who are you and who am I to walk around and say, "I want that insurance policy furnished by someone else," when we are not even willing to pay for it? For too long the policy of this Government has been that 5 percent of the people do the marching, fighting, and dying while the other 95 percent make money.

I was struck by this statement in the hill .

The Congress further declared that in a free society the obligations and privileges of such service should be shared generally.

Why, certainly, it should be shared generally. Does that mean that we shall extract from these young men 2 years, black them out, so to speak, for $75 per month? No it means that we should all do our part. To those who serve as our protectors in peacetime should be paid fair compensation by those who are receiving protection. To do otherwise is obviously unfair. And certainly $75 per month for 24 hours service per day is insufficient, unfair, and unattractive.

The Navy is not enthusiastic over this bill. The Marine Corps is not enthusiastic over this bill. What is the mat-ter with the Army? Why can they not make it attractive? Why is it that they have not encouraged their Reserve Corps? Why is it they have not given more attention to the National Guard? Why is it that they have not built the Reserve Corps? Why did they raise the physical and mental requirements of the men? Why is it they have those conditions prevailing which led the minority report to say that their lack of interest in those branches of our national defense had almost reached the point of a national scandal? Why is it they did not carry on with the National Guard and the Reserve? Why is it, when they were wanting universal military training, that they made the statement that they could get along with a minimum of 6 months' training for these men, and yet they now want them for 2 years? You and I know they have been pumping for this condition for years and years, and have been busy setting the stage. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] says he has been advocating this for 28 years, he did not make any mistake. I have been here only 14 years, but he has been grinding constantly for 14 years, to my knowledge. Certainly the Army wants more men, and more power, and no more wise statement was ever made than that men who want power and love to exercise it, should not be trusted with power. The heads are men; men are ambitious. The Congress of the United States should see to it that this country is protected against all isms including militarism.

I say to you, now watch the airplanes go up. Watch the machinery go to turning. Watch the pay rolls begin to build. This bill will set off more wartime prosperity but will present a gloomy picture to those who must serve against their will for $75 per month. Right now we have a half million postal employees. Never has it been necessary to draft them into the postal service. You have a million and a half civil-service employees, and right now we are fixing to raise their salaries, which is already many times what the private in the Army gets. But to the private you will say, if you are unwilling to serve for a paltry $75 per month, we will make you serve.

I am not fighting the Army, but the Army is supposed to tell us-the Congress-how many men they need and then get out of the picture, and not come up here and spend months and months and millions of dollars trying to propagandize this Congress and the country, trying to put over their doctrines and systems. They spent the taxpayers' money, and you know it, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], signed the report in which he very caustically condemned the Army for mis-spending certain of the taxpayers' money in propagandizing this country for the very bill we are now considering, and I quote from House Report No. 1073 of the first session of the Eightieth Congress:

Your committee, therefore, reports its firm conclusion that, on the basis of the evidence at hand, the War Department, its personnel and civilian employees have gone beyond the limits of their proper duty of providing factual information to the people and the Congress, and have engaged in propaganda supported by taxpayers' money to influence legislation now pending before the Congress.

Approved and signed by Forest A. HAR-NESS, Chairman, James W. Wadsworth, HENRY J. LATHAM, CARTER MANASCO, J. FRANK WILSON.

If we need more men, then why employ the most drastic method, the draft, first? Why not arrange for fair compensation-increase the pay and see if that does not work. I am definitely of the opinion it will and am sure the Army is afraid it will.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, I have never felt anything in my life more keenly than I do this. It is unjust, it is unfair, and there is enough fair play in this country, God knows, there is still enough for everybody. To say to me that with only approximately seven enlisted men in the Army for every officer right now, then I ask you what chance has an enlisted man or a drafted man for promotion? The real difficulty is that you cannot find any openings above the rank of sergeant. Your openings are below the rank of sergeant, and there is where you do not pay the men and that is why you do not get them. Make it attractive and you will get them. Do you want to build up and turn loose in this country, those of you who are interested in society and the welfare of society, do you want to turn loose a million and a half men who cannot get married, who cannot support a family if they get married; the wife must go back home to her parents? If they do not get married, they roam this country jumping back fences. That is not such a nice picture. Treat them fairly and pay them and you will not have these problems that are confronting you. If you reach in and draft the young highschool and college boys, where are you expecting to get your future scientists, doctors, and engineers from? A boy is seldom prepared to enter medicine before he is 21 or 22 years old.

In my opinion, this bill will unnecessarily set education back 2 years at least. If it was necessary, if the threat justified it, if war was in the foreseeable future, it might be justified. But fair pay, fair treatment, and a reasonable effort put forth by the armed services will. I am sure, produce the desired results, which is an adequate Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Corps.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired. Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, there are certain incontrovertible facts with respect to this legislation that even the proponents must admit. The first is that this is a major step toward war. The second is that it militarizes the youth of the country. The third is that conscription plus military appropriations to the extent to which we have gone will beyond any doubt place this Nation on a basis of a war economy. I for one would support such a program if such a program were in the interest of the defense of the American people and the best interests of the common people of this Nation. It definitely is not. Despite the tons of newspaper headlines and the millions of radio words we are not in danger of attack.

This program of war and consequent depression is not a program in defense of the best interests of the American people. It is merely a military implementation of the foreign policy which protects the expansionism of Wall Street monopoly capital all over the world.

We must examine this war policy in the light of past and present events.

Our policy in Greece is not a policy in defense of the interests of the American people; it is the policy of imperialistic aggression even going to the extent of establishing and supporting an out-and-out Fascist government.

Our policy in China certainly is not a policy in the interests of the democratic rights of either the people of this Nation or of Asia; it is a policy of supporting Wall Street's imperialistic expansionism there even to the extent of repeating in China, in Asia, what Wall Street did in Europe prior to and subsequent to Munich; that is, the protection of the Hitler of China, Chiang Kai-shek.

This legislation, therefore, is merely an implementation of a program of Wall Street, Wall Street capital, that has gone into Europe, that went into Europe even before the last shot was fired, and is taking over the economy and destroying the liberties of all the people of the world, For that imperialism, we first use the money of the American people; for that imperialism we are now asked to destroy the very liberty and future of America's youth. Conscription, not for defense, but for Wall Street profit is the proposition before us. For me, the blood of Americans comes before the profits of the big trusts. Yes, the same trusts that impoverish Americans and now would have us take the sons of Americans to guarantee the big trust exploitation of the peoples of the world.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, I beg the privilege to introduce myself in connection with this proposed legislation to those who may have forgotten or who never knew how I stood in 1941 before Pearl Harbor, and every day thereafter. I did not fail to vote for any method or any bill for the defense before Pearl Harbor, after June 14, 1941, and until it was all over.

War was abroad in the world. There was no reasonable ground to believe that we would not be drawn into it. Some of us insist that every effort was made to keep out of it and to persuade the warring nations to cease their warfare and compose their differences. Some very patriotic men said we waited too long.

I do not reckon that we did.

But I am opposed to this bill. I think it is one of the most awful contemplaions I have ever known in all of my life. In a day when there is only a little skirmishing going on, and with which we have no part, we propose to enact a law that would take and put into what we call selective service-but when you call it correctly, it is conscription-our boys from 18 and 19 to 26 years of age, at the very time when they ought to be at home, at the very period in their lives when to take the youths within those ages is the most harmful thing we can do to the growth of the morale and the morality of the growing youth of the land.

I got mighty tired of voting to send these boys into war when it was on and when it was inevitable, but I had to do it. We do not have to do it now. It is a difference of opinion, a contemplation, largely a matter of hysteria among some people. I am not going to say anything that reflects upon the military people of this Nation other than to say that we have been fed too much of it in this world.

There has been too much of a disposition on the part of the civilian population to accept that idea of danger 100 percent that is suggested to the Congress and to the people by the military mind. What we are doing is a futile thing any-The day of ground forces is gone. The time of airpower with all of its destructive implications and possibilities is We are chasing rabbits in a fox race when you run off conscripting boys between 19 and 26 years of age to fight with guns and toy pistols and things like that in the face of airplanes and atomic power. They did a glorious job in the war with Germany, but the war was finally brought to an end by the bombing of the cities of Germany that brought them to their knees. In one or two nights Japan was brought to her knees and to surrender, by atomic power and not at the sacrifice of lives of the boys who had been conscripted.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COUDERT].

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Speaker, and fellow Members of the House, we are presented here with a very important and far-reaching issue in American life. For my part let me say at the outset that I expect to support the resolution for the rules, and I am prepared to recognize that the circumstances may require, the situation in the United States and in the world may require, and the needs of the armed services may require a reasonable, fair, and proper draft bill. Gentlemen, if we must have a conscription law, must we have the worst conscription law in the entire western world? Stop and think of this a moment. In all the countries of western Europe where conscription exists there is not one that has a term of service in excess of 1 year. Great Britain, 12 months commencing next January; France, 12 months; Belgium, 12 months; Holland, 12 months; Sweden, 11 months; Denmark, 11 months; Norway and Italy, 12 months. Moreover, the age categories subject to immediate induction in those conscription countries is generally limited to 18 or 19 through 21. Yet, for the first time that we are called upon for conscription in the United States, in a period when no great war is being waged in other parts of the world as in 1939, we are asked to impose upon the American people the harshest and most ruthless draft law in the Western World. And there is no conscription at all in any country in the Western Hemisphere.

Now, just stop and think for a moment what this bill provides. The 19 to 26 provision in the pending bill means that in effect every boy who registers at 19 will be subject to call with a Damoclean sword hanging over his head between the ages of 19 and 26, unless he be called early in the game. That means that for the period of time between registration and actual call to service he will have no freedom of choice or action; he will be frozen in suspense: he will be paralyzed in his occupation; he will be unable with assurance to start a career, learn a skill or undertake a new business, or plan to carry through his education.

I am going to propose amendments at the appropriate time, and I hope the Members of the House will support me, providing, first, that the term of service be reduced to 1 year for the individual, and second that the age groups subject to immediate induction, be limited to men between 19 through 21 years of age.

The third amendment has to do with categories. In the deferment provision of the pending bill the President is given authority to defer any category or class of persons as described. Who can forget the scandal that arose out of the First World War draft when categories of persons were exempted? Do you remember the case of one of the great pugilists, who had become a shipyard worker and, as a member of such category, was exempt from military call? These amendments will make available practically all men in three age classes, 19, 20, and 21. Each year an additional group of 1,138,000 young men turn 18. This makes a very large pool of manpower available for call.

It seems to me that we do not have to follow blindly the dictates of the generals. Of course, they prefer the easier course for themselves—to wit, the longest possible term of service. Should we not give some attention to the people who are going to suffer the impact of this draft? Should we not think a little bit of the young man who is going to have 2 years taken out of his formative period, and perhaps 7 years of his life frozen by liability to a delayed call?

I hope the Members will be here at the time these amendments are offered and will support them.

THE $15,000,000 MILITARY PROPAGANDA HAS PREVAILED

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen favoring this legislation say that it may be necessary for the defense and protection of our country, but in view of the President's statement in California in which he stated he was working for peace and the strengthening of the authority and power of the United Nations and in consideration of the opinion of the Honorable James F. Byrnes, former Secretary of State, the Honorable Sumner Welles, former Under Secretary of State, and many military authorities that there is no danger of war, and that it has been widely publicized that Russia is gradually making overtures and suggesting negotiations for the purpose of bringing about peace and reduction in armaments, I feel that these are factors that should be seriously considered by the membership before voting on the bill.

It is my opinion that it is unwarranted to force conscription on our people in peacetime. All the kings and emperors of Europe forced conscription on their subjects through all the years, and what good did it do them. Do we want to follow their foolish policy? Conscription and militarism will not aid anything; in fact, it will endanger our Nation. Consequently, I have been and am opposed to this bill to conscript young men in peacetime, affecting as it will from five to six million of our youth and unnecessarily disrupting their lives.

This legislation will add to the already heavy war burdens, increasing the expenditures for our armed forces to $33,000,000,000, and will reach the staggering sum of $45,000,000,000, which is more than the total income of the Nation in 1932. It will put a strain on the taxpayers of our country and I fear the increase in taxes that will be necessary to carry out the program will affect and weaken our economic policy. Where will the money come from? How long can a nation, though rich, be able to stand these expenditures? To me our country's sound economy is stronger than conscription.

Mr. Speaker, I have received within the last 4 or 5 days, as a member of the Committee on Rules, at least 1,800 telegrams and letters from churches, universities, colleges, and organizations of all kinds protesting the enactment of this legislation. I venture to say that 90 percent of the American people are against peacetime conscription. I want you to believe me—if I thought that our country was in danger now and needed conscription I, naturally, would support this resolution for a peactime draft. I voted in favor of a declaration of war in the First and Second World Wars and the interests of my country are closest to my heart.

I love my country and I want to preserve its democracy, its freedom, and its liberties, but I am not willing to turn the country over to a militaristic gang that spent, according to the testimony before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, $15,000,000 in propaganda to create hysteria and fear throughout the Nation, and especially in the hearts of the mothers of our youth. It is regrettable that the membership should be swayed by this hysteria. It has been made clear by those having the real interest of our country and our democratic form of government at heart that the conscription of our youth is not necessary at this time because the records of enlistments show that our Air Force and Navy are able to obtain more men than either of these branches actually need and are rejecting many applicants. charged that the war-minded gentlemen in the War Department have deliberately failed to make an honest effort to obtain the required personnel through voluntary enlistments. They have ignored the National Guard and Air Force Reserve and have flooded the country with propaganda that there is a shortage in the Yes; it has been stated armed forces. that it is selfishness on the part of the military gentlemen who advocate the expansion of the armed forces because it means promotions and increased compensation for them. If the military leaders would accord better treatment of the enlisted soldier, provide them with better quarters, increase their compensation, give consideration to the National Guard, and draw on and utilize the 2,000,000 men in the Reserves, there would be no difficulty in obtaining the men they claim are needed without resorting to conscription.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot add much to what has been said by the loyal and sincere members who have preceded me. They have made it clear that it would be unfair and unwise to pass this legislation. I am confident that if the membership had been present at the meeting of the Committee on Rules and heard the testimony of the gentlemen from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FoLgerl, and the ranking member of the Committee on the Armed Services, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], no amount of pressure could make you vote for this legislation.

It has been stated by the sponsors of this legislation that the proposed conscription will be for a temporary period, but the fear is expressed by those protesting the enactment of the bill that it will be permanent and will be the first step in turning our Government over to the militaristic forces. Members of the Committee on Armed Services state that this is not a bad bill but, to me, nothing could be worse than a bill that would disrupt the lives of millions of our young men

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, may I say and hope that after the conclusion of general debate, when the Members have all the facts before them, I am confident they will vote against the bill and will approve the action of those members of the Committee on Rules who sought to save the House from voting on this legislation at this time-legislation that, if enacted, would tend, yes, threaten to destroy our democratic form of Government and give the selfish militaristic clique the power to rule the country. If we have the actual interest of the country at heart, we will first show our appreciation to the millions of ex-servicemen and their kinfolk who, for years have been unsuccessfully seeking a decent place to live, by passing the housing bill to provide them with low-cost homes within their financial reach; we will adopt legislation that will stop the everincreasing cost of living which is creating unrest and discord in our Nation: we will pass decent social security legislation instead of passing a bill that will take away social-security benefits from 750,000 workers; we will pass a 75 cents an hour minimum wage bill to help the low-paid wage earner meet the 40-percent in-crease in the cost of living; we will pass the oleomargarine tax repeal bill in the interest of the American housewives; and at least give consideration to the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill. Favorable action on this and other meritorius legislation would bring about contentment instead of fear and misgivings to a great majority of the American people. It is the record of the Republican majority of the Eightieth Congress that they have not legislated in the interest of the people.

Mr. Speaker, I have yielded more times to Members who desired to speak than I had anticipated and, therefore, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend my remarks and include therein excerpts from a few of the 1,800 telegrams and communications which I received and which I intended to read to indicate to the membership the strong opposition to this proposed peacetime conscription. They give the sentiment of persons and organizations from every section of the United States and are in much stronger terms than I could express. I urge the Members to read these communications before they cast their vote

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

From the pastor of the Lewiston, Mo., Methodist Church:

It drafts boys who are not even privileged to vote into this caldron of hate and blood and death. They are helpless and voiceless. It ushers immature boys into the atmosphere of vice, nicotine, and liquor.

The measure is war-provoking in several ways. Russia will say we are warlike. Our own military leaders will be less inclined to be patient, and incidents will occur leading to war.

Following from the Northern California Baptist Convention:

Compulsory military conscription in time of peace is contrary both to the American ideal of religious and civil liberties.

History has demonstrated that compulsory military establishments in time of peace have not forestalled war.

. Compulsory military conscription would be destructive of the morals of our American youth.

Some of us are thoroughly convinced of the evil of such universal military conscription, and feel that if it is fastened on our Nation, our dream of world peace will be pushed farther and farther away. We feel that our young people should be protected from such regimentation, and indoctrination for war.

From the pastor of the First Evangelical United Brethern Church in Elgin:

I am convinced that this is a step toward totalitarianism, and that it may lead us into another futile and destructive war.

From the pastor of the Asbury Methodist Church, Chicago:

We have fought two devastating wars against militarism on the claim that we stand for the democratic way of life. We have argued that an intelligent democracy can defend itself against aggression without surrendering its freedom of life in time of peace. And we have proved to the world that our position is sane and safe. We did defend ourselves. Why surrender those convictions now? A regimented mass of militarily trained people may be as outmoded in the next war as were the Hindenburg and the Seigfried lines in the last.

The minister of the First Presbyterian Church, Syracuse, N. Y., writes:

It is my conviction that such legislation would divert vast amounts of funds from more adequate means of defense and would fasten upon the United States a military mentality and a military system which would in a very short time do violence to our cherished way of American life.

The minister of the Ridge Farm Friends Church, Ridge Farm, Ill., writes:

I, too, am opposed to UMT. First, on the grounds that it has never prevented wars (European history is clear on this point). Second. UMT would be just another "rathole" spending operation, and yet could not make the United States effective militarily, in a defensive war in this atomic age. Third, UMT is, obviously, not an American institution, and is more likely to lead to totalitarian practices than to a greater democracy.

The general secretary of the Board of Christian Education, Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, Philadelphia, writes:

We reaffirm our historic position of opposition to peacetime military conscription as constituting a dangerous extension of regimentation by Government, an inadequate measure of defense in an atomic age, and a violation of the spirit of our present determination to secure the multilateral reduction of arms and armies.

A California writer points out, that as Washington said, "The greatest single threat to a Republic is an overgrown military establishment."

A letter from a man in Seattle, Wash., states in part:

If Congress votes in a conscription or draft law, thereby capitulating to the military, the whirlwind which we American people will ultimately reap will be deserved. A draft law will signify to the world that we are more interested in mobilizing for war than for peace. It will signify to the world that we are willing to fight again in spite of the fact that the Nobel Prize scientist, Harold C. Urey, has said, "As a scientist I tell you there must never be another war." It will notify the world that we are willing to put an end to this our civilization in order to fight what will undoubtedly be called, when the time comes, a defensive war.

Representative ADOLPH J. SABATH, Washington, D. C .:

A peacetime draft is un-American, breeds suspicion and pessimism, overtaxes our economy, and strengthens fascism without overthrowing communism. Please vote against draft.

Congressman Adolph J. Sabath,

House of Representatives:
Please don't destroy precious American freedom; pigeonhole freedom-destroying un-American draft bill. Stop fanatical mongers; be a patriot; fight for American liberty; kill the draft.

A. MUNZLINGER, Pasadena, Calif.

Hon. ADOLPH SABATH,

House Office Building:

This is to commend you for your admirable stand to protect this country from peacetime militarism. Please do every-thing you can to prevent the House from making a hasty, ill-advised decision on this bill—the greatest internal threat in history to American individualism; a proposal to surrender our youth to the tutelage of military minds. The Nation will be grateful to you.

HENRY WOLFF, Baltimore, Md.

Hon. ADOLPH SABATH,

House Building, Washington, D. C.: Defeat draft bill. Military means for solv-ing world problems outmoded since Hiroshima. Create Secretary of Peace, also in-ternational students exchange.

COMBAT VETERANS LOUIS and MERYL IJAMS, Chicago, Ill.

Hon. Adolph Sabath, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Most evidently the real purpose for the proposed draft is not to defend the United States against an invasion but to force our boys against their will and convictions to give their lives, health, and freedom for people who are divided against themselves. I understand that you are wisely against this peacetime draft for such a purpose and urgently request you to vote against it in the House Rules Committee, where your vote will be most effective and consistent with your convictions. If service for such a purpose cannot be secured by our voluntary system than our Representatives should never force it on the American people. The proposed draft will never solve the problem. Please vote against it every time and do all in your power to prevent its passage. R. R. Wall

Bluefield, W. Va.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania

(Mr. Rich asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the House and in the Committee of the Whole, and include some extracts.)

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I fear if this bill is passed that we will have conscription in this country for years and years to come, not only because the Army is after 800,000 more men at the present time, but because we are building up an armed service in this country so that we will be domineered by the armed services branch of the Government. The fact of the matter is that I am afraid the armed services of the Government will take the country We are headed in that direction. This is the beginning of driving this country into socialism—into communism, it might come to that point—but certainly it will drive it into militarism.

Militarism is what Hitler gave to Germany after World War I. It brought on World War II. Should we pass this bill it means that the military arm of our Government, Navy, Air Corps, Militia, Marines, will control the destiny of our great Government. None of that for me. I want no part of it in Government control.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] made the statement that this bill was too vital to be buried. I say, if you do not bury this bill now you will bury hundreds and thousands of our young men in the future, and you will bury many, many heartbreaks that are bound to come because of this bill. To my mind, it is one of the most uncalled-for pieces of legislation that has ever been presented to the Congress since I have been a Member of the Congress. Kill the bill before the bill is the cause of your slow death in enslavement of the armed forces

It seems to me that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] hit the nail on the head. Under this bill you will go out and conscript the youth of this Nation, 19 to 25 years of age, and throw them into the Army against their will. Just think of the fathers and mothers who have counted on their boys to go out and do the things they would like to have them do, in the professional life, in business life, or any other walk of life that they may wish to enjoy. Here, you are compelling them now to go into the Army. Never in the history of our country in peacetime have we done that.

There are many, many boys who would join the Army if they were given the same advantage and the same opportunity that men have in industry, that men have in professional life, or that men have in any avocation they choose to follow.

You are going to take this man's boy and put him in the Army at $70 a month, when your neighbor's boy, who may be exempt because he is physically incapacitated, will be able to go out and earn two or three or four hundred dollars a month, and he will have a grand time doing it. When you put that boy in the Army against his will, for 2 or 3 years, at only $70 a month, is there anything right or just or honest in a bill of that kind? If that is the kind of legislation you Members of this Congress want to vote for, that is all right with me, but I would not vote for it under any consideration. I think it is unfair and unjust, as much so as any legislation that has ever been presented to this House since I have been a Member of it.

Why are you passing this legislation? Has anybody shown you any reason why we need it? It has never been brought to my attention since I have been a Member of this House or a member of the Rules Committee. I have heard all kinds of arguments, but the only thing is that we need more men in the Army. Who wants it? The armed forces themselves want it. They are not treating the volunteers right now. They have put the pressure on that. They have raised the qualification tests to 80 points. If they would put that down and shorten the enlistment period and give them better housing and give the Organized Reserves an opportunity, and pay the enlistees $125 per month you would not need to draft one single man. They would fill the quota in 3 months, and this un-American bill would not be necessary. I would vote for a bill for national defense if the conditions warrant. They do not warrant it now. That has been reliably told to us by our Intelligence Service. We have not the $3,000,000,000 to waste in this program. This bill will put our armed services expenses for past wars and for our armed services annual expenditures up to over thirty billions a year. Add to that the interest on the debt of five billions, then add the cost of government, and you have a budget annually of over forty-five billions a year. It will wreck us financially, and a nation that is not solvent cannot support such a budget. This bill is wrong for our Nation at this time, and I hope we can defeat it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Sabath) there were—ayes 128, noes 44.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members; and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and there were—yeas 329, nays 61, answering 'present" 1, not voting 39, as follows:

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. TABER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 6935, Rept. No. 2349) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, tentatively I reserve points of order on the bill, subject to any agreement which the gentleman from New York desires to submit to the House.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that title III of the bill and section 401, the penalty-mail provision and the provision for renegotiation of contracts may be considered in order in consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill was reported out unanimously by the subcommittee and by the full committee. The suggestion of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York, that the two titles to which he referred be made in order meets with the approval of the minority members of the committee

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order against the remainder of the bill.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PROGRAM

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, many Members have inquired whether or not it is planned to have a night session tonight in order to bring about final action on the pending measure. I wish the Members to know what the program is and arrange their own plans accordingly.

I may say, at the outset, that the measure before us is one of great consequence to the country and one with respect to which we carry a very great responsibility.

It is my hope, as I stated on yesterday, that we can proceed expeditiously with the consideration of the bill. I am sure, however, that action cannot be completed this evening, so it is my idea that we work along until a reasonable hour this evening, disposing of general debate and such amendments as may be offered to the bill and that we continue consideration of the bill and amendments tomorrow.

I do very much hope that all of the amendments which may be offered may be considered tomorrow so that by some reasonable time in the afternoon we can conclude our action on the bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Will the gentleman be agreeable to the Committee rising at 5:30 this evening?

Mr. HALLECK. At 5:30 or 6. That would be my idea of a reasonable time, particularly having met at 10 o'clock this morning. That probably would represent a very good day's work.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND ON STREAM-POLLUTION BILL

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill S. 418, the stream-pollution bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in regard to the President's veto of the Reed-Bulwinkle bill; and to extend his remarks by including an endorsement of the Conference of American Small Business, comprising 600 organizations.

Mr. NODAR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article on the Knights of Columbus.

Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. ISACSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. BONNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a statement of certain benefits to veterans in North Carolina.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained from attendance at the proceedings of the House on yesterday. Had I been present I would have voted "aye" on roll call 103, "no" on roll call 104, and "aye" on roll call 105.

SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6401), to provide for the common defense by increasing the strength of the armed forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6401, with Mr. Case of South Dakota in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, may I announce that the time on the minority side will be under the control of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY].

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule. general debate will continue for 3 hours, one-half of the time to be under the control of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. An-DREWS], and pursuant to the announcement by the gentleman from Georgia, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] will be recognized for 11/2 hours.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Who will those opposed to the bill apply to for time in general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. To either of the gentlemen mentioned, who will yield the

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself not to exceed 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset I should like to say, referring to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], that I have been in consultation with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short], who generally heads the opposition on this bill in the Armed Services Committee on the Republican side, and we have reached an agreement as to the disposition of time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The time in opposition to the bill, as well as that of those in favor of the bill, has been allotted in accordance with consultation with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. Chairman, the committee reported this bill by a vote of 28 to 5. Seventeen out of nineteen Republicansthere may be some who have changed their minds-voted in favor of it, and 11 out of 14 on the minority side.

I had nothing to do with the allotment of time. If I had my way about it, this bill would have been before the committee a month ago, and we would have 2 days' general debate; but, as I say, I have had nothing to do with the allotment of time, and was not consulted. We have received 3 hours of general debate, which is 90 minutes for each side.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York now addressing you, who has unsuspectingly but courteously yielded, has announced he is not a candidate for renomination or reelection

Mr. Chairman, when I first came to the Congress, I became second or third, or thereabout, in rank to the gentleman from New York on the Military Affairs Committee. No better man has ever served the country than the gentleman from New York, old Ham Andrews, in Congress or out.

It will be a great loss to the Congress, to the United States of America, and to all of us when he puts more of his furniture into that old car and moves up to Buffalo to stay, leaving us down here

We all regret his departure. I wish to assure him right now that we will all miss him, as we wish he may realize the fruition of his hopes so long as he enjoys the relief from the great and tremendous responsibilities as have been his. You have earned a vacation, Ham. Our best wishes go with you from all sides of any aisle. Sorry I took advantage of your good nature, if you have any, but it was my last chance. More power to you.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Members of the Committee, if I may have your attention, this bill will be well discussed by many of the committee during the debate, but I want to bring to your attention some observations. It was not much over 400 years ago that we discovered that the earth was round. It was 250 years before this country was really colonized. Everybody in this country today is here because of oppression, social, economic, or religious. We have within the citizenship of this country the prototype of every civilization on the face of the earth, with the possible exception of the yellow race. I sat in this Chamber in 1937 on the occasion of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary commemorating the Constitution of the United States, at which time Chief Justice Hughes delivered the address. On that occasion he was about 75 years of age, and therefore at that time, twice his age or twice the life of any man 75 years of age was the entire constitutional life of this country. During the last 75 years practically all of the inventions in the world have taken place. Almost everything you can think of in modern science has taken place in the last 75 years. During the 150 years in the constitutional history of this country we have had seven wars, starting with the Revolution, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, World War I and then World War II. After each of these wars up to the present time we have let down our guard; we have collapsed; the pacifists have taken over: we have given in and failed to continue our preparedness. About every 20 or 25 years we have had a war, with the ocean separating us. Think of how civilization has developed in that time. If there was a continent in the Pacific Ocean today with untold riches on it, and the world had not developed, we would not be able to stop cars on the way to San Francisco or Los Angeles to get there. We reached the point 50 years ago where there is not a solid square foot of ground on the face of the globe on which some country's flag does not fly. We fought World War I, presumably, for democracy, and we fought World War II to end wars but one strong ideology contrary to all our belief remains, and it is the ideology of communism.

This bill that we have before us today is a bill that comes from the desire of those who support it to give us reasonable strength insofar as the armed forces are concerned. It is not a harsh bill. You will hear much criticism of it, and I shall come to the rebuttal of some of the arguments during the amendment period. The cold facts are that the armed services, the Army in particular, will need in the next current year roughly between 800,000 and 900,000 men to take care of the attrition in the regular forces, that is, those whose enlistments have run out.

It is presumed that a portion, we will say roughly half of those, will be secured by induction and the other half by voluntary enlistment.

Statistics show all the way through that enlistments are up at the highest peak when selective service is in being. The Navy is always a great beneficiary of voluntary enlistments when selective service is in being. The services need many men. It will be claimed that the Army is not trying hard to get men to enlist, or the services generally are not, but as a matter of fact, the enlistment record of the services over the last 2 or 3 years is the most remarkable record of voluntary enlistments on the part of any country in the entire history of the world.

It will be said that the qualifications are too high. Only 12 percent have been refused for enlistment because of inability to meet the requirements. tests are very fair, in spite of what you may have heard to the contrary. This bill is opposed by every radical, subversive organization within the United States. It is also opposed by some very fine organizations, but I do not believe they are enlightened, that they quite understand what is behind it. This bill has the support of every veterans' organization and every patriotic organization in the United States.

After World War I we had a world court, but it fell through. We have made a reasonable start with the United Nations. Our experience with the United Nations is, however, far from a happy one as yet. We have nothing with which to enforce our views—even through the United Nations.

I shall go into the other details of the bill as the various amendments arise.

In conclusion, I should simply like to say this: It is those who wish to remain weak, whether they realize it or not, who invite possible future disaster. It is those who would be strong only who stand for freedom and an ultimate chance for permanent peace.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, those of us on the Committee on Armed Services appreciate the fact that we have here a heavy duty and responsibility. I can assure you that it is not one that we sought, nor one that we relish, but one that we realize and appreciate, and we feel that we have brought here the type of legislation which is essential at this time in view of the present situation in the world.

I would not attempt at this late hour to convince the House that international affairs are in a very troublesome state. I think it would be futile now to attempt to convince the Congress of the United States, which embarked upon Greek and Turkish aid, and the European recovery plan, and which has implemented those programs with appropriations amounting to billions of dollars, that there is a troublesome condition existing in the world. I take it that by the recurring votes of both Houses of Congress that has been well established and thoroughly recognized.

In addition to the programs which we are now carrying on throughout the world to prevent the further expansion of communism, we are convinced that we must be adequate in a military sense. We feel that a nation which possesses some 235 divisions at this time, and a large air force, and which has embarked upon a program of expansion, cannot be expected to listen to arguments, no matter how logical, unless the one with whom she is arguing possesses the requisite strength with which to reinforce the arguments and the logic used.

Quite some time ago, the Congress of the United States determined what would be a reasonable force for a nation such as ours in the conditions which then existed in the world. At that time we said that the Army and the Air Force should consist of 1,070,000 men, and that the Navy and Marine Corps should consist of 666,882 men. Now what is the situation? We find that the services have not been able to maintain those authorized strengths. They were not fixed by the armed services, but they were fixed by the Congress and written into law. Even at those modest strengths, we have not been able to maintain the services at the figures set. There may have been some who are at fault. I am not willing to say that no one is at fault. On the other hand, the situation does exist that we do not have what we regarded as a minimum necessary strength. We feel we must secure the minimum necessary strength, and secure it promptly. Voluntary enlistments thus far have failed, and we see no other alternative but to embark upon this limited program.

Let me emphasize the fact that this is a limited program. It will not be the unlimited program that we had during the war under the Selective Training and Service Act, because during that time all ceilings were removed. One of the very first provisions of this bill fixes the authorized strength of each of the three military establishments. None of them can exceed those maximum strengths. Of course, in no event can they exceed the amount appropriated to carry out the program and to provide for the size of the Army. We are providing here a maximum of 837,000 for the Army, a maximum of 662,882 in the Navy, and the Air Force 502,000. Who has fixed these figures? These recommendations have been made to you by your Committee on Armed Services after hearings and much consideration. As to the Air Force, I can say that the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States have fixed those figures because we overwhelmingly passed the 70-group air program and passed it over some rather strenuous opposition of persons within the administration. So those are the figures that we have determined on in the committee and recommended to you as being adequate for our defense at the present time.

I would like to give a brief outline of the provisions of the bill. It requires all persons between 18 and 30 years of age to register. It makes liable for service persons between 19 and 25 years of age inclusive. There is a provision under which members of the medical profes-sions will be subject to service until they are 45 years of age, in accordance with a formula provided in the bill.

The exemptions are most liberal under this bill. Personnel on active duty are All holders of the Purple Heart are exempt.

Veterans with over 12 months' service are completely exempt.

Veterans with 90 days' to 12 months' service are exempt if members of Organized Reserve units.

All veterans with combat service are exempt.

Reserves in organized units on effective date of the act are exempt.

Persons entering the Organized Reserve units after the act is passed, but before they are 181/2 years of age, will likewise be exempted.

Of course, ministers and ministerial students and nondeclared aliens are Deferred from service are members of the ROTC and the Holloway plan; the Holloway plan being the reserve plan of the Navy.

Accepted aviation cadets are deferred for a period of 4 months.

Persons elected to office by the people of an entire State and Federal elective officials are deferred.

Essential workers; persons with dependents; physically and mentally unfit; high-school students are deferred, until they complete their high-school education or become 20 years of age or fail to satisfactorily pursue their course of study. So that high-school students will be permitted to complete high school before they are subject to service under this bill.

College students enrolled in the academic year will be deferred until the end of the academic year in which they are enrolled.

Conscientious objectors, objecting to any type of military service, are also deferred.

In those cases in which there is a sole surviving son in families in which a deceased son or sons were killed or died in line of duty in service will be assigned to noncombat duty.

Another thing that is of importance to a great many States; not only will calls be made on a quota basis, but every State will get credit against its quota for those already in the service. As each quota is made and each call is sent out, each area will get credit against the quota for those who are in the service.

It has reemployment rights comparable to those of the Selective Training and Service Act, as interpreted in Supreme Court decisions. Of course, it sets up a Selective Service System and provides penalties for its violations.

The bill, as reported by the committee in section 23, the last section of the bill, provides that induction shall not begin prior to a period of 90 days after the effective date of the act. However, the committee has voted to offer as a committee amendment a new section 23. That amendment will provide that inductions will not be begun until a proclamation has been made by the President. It provides that he may make that proclamation no earlier than 75 days after the effective date of the act, and that thereafter the inductions cannot begin for a period of 15 days. This is a provision requested by many of the members. It places the legislation in a standby position and does not become operative until the President has issued a proclamation that voluntary enlistments have not been sufficient and it has become necessary to place the provisions of this bill in effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield. Mr. BUFFETT. Then, it is the feeling of the committee that an imminent emergency does not exist.

Mr. KILDAY. The committee has never taken the position that there is an imminent emergency or it would never have included a provision for 90 days' delay before inductions may begin. We do feel we are in a position of great stress. We do know that we do not have our armed forces up to what is regarded as being the minimum strength that we should have.

Mr. BUFFETT. The bill, as it will be finished with this amendment, does not provide that the draft can take place before December 1, or 6 weeks after the election. Is that correct?

Mr. KILDAY. I think the gentleman can add 75 and 15.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield. Mr. PACE. The gentleman mentioned the strength authorized under this bill. I wonder if the gentleman would give us the latest figure as to the present strength of the different services

Mr. KILDAY. Of course, as the gentleman understands, they are constantly coming in and going out. The attrition is one of the things that is bothering us at this time because of the men who enlisted shortly after the cessation of hostilities.

As of July 1 1948 it is expected that the Army will have 540,000, the Navy, 427,000, the Air Force, 395,000, and the Marines, 82,000.

As of February 1, to give you an idea of the attrition, the actual strength of the Army was 552,150, the Navy, 395,936; the Air Force, 353,143; and the marines, 79,659.

Mr. HEDRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.
Mr. HEDRICK. Will these draftees get the benefits of the GI bill of rights?

Mr. KILDAY. The bill does not provide that the inductees shall have the privileges of the GI bill of rights.

Mr. HEDRICK. Is there any clause in the bill that will take care of them as far as schooling is concerned when they get out?

Mr. KILDAY. No. This does not contain any of the provisions of the GI bill of rights. The matter was discussed at great length in the committee. It was recognized in the committee that the GI bill of rights was adopted for the benefit of those who participated in actual combat during the period of the actual shooting war, and it was not felt that the same situation exists at this stage of the game as existed at the time the GI bill of rights was adopted.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield. Mr. COLE of Missouri. I wonder if the gentleman can tell me as to whether or not the Army has recently increased its standards for voluntary enlistment?
Mr. KILDAY. Physical standards?

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Physical and mental.

Mr. KILDAY. No; there was no material increase in the standards other than that during the war they had two categories, one for limited service and one for general service. They do not now maintain the limited-service category.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. I understand that the Army recruiting officers are not taking new recruits for 2-year enlistments.

Mr. KILDAY. That is correct; except that under our bill we make them do it.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. I am now, of course, talking about the voluntary recruitment program. Are you complying with that law in respect to 2-year enlistments?

Mr. KILDAY. Yes; they are complying with the law. The law provides for 2-, 3-, and 4-year enlistments. They have by regulation and policy been refusing to accept voluntary enlistments for a period of 2 years. The bill we have under consideration, however, requires them to accept men between 19 and 26 for a period of 2-year voluntary enlistment. That is as to the Army. That does not apply to the Navy or Air Force.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. How do the standard requirements of the Army recruiting office compare with the standard requirements of the Navy and the Marine

Mr. KILDAY. I am not sure. Some other member of the committee might be able to answer the gentleman, but I feel quite positive that the Navy standards are a little higher than those of the Army.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield. Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The standards of all the other services are much higher than those of the Army.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. The reason I asked the question is because I received a letter from a mother in my district whose son desired to enlist voluntarily in the Army. He appled at the recruiting office and was turned down because he did not meet their requirements. He walked right over to the Marines recruiting office and was accepted.

Mr. KILDAY. Of course, many have known of one doctor saying something is wrong with a person and another saying there is not.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. The reason I bring this out is because it looks to me like the Army is doing all it can to discourage voluntary enlistments in order to justify their demand for selective service or UMT and that they are rejecting many of those who voluntarily apply for enlistment to accomplish this.

Mr. KILDAY. That argument has been made and it furnishes a nice escape clause for those who do not want to vote for this bill, but I do not believe it can be sustained by the facts.

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the distinguished National Guard man from New York.

Mr. KEARNEY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question with reference to paragraph 3, on page 13, and section 22. on page 49. It seems to me these sections are in direct conflict with each other. They pertain to the calling out of the Organized Reserves and the National Guard. One states that the President is authorized to order into active service those civilian components provided he has the consent of the governors of the various States. As I read the section on page 49, it is the Congress of the United States who calls out the civilian components.

Mr. KILDAY. That is when the Congress has declared an emergency. That has been the situation all along. They are subject to active duty without their consent in that instance. The other refers to those instances in which the governor grants his permission for portions of the Reserve components to be called.

Mr. KEARNEY. That being so, may I ask if the provision on page 13 with respect to ordering members of the National Guard of the United States into active service of the United States should not be stricken from the bill?

Mr. KILDAY. Of course, I am familiar with all of the talk that we have had with reference to the National Guard, its recognition, and so forth. Until there should be a declaration of a national emergency, I would 1 ot agree that the National Guard should be called without the governor's consent. The National Guard is our militia; it is protected by the Constitution; and in time of peace constitutes the only military force at the disposal of the governor. I do not believe that the Federal Government in time of peace should be in a position to deprive any State of its National Guard unless the governor gives his consent.

Mr. KEARNEY. With the consent of the governor, they can be ordered into the service of the United States for a period of 24 months?

Mr. KILDAY. Each individual governor knows the situation in his State. It might be that a civil commotion is imminent. The governor would know that. In that situation I do not think it would be good policy for the Federal Government to deprive the State of its military

Mr. KEARNEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LYLE. With reference to the discussion had with the gentleman from Missouri, it might be well to call to the attention of the Members that almost 30 percent of the people who served in the armed forces in the recent war have filed applications for disability on account of injury or something that occurred during their service. It is extremely important to the country and the people that these boys be well screened physically, that every applicant be screened carefully before service in the armed forces

Mr. KILDAY. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MORRIS. With further reference to one of the questions of the gentleman from Missouri, can the gentleman tell us why the Army will not accept a 2-year enlistment?

Mr. KILDAY. The Army takes the position, and has in the past, that it is not economical. I have been through that fight before. Those 18-month enlistments that we had right after the war were the result of my amendment which I got adopted here on the floor. At that time, a man who was in the service as much as 6 months, had his equipment and his basic training, could be enlisted for an additional year. I am now convinced that perhaps the Army knew more about this than I did. They did not get very much out of the so-called 18-month tour of enlistment. We spent most of the time getting him in and getting him out, and darned little time using him. The same is true when you cut this down. The further you cut it down the less you get. It costs money to bring a man into the Army. The first year costs about $5,000, and every year after that costs you between $3,000 and $3,500. When you talk about getting him into the service and equipping him, it costs $5,000 for the first year, which runs very high.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. MORRIS. The gentleman sugested that under this bill we are forcing them to do that.

Mr. KILDAY. We are.

Mr. MORRIS. If it was not economical then, why is it now?

Mr. KILDAY. The Army contended in the past it was not economical, which I explained. During consideration of the rule the gentleman stated he intends to offer an amendment to reduce this to 1 year. Now, you might just as well take the $5,000 and throw it away, if you are going to reduce it to 1 year.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. The gentleman from North Carolina stated the contrast of the young man who went into the airplane factory; he was induced to go there by virtue of the high wages, and the young man who went into the Army at a very much lower rate. Does the committee intend to bring out the point that nothing more can be done by way of making the salary more attractive or by raising the salary so as to bring it to a voluntary basis? Mr. KILDAY. There are members of the committee who have spent a good many years studying this thing from an objective standpoint. It is one of my hobbies about how you are going to make military service attractive. Shortly after the war we increased the pay 50 percent for the private. We took him from $50 to $75, but it did not produce results. The pay inducement alone does not do it; we have seen that; we have tried it and it will not work. The same thing exists here. It proves itself. The Air Force does not feel that it is going to have to take one person by draft under this bill if passed. The Navy feels that it will not have to take one person by draft under this bill, because when the young man goes in the Air Force they promise to make a meterologist or an airplane or engine mechanic out of him; one of dozens of specialties. In the Navy it will be the same thing. He will be a machinist or learn some other trade. The Army can tell them that "We will make the finest infantryman out of you that ever lived," but that is not something that holds a future for him except in the military service. So, at the same rate of pay the Navy and the Air Force are able to get their men but the Army finds it difficult to do so. If we cannot get them by voluntary enlistment we will have to get them the best way we can. It is not a task that we relish, but it is one that we feel we are forced to undertake.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMPSON. Has there been any special deferment provided for premedical students?

Mr. KILDAY. There is nothing by name in this bill but ample authority is given the President for that purpose, and the National Resources Planning Board has its program to take care of that. Now, we started out to put in medical students, then we put in something else, and by the time we got through we had 8 or 10 different categories, and then we were not sure that we had covered the necessary elements, so we left it in general language, because when you stress some few of them, you exclude all others.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the gentleman explain what is the meaning of "between the ages of 19 and 26"? What are the limits?

Mr. KILDAY. He must have reached his nineteenth birthday and not passed his twenty-sixth.

Mr. BRADLEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. TEAGUE. As I understand the bill, the man who attends a military school and takes 4 years of ROTC, is then required to serve 3 years on active duty; is that correct?

Mr. KILDAY. That is true. Let us be practical about it. The gentleman is one of those, but he received his commission when he came out though, did he not?

Mr. TEAGUE. That is correct.
Mr. KILDAY. And practically all of these will.

Mr. TEAGUE. Still, by awarding the man, or complimenting the man for having taken ROTC, it appears to me you are changing that here and you are requiring that he serve 3 years after he gets his commission. Are you not going to drive men away from the ROTC school?

Mr. KILDAY. No.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is only because we educate these boys at no cost to themselves.

Mr. TEAGUE. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Under the ROTC and the Holloway plan.

Mr. KILDAY. Not the ROTC. Mr. BATES of Massachusetts.

ROTC plan, then. Mr. TEAGUE. Will the gentleman comment on that a little bit?

Mr. KILDAY. Those boys have prepared themselves militarily, that is true, while they were acquiring their education. Then they are qualified for a commission, and most of them will have their commissions, or get them when they will go on active duty. I do not see why you feel there is any penalty involved because of that man going on active duty with the others of his own age group and family relationships.

Mr. TEAGUE. If he is needed, yes; but you do not say "if he is needed." You say that he must serve 3 years.

Mr. KILDAY. The whole bill is based on whether he is needed, and the quotas will be set.

I trust that this bill will be adopted by a very substantial majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time for the purpose of advising the Committee that when we reach the amendment stage of the bill it is my purpose to offer the military-justice bill as title II of this bill. Since the military-justice bill passed the House last January, it is possible that some of the members of the committee may not be entirely familiar with the history of efforts to amend the Articles of War and improve the Army system of justice. During the year 1944 the Secretary of War appointed Col. Philip McCook, a distinguished New York jurist, to investigate complaints about the administration of military justice. Thereafter, on March 25, 1946, the Secretary of War selected the War Department advisory committee on military justice, the chairman of which was Hon. Arthur T. Vanderbilt. This committee consisted of nine eminent lawyers and jurists. held hearings all over the United States and rendered a report that was given consideration by the Secretary of War and by congressional committees.

In the Seventy-ninth Congress, after many Members of Congress had received complaints about the administration of justice in the armed services, the Committee on Military Affairs, through a subcommittee, the chairman of which was the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Durham], conducted about a year's investigation and rendered an excellent report, but no legislation was forthcoming at that session.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield to my friend from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think it should be pointed out that the bill the House passed, from a subcommittee of which the gentleman from Ohio was the chairman, contained a major recommendation of the American Bar Association's report. In other words, they stressed one thing, and we adopted that.

Mr. ELSTON. Yes, the gentleman is entirely correct about that. The recommendations of the American Bar Association were given every consideration by our committee. The gentleman from California was a member of our committee and made a very valuable contribution to the report we finally made and to the writing of the bill finally adopted by the House.

Shortly after this Congress convened, the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services designated the legal subcommittee to conduct hearings and to consider the writing of a military-justice bill. Our committee conducted hearings extending over a great many months. As the gentleman from California has pointed out, we took into consideration the recommendations of the American Bar Association. We also took into consideration the report of the Vanderbilt committee and the Durham committee report from the previous Congress. We heard from all of the veterans' groups and from all other groups and individuals who asked to testify.

After the House passed the military justice bill on January 15, 1948, it went over to the other body and was referred to the Senate Committee on Armed Services. That committee did not conduct any hearings, but when the selective service bill was before that body a few days ago the bill passed by the House was offered as an amendment and was adopted by a vote of 44 to 39. Therefore, as matters stand today, the Senate bill contains the military-justice bill exactly as it passed the House.

The purpose of offering this amendment in connection with this bill, if it is held to be germane, is to make our bill correspond with the bill as passed by the Senate, at least so far as the military justice feature is concerned and to assure passage at this session of legislation which will improve our present system in the Army and the Air Force.

To enumerate a few of the provisions of the justice bill: It provides for enlisted men on the court, if enlisted men desire them. Officers are made subject to trial by special court martial.

An accused person is entitled to counsel in the pretrial investigation. Review and appellate provisions have been greatly strengthened, a separate Judge Advocate General's Corps has been established, and command influence over the courts has been curtailed.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I shall offer will guarantee a fair and impartial trial to any inductee under the pending bill should he at any time be charged with a military offense.

OPPOSED TO DRAFT

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Chairman, before determining to oppose the selective-service bill, H. R. 6401, which is now before us, I read and carefully considered all the arguments, pro and con, which I could lay my hands on. For weeks I refused to take a stand, in the face of terrific pressure from both sides. thought that I owed my country and my constituency more than a snap judgment

Now, having maturely considered the arguments, I am forced to the reasoned conclusion that the proponents of a peacetime draft have failed to make out a case.

I must oppose this bill.

The proponents have claimed that a . danger to our national security of emergency proportions exists. They have failed to prove it.

They have claimed that they have exhausted the possibilities of voluntary enlistments to maintain the armed services at safe strength. They have failed to prove it.

FAILED TO DISPROVE OPPOSING ARGUMENTS

On the other hand, they have failed to disprove the arguments of opponents that the proposals for a peacetime draft are and must constitute a Trojan horse under which military control of civilian life is to be introduced into the United States

I am not a baiter of the armed services. I have many friends among officers and enlisted men. I honor their courage and sacrifice in time of danger and I do not for one moment impugn the honesty, the patriotism, or the motives of those who have called for this draft. I was prepared to support this measure if the arguments in favor of it carried in my own mind.

My decision is the product of reason, not of emotion.

NO NATIONAL DANGER PROVED

The mere absence of amicable international relationships with a single great power does not constitute a clear threat to American security. Something more than mere words is necessary to prove an aggressive intent.

The American people have been subjected to an unceasing bombardment of incendiary propaganda for 3 years from our own militarists. They have had the help of the Soviet press and radio, which has spared no exaggeration, no innuendo, no blanket charge, however absurd, in the crusade.

This has been a political war, in which the clank of tanks and the roar of big guns and the click of the Geiger counters were sound effects for both sides.

There has been a lot of shooting but it has all been with the mouth.

International crisis has resolved in anticlimax.

It is not my purpose to absolve the Soviets of their share of the blame for our own hysteria; neither is it my purpose to absolve Americans for their self-fed fears.

We are a great and powerful nation with a productive capacity beyond the dreams of man of only a few years ago. We have a way of life which leads to strength because it is a free way of life. It is incomprehensible and incredible that any nation exists today so completely insane as to clearly challenge our military and industrial might and our atomic bombs.

MANY VOLUNTARY METHODS STILL UNTRIED

It has proved equally fruitless for the proponents of a peacetime draft to attempt to prove that they have exhausted the resources of voluntary methods.

Little or nothing has been done to implement the recommendations of the Doublitle report.

On the contrary, we hear frequently of favoritism and special privileges for officers out of all proportion to their rank; of arbitrary court-martial sentences, of special duties, and pulling rank against enlisted men

When enlisted men in our armed services can feel that they are not discriminated against, that voluntary Army service is not an unjust sacrifice, that they have not surrendered the proud title of citizen because they have acquired the title of soldier, and when their pay has been adjusted to meet the needs of their dependents, they will prove less reluctant to join.

Furthermore, the armed services themselves have reduced the proportion of eligibles in imposing physical standards so high as to be selective beyond all reason.

During the war, when manpower was even more acutely in short supply and demands of the armed services were given top priority, there were a score of jokes. We all remember them. One was, "If he's breathing, he's as good as in the Army."

None of us expects the peacetime Army to be that indiscriminate, but neither do we expect it to become an elite corps of supermen.

QUOTA SYSTEM RANKLY EXTRAVAGANT

Furthermore, the armed services continue to maintain their cruel and extravagant quota system of racial discrimination.

It is a simple statement of fact to say that, economically, our Negro Americans are the most depressed as a group. To them, more than to any other group within the framework of American democracy, Army life is economically more desirable than civilian life. It has social advantages, educational advantages, housing advantages as well.

Yet a rigid system of segregation, limitation of enlistments, and discrimination in ratings and assignments has been practiced by each of the armed services, differing only in degree.

In spite of the blind prejudices of some of our high-ranking officers, the facts speak for themselves. Here are thousands upon thousands of young Americans, anxious to serve their country in the full status of citizens, many of them of the highest possible physical development, going to waste while the services cry for men.

DEMOCRACY WOULD SUFFER FROM DRAFT

There are clear and present dangers to our democratic way of life in the introduction of a professional military caste into American life through a peacetime conscription act.

Already our Government is filled with military men in key positions—men whose courage and patriotism and honesty I do not question, but who are astigmatic because of their military training.

What the future might be with a nation of young men graduated from the hard school of Army training I shudder to think.

The object of democratic education is to make good citizens, capable of thinking for themselves and of governing themselves.

The object of military training is to make good soldiers, disciplined, unquestioning, automatic in reaction to given commands.

While more limited in its scope than earlier measures, the present bill is sweeping in its powers over private property and private lives. It would necessarily make the National Defense Establishment the pivot of our foreign policy and our domestic polity and economy.

MEASURE IS DANGEROUS

I must oppose this measure just as I have opposed all other efforts to whittle away individual freedoms by repressive laws

While I do not impute to the proponents of this bill the unworthy motives that I have found for some other repressive measures, the effect is the same. A peacetime conscription act, calling for universal military service, must call also, and does call, for universal registration. That will be followed by a system of espionage intolerable to a free people, not because we intend it to follow, but because it is an inevitable consequence in the train of events.

No, Mr. Chairman; this measure is too dangerous—too dangerous to our country and to its institutions, too dangerous to world peace, too dangerous to free private enterprise and to free world trade.

I must vote against it, whatever the political penalties which may be assessed against me, and I hope profoundly that a majority of the House joins with me in that vote.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Durham].

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to hear the gentleman from Ohio advise the Committee that he intends to offer the so-called court-martial legislation which we have already passed in this body, as an amendment to this bill. There has been a great deal of study given to this subject, and you Members who care to add some incentive to the services, in my opinion, will be rendering a great service if this is enacted into law, because we all know there were many, many cases of unfair court martials which were uncovered before the committee. The gentleman from Ohio is rendering a service by offering this amendment.

I firmly believe that today America holds the peace of the world in her hands. The decision rests with us whether the weaker nations of the world can live and breathe under our banner of freedom or whether they will be gradually engulfed by their more powerful neighbors. We cannot close our eyes to the lessons of history or overlook our bitter experiences since the war, that if we desire peace we must maintain adequate armed forces. The size and level of efficiency of these forces must be such as would deter any further acts of aggression throughout the world.

We have gambled too long already with world peace by allowing our armed strength to reach a dangerously low level. The folly of such action is only too apparent to all of us.

Conflicts which have arisen might have been avoided if we had only maintained our strength. This is our last chance to correct that deficiency.

When our Nation assumed its position of world leadership, it assumed also world responsibilities — responsibilities which we can no longer shirk. Just as a boy when he becomes a man assumes the responsibility of manhood, so must we justify our growth to world leadership by assuming our world obligations. One of these obligations is to maintain strength commensurate with our world posture. To do this requires the present form of selective service. I honestly wish that there was some way we could avoid this draft in time of peace. I honestly wish we did not have to spend the money required. I am just as reluctant as any of you to spend these billions of dollars on military expenditures. I am only too well aware of the vast reconstruction and educational programs which have yet to be completed in our own country for which this money could be spent. However, I feel that these latter programs must wait, for to complete them without providing the strength to back up our moral obligations would be an invitation to national destruction. We would be impotent in a world which is still run largely by force. The days are gone when we can consider our own economy alone. We can no longer confine our views to our own horizons. There are too many dangers to our own security and to our own homes peering over these horizons.

Let me assure you that your Armed Services Committee investigated all alternatives before recommending the draft bill in its present form. Each section of the bill was accepted only after a complete analysis of its provisions had been made and after all the arguments against it had been considered.

There are several provisions which were the subject of considerable discussion and for this reason I would like to clarify them for you.

The first question very naturally was why do not the armed forces get their men by voluntary means? The answer is very obvious but worth developing. For 2 years the armed forces have tried to do just this and have not succeeded. For 2 years they have conducted the greatest recruiting campaign in the history of this or any country. In spite of all their efforts the numbers of men required cannot be obtained by voluntary means alone.

Many of the opponents of the bill contend, honestly or otherwise, that if the mental standards were lowered the services would obtain all the men they needed without resorting to a draft. Recruiting statistics show that such assertions are absolutely erroneous. Only 13 percent of the men who apply for the service are rejected because of mental requirements. In numbers this amounts to about 2,500 men per month. The actual shortage per month for the Army alone, over and above some 20,000 volunteers, is 25,000 or 10 times the number rejected. Even if the armed forces took every one who volunteered, they could not possibly meet their quotas.

However, I do not subscribe to an elimination of standards. I personally am in favor of our services continuing to maintain some reasonable set of standards for enlistment. If all the bums, misfits, and morons are to be enlisted as our first line of defense, our national security will certainly be resting on a feeble foundation. Furthermore, in talking to many of the men now in the service I raised this same question of standards with them. They said if the standards are lowered to permit a free entry of the lowest elements into the services, they, themselves, would leave immediately. I personally want to see our armed forces the best and most efficient in the world and they will be anything but that with substandard personnel.

There is a final point I wish to raise for it is one which the Committee considered at great length. That is the question of the length of service to be required of the selectees. Our committee wisely agreed on a 2-year term of service for these inductees for three major reasons. Actually the services would have preferred 3 years.

First, it would be impossible, in view of the many details involved, to obtain any satisfactory service from a man if he were to serve less than 2 years. As you know, the missions our armed forces are carrying on today require not partially trained men, but on the contrary, men of the highest qualification and experience. Eighteen-month servicemen could never fit the bill.

Second, the cost jumps radically as the term of service decreases. The reduction of, as little as, 6 months in the term of service would increase the personnel cost alone almost a half a billion dollars while at the same time increasing the number of men needed.

Third, and most important, it is doubtful if our manpower pool will permit a change in the term of service unless we want to draw upon the veterans and married men who, under the bill as now written, are deferred.

Addressing myself now to the first reason, namely, the unsatisfactory state of training and inefficiency that would result if the service period were reduced from 2 years. This is a selective-service bill. The purpose of selective-service is to provide necessary reinforcements for our occupation troops, and equally, if not more important, to furnish a trained and mobile force in being in this country capable of taking effective military action.

A provision of less than 2 years of service would effectively prevent these men from being used for overseas assignments. The time required after induction for processing, training and transporting, plus the time required at the end of their term of service for return transportation and separation would for practical purposes render their use in overseas areas impossible.

The second objection to less than 2 years of service is the prohibitive cost involved. It is a proven fact that the first year of service necessarily involves the original training and equipping of each man and involves an investment completely out of proportion to the service to be obtained from that man. Only by spreading this investment over a 2year period can a satisfactory return be had. As an example, it has been estimated that the cost of maintaining an 18 months' enlistee in overseas peacetime service costs approximately $1,000 per month of such overseas service. By extending the period of enlistment to 24 months or longer this per month cost would be substantially reduced.

Finally, the manpower statistics prove conclusively that there just are not enough men within the age groups concerned who are available to serve on less than a 2-year basis unless the World War II veterans group and perhaps fathers with dependent children are also made subject to the draft.

For these reasons I submit that the proposal to reduce the term of service, attractive though it may seem, is not practicable and, therefore, was not approved by your committee.

In closing, let me state that although some people have arrived at the theory that the American people are unwilling to accept their personal duty and responsibility as citizens to share in the common defense, I personally do not subscribe to that theory. Our history bears concrete evidence to the fact that Americans are willing to make any necessary sacrifices for their country and their ideals.

I would be deeply embarrassed if any Member of Congress would propose that the obligation for service in the armed forces, in this emergency, should or must be accompanied by the payment of some bonus. This would mean that men from the wealthier classes could easily avoid their responsibilities by foregoing some trifling amount of money, thereby placing the burden of national security on our poorer and less fortunate classes. In addition to maligning the character of the American citizen such a suggestion presents clear evidence to the peoples of the world that we are in favor of world peace and security only if it does not interfere with our own lives. We will give anything but ourselves.

True world leadership cannot be exercised by a nation which has grown soft. The world knows it. I do not believe that we can shirk our world responsibility and I do not believe our citizens expect us to.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cole].

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, this is the second time within a decade that Congress has given its attention to compulsory military service in a period of nominal peace. It is the second time within that period that events in the world have impelled this country to consider, in the interest of its own security, steps which are novel to its traditions.

The visible dangers to the security of the United States are as great in 1948 as they were in 1940—perhaps greater—and the demand for prompt action is no less urgent. But the world situation of 1948 is not closely analogous to that of 1940 and it would be erroneous to attempt to draw too close a parallel. The odds on peace are much greater in 1948 than in 1940, provided the American people can properly evaluate the situation and take the necessary steps to cope with it.

In 1940 the greater part of the civilized world was already at war. When Congress debated the Selective Service Act in September Poland had been gutted and France overrun by the German blitzkrieg. The British had withdrawn the remnants of their ill-fated expeditionary force at Dunkerque and the desperate, decisive battle in the air over England was in full sway. In short, the battle lines had already been drawn and the armies committed. There was no real hope in September 1940 of limiting the conflict or negotiating a peace. Twenty years of sterile and negative diplomacy on the part of the western democracies, including the United States, had ended and the American people belatedly realized their own survival was at stake.

In 1948 the situation is markedly different. In spite of an unremitting political struggle between the only two great powers to emerge from the Second World War, the world is nominally at peace. The armies have not been committed and the situation has not yet drifted beyond the point of "no return."

The purpose of reviving selective-service legislation in 1948 is different also from the purpose of 1940. It is not primarily to prepare this country against any eventuality arising out of a situation that has clearly got out of control, although without question this is one of the purposes. The primary purpose is, on the contrary, to prevent the situation from getting out of control. We require an increase in our standing armed forces today in order that American military strength—actual rather than potential—may be effectively applied as a stabilizing influence in world affairs and as a deterrent to aggression.

The need for such a stabilizing influence is unmistakable. The complete collapse of Germany, and the near-exhaustion of those other European countries who struggled to defeat her, have created a power vacuum throughout western and southern Europe which, by the law of nature, invites the encroachments of power systems outside that region. Life in Europe has been rendered, as a result of the war, precarious and unstable, and attempts at positive reconstruction have been—until the launching of the Marshall plan—inhibited by the fear of invasion from the East.

Such a fear is real and exists today. From the termination of hostilities to the present, the Soviet Union has consistently sought to frustrate and thwart European recovery, hoping in this way to create such intolerable political and economic conditions in western Europe that freely elected governments could not stand, and that desperate, hungry peoples would at length deliver themselves to the tightly organized Communist minorities, who at least promised food in exchange for political servitude. By thus fomenting economic misery, the Soviet Union hoped to achieve domination of the entire European Continent without open war.

The enactment of the European recovery program, which bears such great hope for the democratic future because it points a way out of the present morass, has not altered the Soviet aim but only frustrated its original tactic.

Europe is now on the road to recovery. That is a fact which the Cominform has not been able either to obscure or prevent by any means short of war. Vituperation in the press and on the radio, demonstrations, strikes, and riots by Communist followers in Italy and France have all failed to kill the hope which the anticipation of ERP had kindled in the minds of Europeans who earnestly seek a future for a free Europe. Europe is on the road to recovery—and a free, united Europe, as we have learned from painful experience in two great wars, is a basic requirement for the continued security and tranquillity of the American people.

Why, then, if recovery has been successfully begun, must the United States now undertake, in an atmosphere of urgency, to augment its standing military forces? The answer is simple if we will keep in our minds the inherent nature of the Soviet Empire and its overriding, avowed objective—Communist domination of the world.

I said a moment ago that the enactment of ERP did not alter the Soviet objective in western Europe, but merely frustrated its original tactic. It has also altered the tactic. Having failed to destroy the ERP, the Soviet Union immediately undertook to consolidate its position in those countries on its borders which, through fear of Russian disapproval, had refrained from participation in the Marshall plan. If the ERP could not be destroyed, then the Soviet Union was determined that its effectiveness should be geographically limited and the strategic position of the Soviet Union improved in the process. Thus there followed the blatant coup d'état in Czechoslovakia, the démarche on Finland, and the excessive pressure put upon the entire Scandinavian peninsula for alliances with the Soviet Union. To these were added the severe and annoying restrictions put upon the American occupation forces in Berlin and Vienna.

The coup in Czechoslovakia contains a very special lesson for those who still wish to believe that our economic support of Europe is sufficient by itself and need not be buttressed by American armed strength. For that event proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that Soviet communism does not expand the areas of its control through economic misery alone. but that it spreads as well by the application of political pressure backed by poised military strength. Czechoslovakia did not fall to communism because its economic system had failed, nor because of widespread discontent with its political structure. It fell because it was intimidated by the threat of physical force and organized terror which it could not match. Recovery in France or in Italy could be as abruptly terminated, however great the American monetary contribution, if the Soviet Union should feel a compelling necessity to prevent recovery in those countries by overt means.

Taken collectively, this series of Russian actions reflects unquestionably the severe impact of ERP upon Soviet ambitions in western Europe, and indicates a stepping-up of the tempo of Soviet resistance to the emerging unity of that region. What is the significate of these events? In my view, these Soviet actions raise the very real possibility—which it would be criminal negligence to ignore—that the Soviet Union may now be willing to use overt means to dominate key areas in western Europe on the assumption that present American policies, unless interrupted, can lead only to the conclusion which would permanently frustrate Russian ambitions—the recovery of Europe as a free and productive community.

In order to deter any such rash decision on the part of the Soviet Government, it is imperative for the United States to transform without delay a reasonable measure of its armed strength from potential to actual.

It was to be expected that we would have to protect our investment in American security, which is simultaneously an investment in European recovery. Now that the nature of Russian resistance has become clear, we must without hesitation take the steps necessary to cope with it. American economic and military efforts to achieve world stability are each the corollary of the other and they are interdependent. This is the crux of the matter.

The need for an increase in our armed forces therefore exists. Why must we invoke a compulsory draft in order to achieve the necessary increase? The answer is fundamentally simple: Because even extraordinarily successful efforts at voluntary recruitment have proved insufficient. As is set forth extensively in the majority report on H. R. 6401, the recruiting efforts of all the armed forces since the termination of hostilities have resulted in the establishment and maintenance of 1,385,000 men—by far the largest voluntary force in the Nation's history.

The magnitude of the achievement is

The magnitude of the achievement is further emphasized by the circumstances surrounding it: The Nation is nominally at peace, has just concluded an exhausting war, and is enjoying an unprecedented ievel of employment and prosperity. Ready employment at good pay is available in civilian life.

Notwithstanding the success of this recruiting program, it is evident that the top limits obtainable through voluntary means have already been reached in the Army. In the Navy voluntary recruitment can produce additional men, but not to the level of their authorized strength under existing law. The Air Force expects to meet all of its needs through voluntary recruitment, but this expectation appears optimistic, at least in the absence of a selective-service law. Two of the three military services could not, therefore, achieve by voluntary means alone the increases proposed in the Andrews bill, which are considered minimum requirements in the light of present world conditions. It is thus clear that the voluntary-recruiting program must be supplemented by a system of compulsory selective service, unless the country is willing to gamble dangerously with its own security, or to see the in-tegrity of its vital policies compromised and rendered ineffective by default.

I, therefore, sincerely hope that the House will act promptly on the Andrews bill. I believe such action would be in the highest interest of the United States.

In the light of the circumstances in which we now find ourselves, the proposals in the Andrews bill are not excessive. Their implementation would not put the country on a war footing, but would merely provide an adequate foundation upon which to build in the event a greater mobilization were required. They would provide for the recruitment of a respectable, but not overwhelming, force capable of restoring a balance between our heavy commitments in the world and our ability to cover them—a balance we have not enjoyed since our hasty and misguided demobilization in 1945.

I wish to emphasize the limited nature of this measure. The Andrews bill would permit an over-all increase in the standing forces of approximately 620,000 men. It would provide the Army, in addition to its occupation forces overseas. with five full-strength divisions to be based in the continental United States. In addition, it would permit the maintenance of six fully-trained and equipped divisions of National Guard and Reserve troops to serve as a first-line reserve in being. This would constitute the emergency force, or strategic reserve, or deployable, uncommitted troops. Such a force is now required for three basic reasons: (1) To support our minimal occupation forces in the event of internal trouble in Germany, Japan, or Korea; (2) To serve with the United Nations police force, if such is established, in the common effort to reduce existing tensions throughout the world; (3) To seize and hold advance bases for the Air Force in the event of war. The day of intercontinental warfare is many years away. Unless we possess a mobile striking force able, in the event of war, to secure air bases within reach of the enemy, the finest American air force will be, for the next several years, virtually limited to the defense of the Western Hemisphere: the present and foreseeable range of aircraft will not permit American planes to strike an enemy in Europe or Asia with decisive effect from bases within the continental United States.

The bill would permit the Air Force to attain the number of men required to man 70 air groups, which the Congress has already authorized and for which funds have already been appropriated.

The bill would also permit the Navy to achieve its presently authorized strength, to strengthen the complements of ships now in commission, to activate additional air units and other facilities proportionate to the Navy's increased mission, as required by the activation of 70 air groups and the increased strength of the Army.

Surely, this does not constitute an overwhelming force in the light of present dangers, future uncertainties, and the immense responsibilities that have fallen to the United States-however unwittingly-because of our vast material wealth, our strategic position, and our success as a free democracy. If to these is added-and it cannot be ignored—the condition of basic instability existing in a world that is in the throes of a politico-economic revolution, accelerated by a profoundly significant shift in the power balance, it becomes unmistakably clear that the proposed strengths in the Andrews bill are not disproportionate to the problems that face us.

In closing, I should like to restate my belief that this measure, if enacted, will not tend to provoke war, but will, on the contrary, serve as a definite deterrent to any rash decision that may be contemplated by the Soviet Government. It will strengthen the security of the United States by assuring that the European recovery program and similar constructive policies pursued by other free governments will be permitted to proceed, without interference, to their logical conclusion—the reconstitution of a healthy and productive world community.

This Congress has over the past year set in motion several great constructive enterprises which made the hope of world recovery and world stability far more real than appeared possible a year ago. We must now sustain these enterprises against new difficulties which have arisen until they can come to fruition. This will require continued maintenance of adequate armed strength and, above all, perseverance.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER].

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I am one of the members of the House Armed Services Committee who subscribed to the minority report in opposition to the enactment of H. R. 6401, which is entitled "The Selective Service Act of 1948."

I think I have devoted as much time as any other member of the committee, except the chairman, in attendance at the hearings on the bill, and I have attempted to assemble from the RECORD in consecutive form what I regard as compelling reasons against the enactment of this legislation.

I voted for the Selective Service Act of 1940 because I was convinced that the American people were at that time in the shadow of a great national emergency, and that the registration of all able-bodied male citizens was essential in order to protect our Nation against imminent danger of military attack. Subsequent events prove that my conviction was well founded. I would vote for such a measure again under similar circumstances.

However, the present bill has been presented to Congress as a peacetime preparedness measure. All of our top military experts have assured the Armed Services Committee that this is not an emergency measure, based upon the imminence of war. They have declared that the United States is not confronted with a national emergency in that sense. They say, instead, that the world is in a state of tension, and assert the belief that some form of permanent compulsory military service is essential to adequate preparation for the national defense in the future.

During the hearings held by the Armed Services Committee on the pending bill all of the titular heads of the National Military Establishment, from Secretary of Defense Forrestal down, were repeatedly asked whether they expected this country to be involved in another war in the immediate future. In every instance the response was in the negative. All of our military experts, as well as spokesmen for the State Department, expressed the opinion that the present program of the Russian Government does not contemplate the use of armed force at this time.

The principal reason which they advanced in support of their advocacy of the enactment of a selective-service law now was based upon the allegation that the Army was unable to obtain a sufficient number of men'through the present system of voluntary recruitment to maintain its authorized strength. Spokesmen for the Navy Department and the Department of the Air Force testified that they did not need selective service in order to obtain their manpower requirements.

It appears, therefore, that the only semblance of a national emergency upon which any necessity for the enactment of a peacetime conscription law at this time can be argued is the alleged inability of the Army to maintain its authorized strength through voluntary enlistment. I will explain later why the minority members of the Armed Services Committee do not believe that the Department of the Army has exhausted the possibilities of the voluntary recruitment system.

First, however, I want to correct a false impression which has been created in the minds of the American people that the enactment of a selective-service law at this time would be merely a temporary measure. Proponents of the bill have contributed to this false impression by pointing to the fact that this bill contains an expiration date. I wish to emphasize the fact that the record of the hearings before the Armed Services Committee is replete with forthright statements from Secretary of Defense Forrestal and other authorized spokesmen for the National Military Establishment that this selective-service program is designed to remain in effect indefinitely until universal military training is adopted as the permanent law of the land. There can be no doubt that this is the purpose of the sponsors of this bill.

In my opinion the testimony taken by the House Armed Services Committee proves, beyond reasonable doubt, that the National Military Establishment has deliberately refrained in the recent past from making all-out efforts to bring the Army up to the full strength authorized by Congress through the system of voluntary recruitment now provided by law. The Army has refused to accept applications for voluntary enlistment by men who do not make a passing grade of 80 percent in the arbitrary entrance tests which have been revised sharply upward during the recent postwar period. In response to questioning before the House committee, a spokesman for the Army attempted to justify the rigorous new entrance examinations by stating that they want every man in the service to be capable of functioning as a one-man army when stationed on a post alone with a rifle. I desire to point out that some of the outstanding heroes of World War I and World War II were men who could not have met these new entrance tests. The only conclusion I could reach after listening to this kind of testimony was that the Army chiefs are determined to take only the best-educated young men of America out of civil life and bring them into the armed services.

The National Military Establishment has failed to maintain the National Guard and the Reserve organizations on an efficient basis. Before the Armed Services Committee General Bradley testified as follows:

If our reserve units were filled with men with proper training we believe we could reduce the size of our Regular Army. And it might get it down to a point where it could be maintained by voluntary enlistment.

The bill before you will do nothing to increase the strength and efficiency of the Reserve components. On the contrary, Gen. E. A. Walsh, president of the National Guard Association, on May 3, 1948, wired each of the members of the House Armed Services as follows:

The enactment of H. R. 6401, as now drafted, will mean the complete dissolution of the National Guard of the United States by June 30, 1950. The security of the Nation cannot be assured by destroying its Reserves. If there is a possibility of war the measures proposed are utterly inadequate. If there is no possibility of war, then the measures proposed are excessive.

General Evans, executive director of the Reserve Officers Association, told the Armed Services Committee that the Army had done very little to help the Reserves, had done nothing to furnish equipment, and did not contact or put in units the members of the Reserves. General Evans added:

I am not talking about procurement; all I am urging and begging and what I have been trying for 3 years is to have somebody to do something with what we have now.

General Evans agreed that-

There would be no need for a draft, UMT or anything else if the Army had done its duty and supported the Guard and the Reserves, having made a sincere, earnest, and determined effort to bring them up.

He supplemented this testimony by saying that he had heard the statement made that the Army leaders "felt they need not build up either the Organized Reserves or the National Guard because they were going to get UMT or the draft."

The recruiting program is an Army problem, since the Air Force and the Navy are able to get the recruits they need. It is in no sense an unsolvable problem. The following steps would, in my judgment, substantially improve Army recruiting:

First. Revision of the court-martial system so that enlisted men would feel that they would get as fair and equitable treatment as officers.

Second. Improvement of relationships between officers and enlisted men as recommended by the Doolittle board. Third. Provision for adequate housing for enlisted men.

Fourth. Acceptance of 1-year- and 18-month-term reenlistments.

Fifth. Acceptance of men who make a 70-percent grade in the Army general classification test.

Sixth. Increase the pay scales for enlisted men.

There is apparent disagreement among Army officers about the proper score for admission of applicants. A recently published pamphlet, The Fort Knox Experiment, printed in the Senate hearings, refers to the 70-percent minimum which is usual for Army enlistments.

General Eisenhower, testifying before the Senate Armed Services Committee on April 2, said:

I thought I had directed before I left as Chief of Staff to drop, for the Ground Forces at least, the figure back to 70, so that we could fill up certain places.

Lieutenant General Paul, in a letter to the Senate Armed Services Committee, stated that the Army did have men of prior service with good records whose score is between 70 and 80. Other witnesses expressed the belief that men who were good noncommissioned officers of the Army would not now be able to enter if they had to pass the present tests.

There is an abundance of experienced military opinion that the Army should lower its intelligence requirements.

In my opinion, the obvious conclusion is that the National Military Establishment has purposely permitted the voluntary recruitment system and the whole Organized Reserve system to deteriorate in order to substitute a permanent compulsory program in peacetime. The only statement by Pentagon spokesmen on this subject is that they have done what they could with the funds given them by Congress; but the records of the House Appropriations Committee do not show that any urgent appeal has been made by the National Military Establishment during the postwar period for additional funds to build up the Reserves and the National Guard.

There are other significant facts in the official records of this postwar period which strengthen my conclusion that the National Military Establishment has deliberately blocked the development of a strong and effective Reserve system in order to substitute some method of compulsory service. The Selective Service Act of 1940 contained directives, which were purposely inserted by the Congress, that the veterans of World War II should be placed in a Reserve status for a period of 10 years after they were discharged from active service. This provision was specifically extended by the Congress at the time the old Selective Service Act expired.

I now quote from the testimony of Mr. B. N. Harlow, a member of the technical staff of the House Armed Services Committee, on page 6532 of the House committee report of the hearings on the pending bill:

The services did not abide by this provision. The service position was originally to abide by the law. Then, as I recall it, they took a certain proportion of the discharged men in the Reserve. Later, for some reason which I never was able to discover, they discontinued that procedure.

The issue became very warm inside the War Department, and the Department went to the Judge Advocate General to find out what they should do about the situation. The Judge Advocate General came to the conclusion that the President had the authority to discharge these men under another act of Congress, and their position is predicated upon that act.

While this subject was being discussed in the committee hearing, General Evans called attention to the concluding paragraph of the Judge Advocate General's opinion, reading as follows:

It is proper to add that, although in my opinion discharges may be ordered in appropriate cases, such complete separations from the service should be based upon adequate grounds, and effected in accordance with sound policies. Otherwise it is quite likely that accusations may be made that discrimination is being practiced or that one of the major purposes of the act; i. e., the creation of a large trained reserve, is being defeated.

General Evans described this concluding paragraph as a warning from the Judge Advocate.

Despite this warning from their chief legal adviser, the War Department and the other branches of the armed services proceeded thereafter to discharge the millions of men who had served in World War II without transferring them to a reserve status, thereby defeating the major purpose of Congress to create a large trained reserve in the postwar period.

Gentlemen of the Committee, you can draw your own conclusions as to the reasons which impelled the armed services to disregard the emphatically expressed intention of Congress that a large trained reserve should be automatically created in this postwar period. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, I have not been able to get any satisfactory explanation of this unprecedented evasion of a congressional mandate. In my own mind it is unmistakably associated with the deep-seated determination of our military high command to force some form of compulsory service upon the American people at this time.

I am sure that all of the members of the Rules Committee are familiar with the reports made by the publicity and propaganda subcommittee of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, following their investigation of the participation of Federal officials of the War Department in publicity and propaganda relating to universal military training. For the purpose of this record I ask permission to read an excerpt from a letter addressed to the Attorney General of the United States by the gentleman from Indiana. Hon. Forest A. Harness, chairman of the subcommittee, dated July 23, 1947:

I am impelled to call to your attention what the Subcommittee on Publicity and Propaganda of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments concludes to be improper and unlawful activities of Federal officials of the War Department in propagandizing for legislation now pending before Congress, relating to universal military training.

The subcommittee report which was transmitted to the Attorney General with the letter referred to above ends with the following statement:

Your committee reports its firm conclusion that, on the basis of the evidence at hand, the War Department, its personnel, and civilian employees have gone beyond the limits of their proper duty of providing factual information to the people and the Congress, and have engaged in propaganda supported by taxpayers' money to influence legislation now pending in Congress.

This report was signed by the following Members of the House of Representatives: Hon. Forest A. Harness, chairman, Hon. James W. Wadsworth, Hon. Henry J. Latham, Hon. Carter Manasco, and Hon. J. Frank Wilson.

To sum up the foregoing statements, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the failure of the National Military Establishment to make any adequate provisions for an efficient Reserve and National Guard in the postwar period, the arbitrary restrictions imposed by the Department of the Army upon the voluntary recruitment system, the amazing refusal of the military high command to comply with the mandate of Congress to transfer millions of men into a reserve status after World War II, and the improper expenditure of tax funds by the War Department on propaganda in support of universal military training clearly demonstrate that the insistent demand from the above-mentioned military sources for the enactment of this bill is not based upon any grave emergency which imperils our national security, but is the culmination of a long-term, carefully conceived campaign to compel Congress to approve some kind of compulsory military service at this time.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I say that my fundamental objection to this bill arises from a grave apprehension about its impact upon the American way of life. The enactment of this measure would mean the abdication, perhaps for all time, of one of the basic principles upon which the free democratic society of America has endured throughout the history of this Republic. That principle is freedom for all of our citizens from any form of military compulsion in peacetime.

The military leaders of this country have always favored some form of peacetime compulsory military service. But the American people, in their wisdom, have always rejected this doctrine. They have insisted that civil authority should be superior to military authority in the affairs of our Government, and public opinion has up to this time prevented the injection of military compulsion into the fabric of our free democracy, in time of peace.

Under this traditional peacetime policy, the United States of America has become the greatest and most prosperous Nation in the history of the world. In the past three decades, without adopting either peacetime conscription or universal military training, this Nation has fought and won the two greatest wars in all history. It was no mere accident that the free democracies of the westthe United States and Great Britainwithout a long peacetime period of conscription and a well-developed military bureaucracy, were enabled to assemble a more powerful striking force than the Axis Powers. World War II was a war of modern machines, and the unprepared western democracies demonstrated a clear superiority in this type of warfare. I am convinced that this superiority is based upon our incomparable ability in the all-important field of production which would be even more important in the scientific warfare of the future.

The disruptive effect of this kind of legislation upon the American home was the subject of thoughtful discussion in the minority report upon this bill. I quote briefly from the report:

In the American home are centered the hopes and aspirations of fathers, mothers, and children; there is the sacrifice that has spelled much of our great achievement as a people; there is the love and understanding that binds us together in millions of families having common aspirations, common hopes, common beliefs. Anything which will undermine such a cultural force, such a religious strength, such a source of national patriotism, is not to be legislated lightly into existence.

Yet this compulsory draft bill proposes to invade the family and disrupt its character. It will take the sons away from the home in the most formative and impressionable years, removing them from the steadying hand of a father and the abiding faith and love of a mother. It will interrupt, and in many cases permanently prevent, the college educations of thousands of our young people. It will deny to many needy families gainful returns from employment of their younger members.

If there were war, or the threat of imminent war, no members of this minority, and no patriotic father or mother in this great Nation of ours would refuse to make the sacrifice of their sons, as they have done in the past. But even in this period of international tension no evidence has been produced by the military authorities, by the State Department, or by any responsible witness, that would warrant a peacetime draft which will so drastically affect all American families.

Mr. Chairman, in these times we hear much of the threat to the American way of life from certain alien ideologies. I am as much opposed to the tyrannical cults which are embodied in those alien ideologies as any other American can possibly be. But I believe that the most immediate threat to our cherished American way of life is from the ideology of militarism. This ideology is as old as civilization; yes, even older. It has always sought to fasten itself upon the societies of free men. Whenever it has succeeded in doing so those societies, ancient and modern, have been marked for destruction.

Mr. Chairman, it is the ideology of militarism, that is inherent in this bill, which makes me fear it so much. I earnestly hope that it will never become the law of our land.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to and I shall vote against the pending bill. It is in my opinion unwise, unsafe, unnecessary, undemocratic, and un-American.

Every impulse of my mind, heart, and soul cries out against militarism and military slavery in peacetime, and in my opinion that is just what this bill implies.

It is with sincere humility that I approach the great issue of peacetime military conscription. The factors to be considered are so diverse and complex that it would be easier, perhaps, to conclude that the military leaders know what is best than to weigh the effects of passing or rejecting the selective-service legislation, and to come to an independent decision.

Having served in Congress during two terrible wars, I fully realize the necessity of an effective, efficient military organization in an international crisis. Yet, as the military might shields us in war, so, if unchecked in peace, it will curtail and oppress the very liberties so dearly defended against the foreign enemy.

My determination to oppose the pending bill (H. R. 6401) is the result of the most solemn and prayerful deliberation on the following questions:

First. Does a peacetime draft law present a serious threat to democratic government and to individual liberty and morality?

Second. Is a draft law at present necessary to obtain the required manpower for the armed forces?

Third. Is the cost of establishment of a system of selective service now justified?

Fourth. Would enactment of a peacetime draft provide the most effective preparedness program?

Fifth. Would not passage of the pending bill overshadow the basic, long-range program to assure a lasting peace?

First, let us weigh the dangers of peacetime conscription to democratic government. Although the pending bill deals solely with selective service, the Minority Report of the Armed Services Committee points out that "the record of the hearings before the Armed Services Committees of both Houses of Congress is replete with forthright statements from authorized spokesmen of the National Military Establishment that this program is designed to remain in effect indefinitely until universal military training is adopted as the permanent law of the land.

So we must not delude ourselves that we are passing upon selective service alone. If this bill passes, the military leaders, by their own admission, will not desist until they have obtained universal military training. The ultimate result will be a perpetual military yoke about the family freedom of the American home. The young men of the Nation—and eventually the women—will be subjected during their most impressionable years to military discipline and training. The caste system of the military is the antithesis of democracy. Young people will be taught to obey without question at a time when the power of independent thought and decision should be fostered. Without such fundamental education, Mr. Chairman, democratic government cannot long endure.

And would anyone dare say that military camps are a beneficial influence upon the cultural, moral, and religious development of the youth of the Nation? Citizenship and morality, my friends, can best be developed in the homes, schools, and churches. The Army has but one object and that is to turn these young men into precision military ma-

Not the least in the sinister influences of militarization is the present and potential power of the brass hats over the economy of the country. The spending of $20,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000 a year is not to be entrusted lightly to a small group of military dictators who all too frequently use army discipline and security regulations to cover up their own mistakes and ambitions. Nor can we neglect the dangerous influence of military men, with billions to spend, upon the freedom of deliberations of the legislators who authorized such vast expenditures.

Even the freedom of the press may be endangered by military advertising budgets and constant propaganda. My grave fears, therefore, of the adverse effects of peacetime conscription—as a prelude to universal military training—upon the youth of the Nation as individuals, and upon such fundamental American institutions as the family, the private-enterprise economy, a free press, and a Congress answerable to civilians and not to the military, impel me to the conviction that its adoption would be a terrible plague upon the body politic.

Our forefathers braved the wilderness of the New World to be relieved of despotism resting upon compulsory military training. Even in the darker hours of the American Revolution Thomas Jefferson advised against the draft, in a letter to John Adams:

It ever was the most unpopular and impractical thing that could be attempted. Our people under the monarchical government had learned to consider it as the last of all oppressions.

The Congress today may well heed the advice of this great President and author of the Declaration of Independence.

Second, even if the hazards of selective service could be safely assumed, is it necessary at the present time? On this question civilians—whether on the farm or in Congress—may admittedly have to decide without knowing all the facts. Yet, as Mr. J. T. Sanders, spokesman for the National Grange, told the House Armed Services Committee on April 20, 1948:

Frankly, and with no more information than we now have, we have our serious doubts that there is impending a war crisis that justifies an immediate resort to selective service. We grant that certain information must be kept confidential; but unless there is a far more serious threat than we know about, and on which the people cannot now safely be informed, we can see no imminent danger that would call for either the draft or universal military training.

With a more sensible respect and treatment of servicemen by officers—with more liberal pay, with greater educational advantages and opportunities, and so forth, we believe an adequate armed force will volunteer.

But the doubts of us civilians about the real necessity for conscription are supported by military spokesmen who may be presumed to have ready access to classified information on our international relations.

Secretary of Air Symington told the House Armed Services Committee on April 13, 1948:

We do not feel that selective service is necessary, in order to get the people up to the 502,000, based on our calendar for the Air Force.

General Spaatz on the same day agreed:

I have no doubt in my mind but what the Air Force will get sufficient recruits to maintain the Air Force proper on a voluntary enlistment basis.

Secretary of the Navy Sullivan told the House Armed Services Committee on April 13:

We do not know whether we can get those additional people without selective service. We believe that the way our enlistments have been running we probably will be able to do it.

And Admiral Denfeld, on whether the Navy could maintain its strength without the draft, said:

I think you can get it if the present situation continues.

Since the Air Force, and the Navy probably do not need conscription, only the Army is involved. As the minority report of the House committee summarizes this question:

The immediate excuse for the measure boils down to the alleged inability of the Army to secure voluntary enlistments for the Ground Forces. Both Air Corps and Navy spokesmen have admitted that voluntary methods will be sufficient to their needs. The committee records show that the Army has deliberately refrained from making allout efforts to utilize voluntary recruitment methods. Just as little interest has been shown in supporting the Reserve establishments as long as the Army feels that universal conscription is obtainable, so the Army has been unwilling to pursue energetically the problem of making Army service more desirable to the average potential soldier.

The revision of the court-martial system in accord with the Doolittle report, the improvement of relations between officers and enlisted men, provision of adequate housing for married enlisted personnel, shorter term enlistments, and more realistic general classification-test requirements, are all feasible measures which we believe would substantially improve recruiting.

And I should add to these suggestions an adjustment in pay scale with a more substantial reward in increased pay based upon length of service. Moreover, if fewer men in uniform were assigned to desk jobs that civilians could readily perform, the Army needs might very well be met by voluntary enlistment. Nor has anyone explained satisfactorily the sudden increase in the passing grade for recruits from 59 to 80.

Of particular merit, in my opinion, is the alternative of proper utilization of the 2,400,000 Organized Reserves. Testimony before the House Armed Services Committee charged the Army with neglect of the voluntary Reserves and the National Guard in order to get compulsory military training. In the Senate hearings, General Evans, executive director of the Reserve Officers Association, said:

There is an apparent policy which exists in the Pentagon today which says we will do very little with the Reserve program until the National Guard program is 100-percent organized. It cannot be 100-percent organized in the manner in which it is supposed to be, completely, until the passage of universal military training.

In desperation our military leaders have suggested the possibility of war to substantiate their clamor for peacetime conscription.

On May 13, 1948, General Bradley told the House Appropriations Subcommittee:

The precipitation of armed hostilities, either by a deliberate or accidental incident, is a plausible possibility so long as our forces face each other on opposing frontiers in this strained atmosphere of distrust and tension.

Stripped to a simple subject and predicate, I interpret the general to say:

War is now a plausible possibility.

Since I felt sure that General Bradley's statement was the result of painstaking preparation, I decided to scrutinize it with equal care. War, of course, for as long as there shall be independent nations, is always a possibility. But just what is "a plausible possibility"? For that I had to go to Webster's New International Dictionary, where I found the following definitions of "plausible":

Worthy of being applauded; obtaining approbation or favor; agreeable; affable; obtaining general approval; popular; superficially fair, reasonable, or valuable; apparently right or trustworthy; specious; using specious arguments or discourse; fair-spoken; applausive; and plauditory.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that not one of the meanings of the adjective "plausible" is applicable. Stripped of all its unnecessary verbiage, all that General Bradley said in support of his request for a supplemental budget for the Army was: "War is a possibility."

Let us discuss now the third question of whether the cost of selective service is an unnecessary expenditure and burden under present conditions. If we assume—without conceding—that world conditions may warrant a stronger military force, we still should consider whether the draft is the most economical method of preparedness.

Secretary Forrestal on April 12, 1948, stated that the draft program for fiscal year 1949 "involves a supplemental budget request of $3,000,000,000 in cash and contract authorizations, over and above the authorizations which have already been requested." We should also add the cost of reactivating the draft boards, which would be $40,000,000, since the armed forces intend to maintain their recruiting program in addition to conscription. The Armed Services Committee minority report, however, summarized the cost of the program as follows:

The cost of the program provided by the bill appears as two substantial items. One amount of $2,149,000,000 would be expended for the training equipment and the initial machinery setting the program in operation. In addition, an estimated $3,900,000,000 for reequipping the 25 divisions of the Army will be required in fiscal 1949. These items are in addition to the $11,000,000,000 budget appropriation, the $3,000,000,000 supplementary appropriation and the $822,000,000 Air Corps appropriation. Thus, the total military budget for 1949 is seen to be more than $21,000,000,000.

The annual cost of selective service per man has been estimated at $8,000 the first year and $5,000 the next. Consider for a moment what a fine college education could be provided for every inductee with such sums, and what a contribution this would be to their own lives and to cultural and scientific advancement.

Fourth, a vital question to the very existence of this Nation is whether selective service—and its contemplated successor, universal military training—will provide effective preparedness against the eventuality of another war.

With such fearful weapons as the atomic bomb, rocket propulsion, and bacteriological warfare available to our potential enemies, I am compelled to agree with Admiral Schoeffel of the United States Naval Ordnance that—

It will never again be possible for us to depend upon dusting off the weapons of a previous conflict when war breaks out. It would be like reverting to the bow and arrow.

Yet the military, through stress upon peacetime conscription, would create for us a Maginot defense line of drilling foot soldiers.

Instead we should for the present build up our atomic stock pile and expend our resources and energy in the advancement of scientific research. Only thus can we maintain a preponderance of power to guarantee national survival if war again should come.

Finally, all this talk by our military leaders about the plausible possibility of war and the necessity for universal military training and the draft are loathesome burdens as we seek the path toward a permanent peace. Instead of concentrating so heavily upon numbers of military personnel, we should, I firmly believe, work toward the following goals, without which our civilization cannot survive:

First. The United Nations must be strengthened by abandonment of the veto. It must be made to work, for there are no differences between nations that cannot be solved at a conference table to the betterment of all concerned far more wisely than by resorting to modern weapons of war. To the extent that this involves a surrender of sovereignty to the United Nations, I think we might accept it as the only rational alternative to world anarchy in which the will of a single nation is allowed to obstruct the desires of all the rest. Accordingly, I believe that the United States should initiate action under the terms of article 109 of the Charter of the United Nations. This article provides that a general conference of the members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

Second. When the stature of the United Nations as a force for maintaining peace and security among nations is fully developed, world disarmament will logically follow. It will be impossible then to justify military forces in excess of those required for internal police within a country and for meeting the commitments of a nation to the forces assigned to the United Nations. Universal disarmament would, of course, involve the adoption of the Baruch plan for atomic-energy control, and would mean the universal abolition of military conscription.

In conclusion, a peacetime draft with the forecast of universal military training, is a negative and dangerous departure from our democratic tradition against militarism. It is an unnecessary, costly, and ineffective preparedness program—that is utterly inconsistent with our proclaimed policies of peace. This bill would impose an unnecessary load on the already overburdened taxpayers of America, and a galling yoke of military servitude upon the necks of American youth. I fear the way we are headed is exactly contrary to the direction in which we say we want to go. On these earnest convictions I must rest my opposition to the pending bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCowen].

Mr. McCOWEN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to peacetime compulsory military conscription for many reasons. One of the most important reasons is that it is contrary to the philosophy of our American constitutional republican form of government. A very large percentage of early immigrants to this land came here to get away from the very thing this Congress is now asked to set up. In my opinion one of the best ways to begin the destruction of the freedom of the individual and our freedom in general is to pass this peacetime draft which would be a radical change in our Government, the first peacetime draft in our history when no emergency existed.

Our top military authorities have testified before the Armed Services Committees that there is no immediate danger of war. James A. Farley, a Democrat high in the councils of his party has said the same thing in the press. The United States News very recently carried the same statement. It has been testified also by high military authorities that the draft is not needed for either the Navy or the Air Force, and that the shortage in the Army is only about 250,000. It is also freely charged that the Army raised its standards which caused the rejection of many volunteers and that it has not exhausted its power to get volunteers.

If Congress can give billions of dollars to Europe, why could it not raise the salaries of enlisted men and thereby cause many to volunteer who would do it willingly, and thus fill the small short-

No, the great purpose of this compulsory peacetime military draft is to fasten on this country forever, a system that has led to the downfall of every country in all history that has had it.

If this draft law is passed and goes into effect in the form the bill is in now, look for rationing and gradually increasing regimentation of our people in the United States. The bill should not pass.

If there were a real emergency or if war were imminent, I would vote for the draft. But neither situation now exists. I voted for all defense measures including that for the large Air Force. I am for a strong national defense and have uniformly voted for it, and expect to continue to do so. But this draft bill is not now necessary.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York, Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Shafer].

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California has just made an excellent statement and I agree with him on the point that the Army has not exhausted all of its possibilities to obtain recruits to bring the armed forces up to authorized strength. I shall later offer an amendment that would provide for an honest, intensified campaign for voluntary enlistments before this act could be made effective.

In this connection I had an unexpected and significant experience this morning. A prominent businessman from Elmira, N. Y., called on me and we took seats in the gallery while the rule on this bill was being discussed. I explained the situation in the House and he made the observation that he doubted if a peacetime draft is necessary. He then said:

"Coming into Washington this morning in the diner I had breakfast opposite a young man in uniform. We passed the time of day and I asked him about his service in the Army. He finally told me that he was in the recruiting service."

My friend from Elmira then asked the young man if he were on his way to Washington on a furlough.

"Oh, no," the young man replied. "My parents live there."

The gentleman then asked, "Do you get home often?"

"Oh," the soldier replied, "I'm there about 3 weeks out of each month."

"How do you do that?" my friend said he asked.

The soldier replied, "My quota is 12 men per month. I work hard and get my 12 men in 5 days or a week, and then I am able to spend the rest of the month in Washington."

Now, Mr. Chairman, that conversation was related to me in the gallery of this House not more than an hour ago by a very responsible businessman. I have no reason whatever to doubt his word.

I had previously received reports that the Army had placed quotas for recruiting in certain districts but my friend's casual story of his chance meeting with this recruiting sergeant was the first verification of such quotas that I have been able to obtain.

Mr. Chairman, certainly if quotas on recruiting are ordered by the armed services, their statements that they are unable to get sufficient recruits through voluntary enlistments, can be questioned by Members of Congress.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I do not want to take the gentleman's time but I do want to say that I have had protests from people in my district whose sons have been let out before the expiration of their enlistments. These boys did not want to get out. They volunteered, but the Army let them out.

Mr. SHAFER. There is no question but what that has happened. There is also no doubt but what the Army has raised the requirements up to 80 points, 10 points above what it should be; and there is no doubt that they have rejected enlistments of boys who have sought to enlist for less than 3 years.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I want to confirm his statement. I have had similar complaints from my district.

Mr. SHAFER. I thank the gentleman. I say the Army is taking this Congress for a bunch of suckers. There is no doubt about it.

We are getting the cart before the horse on this thing. A most inconsistent spectacle took place in the Rules Committee yesterday. Being chairman of Subcommittee No. 3 of the Armed Services Committee I am particularly interested in the strategic materials stock-piling program. This Congress knows that this program has not been carried out according to the intent of Congress in legislation that we passed 3 years ago. It was not until after I called the attention of the President on February 24 this year that the administration decided to reinstate some $400,000,000 for purchasing in that program. But yesterday during the Rules Committee session we had the Russell strategic materials bill before the committee and they refused to grant a rule on that bill despite the fact that it is vitally important that we have that legislation if we are going to have strategic materials with which to provide our armed forces with the proper arms and munitions. I repeat, this bill puts the cart before the horse.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal briefly with the purely military considerations which make necessary the enactment of selective service at this time—that is to say, the military judgments of professional soldiers whose primary function is to prepare measures for the adequate security of the United States and its interests in the world. While the condition of international relations is a factor which cannot be divorced from the determination of security requirements, military judgments as to these requirements are based generally upon the capabilities of possible enemies, without regard to their hypothetical intent.

The armed forces of the United States are charged with certain missions which they must be capable of carrying out if the country is to be assured of reasonable protection from foreign attack. These missions generally remain constant, but the requirements in weapons and manpower to carry them out tend to vary with the change in the capabilities of possible enemies. For example, there was a time in our country's history when the expanse of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans afforded us a splendid isolation. This geographical remoteness was a defense in itself and required for its complement only a negligible armed force. Today our geographical isolation is gone. We are vulnerable, under certain conditions, to direct attack from the air, and, accordingly, we must maintain a substantially larger armed force if we are to have reasonable security.

On the basis of present developments in weapons and the known strength of Soviet armed forces, the Chief of Staff of the Army has determined that he needs a minimum of 822,000 men to carry out the missions assigned the Army by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. How does he arrive at such a judgment? Let us look first at the Army missions.

First. As a result of the war, the Army is now burdened with the job of occupying Germany, Austria, Trieste, Japan, and Korea-a job which, to paraphrase General Bradley, has rendered the Army primarily an administrative rather than a military force. Over half the present armed strength of the Army is spread over this vast area, and yet these occupation forces number only 253,000 troops. The Chief of Staff believes that the occupation forces should be increased by 14,000 men; if this is done he will regard the size of the occupation forces as an acceptable risk, provided there is behind these thinly spread troops an emergency force in the United States, able to support them promptly in the event of internal trouble in the occupied areas.

Second. A second Army mission is to occupy, in the event of war, those strategle areas from which air attack could be launched against our industrial cities. General Bradley, in a convincing statement before the Armed Services Committee on April 14, said bluntly that there are now neutral areas in the world, accessible to possible enemies, from which aircraft could attack the continental

United States with decisive effect. I quote from his statement:

If we, as a result of weakness in land or naval strength, permit any enemy power to seize such bases as Alaska, Greenland, Iceland, Spitsbergen, or the Azores, then we shall have laid our industrial and population centers open to air attack. All the air force and antiaircraft artilleries of the world could not prevent it. Only troops actually occupying such bases could give us protection. Those troops are the Army.

What does this statement mean to the people of this country whose hope is to live out their lives in security and with whose welfare the Congress is directly charged? It means that if war should come, the American people will be forced to fight it on their own soil, unless there are sufficient ground forces available on the very first day of the conflict to seize those neutral areas from which an enemy could organize and launch attacks against our homeland.

I do not believe there is any doubt as to the decision the American people would make if, these facts were clear to them. I wonder if there can be any rational man who would prefer to fight a desperate, defensive action on the American continent—if war should unfortunately come—if it was in his power to prevent such a disastrous occurrence.

And I ask you to mark well this particular point: The only way to prevent attack upon this country, in the event of war, is to hold the bases from which the enemy can reach us with his aircraft and his airborne troops. Antiaircraft batteries and interceptor aircraft based in this country may be able to destroy a substantial portion of an attacking force, but they can never prevent destruction of our cities and devastation of our population.

Third. The Third Army mission is to seize overseas areas of vital importance to the counteroffensive efforts of our Air Force, in the event of war. Although a Senator from Ohio has seen fit to believe that air power alone is a panacea for national security-and I regret to say there are some Members of the House who hold the same misguided view-the best military judgment is that the American Air Force, regardless of its size, could not operate effectively against an enemy in Asia or Europe from bases in the continental United States. It would be necessary to obtain bases much nearer the target areasbases which would most certainly have to be seized and held by American ground troops, and supported and supplied by the American Navy. Obviously, this means that trained combat troops must be available in adequate numbers, or our Air Force will be virtually limited to the defense of the Western Hemisphere in any conflict that may arise within the foreseeable future. The day of intercontinental warfare is many years away.

Fourth. The final mission of the Army—and perhaps the most easily understood—is to protect the continental United States; to repel attacks against it, and to protect its population against bombing and sabotage.

The Army thus has four basic missions in addition to the burden of occupation: First, to support the occupation; second, to be ready to occupy neutral areas from which an enemy could launch air attacks against us; third, to seize advance bases for the Air Force in the event of war; and fourth, to protect the continental United States. These are staggering tasks. All of them, with the exception of the last, are tasks peculiar to the Army which only the Army can carry out.

How many combat troops do we now have in this country, ready, mobile, and uncommitted to other tasks? We have 54,000—two and one-third divisions, no one of which is up to full strength.

I ask you quite frankly whether any sensible man can possibly consider this tiny force to be adequate to carry out the assigned missions of the Army. I ask you whether any sensible man would suggest eliminating one or all of these missions on grounds that it is unnecessary to the national security.

Fifty-four thousand men do not go very far when they are required simultaneously to support occupation forces overseas, to protect the vast land area of the continental United States, to prevent enemy seizure of air bases within range of the United States, and to spearhead the advance of the Air Force in the event of war. It should be obvious to everyone that 54,000 men would scarcely be adequate to carry out one of the above missions. To carry out more than one would spread such a force impossibly thin.

I submit there is no doubt of the compelling need to augment at once the effective combat strength of the Ground Forces.

The Andrews bill will provide the Army with only moderate increases. It will increase the combat strength within the continental United States from 54,000 to 223,000. Translated into units, this will mean five full strength divisions to comprise the emergency force, supplemented by six fully equipped and trained divisions composed of National Guard and Reserve troops. It should be understood that these Reserve divisions will not comprise a standing force, but rather a reserve force in being.

serve force in being.

The Andrews bill will not provide, then, an overwhelming force. It will provide a minimal strength below which we dare not go without seriously jeopardizing the national security. Even then the Ground Forces will be, as General Bradley has said, "essentially a stopgap, one-shot Army, a plug in the dike until we could rally sufficient and effective reserves."

The Air Force and the Navy have equally vital missions, for which they must possess the capability to carry out, if the country is to be secure. Maximum security can be achieved only through the maintenance of carefully balanced land, sea, and air forces trained to operate as a team. No one military service can safeguard the country alone in this day of three dimensional warfare.

Congress has already taken steps to see that the Air Force shall be capable of carrying out its essential missions: First, to wage successful strategic air warfare; second, to gain and maintain general air supremacy; third, to control vital air areas

The Navy is already capable of maintaining general sea supremacy and of controlling vital sea areas. It has, however, direct and specific need of selectiveservice legislation, if it is to provide sufficient naval forces for the conduct of joint amphibious operations in support of 70 air groups. Make no mistake about it, a 70-group air force, if it is to be effective, must be adequately supported and supplied by naval vessels and naval escorts, as well as by Army Ground Forces. Although there is no question that the Air Force has become the most important element of military strength, nevertheless an air force remains the most immobile and ineffective element if it is inadequately supported.

I am prepared to hear the time-worn arguments of those who oppose this bill. I do not believe they will be illogical enough to attack the validity of the missions assigned the several services, nor the need to increase the combat strength of each of them; but I assume they will insist—as they did repeatedly in 1940—that the armed forces can achieve the required increases by voluntary means alone. They cannot alone. They cannot.

In the light of present circumstances, the recruiting record of the armed forces since the termination of hostilities is a very impressive one. In a period of nominal peace, when the Nation has just concluded an exhausting war, when we are enjoying an unprecedented level of employment, the armed forces have recruited and maintained a voluntary force of over 1,300,000 men—the largest voluntary force in the history of this or any other nation. This is factual.

The circumstances in which we now find ourselves require, however, that we further increase the strength of our standing forces. The required increases cannot be achieved by voluntary means alone, except in the Air Force. It is evident that the top limits attainable through voluntary recruitment have already been reached in the Army, and that although the Navy can enlist additional men, it cannot hope to reach the level of strength provided in the Andrews bill without the aid of selective-service legislation.

The missions assigned the armed forces are valid; the judgments of our trained professional officers, as to the manpower required to carry out these missions, are unquestionably proper in the light of the present world situation.

The United States has emerged from the recent war as the most powerful and influential nation in the world. It is now clear that if the world is to achieve a new equilibrium the United States must exercise the full measure of its leadership, and must accept the full responsibility that is the obligation of greater power.

The United States must do these things in its own interest, if for no other reason, for if leadership is not exercised, it is always lost; and if we do not strive, commensurate with our immense influence, to achieve the kind of world in which we hope to live, then there is no doubt that others will shape the world according to concepts entirely alien to our own.

The American people have accepted this great challenge to their leadership, which has been unwittingly thrust upon them as the result of victory in the recent war.

If the voice of the United States is to be clear and resonant in world councils, then it must be backed by strength, for weakness cannot negotiate; it can only beg.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Buffett].

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, in the short space of 5 minutes it would be impossible for me to adequately express my opposition to peacetime conscription.

Accordingly, these remarks will be brief and, when they appear in the RECORD, they will include additional material.

In this proposal the House is debating a scheme to regiment the youth of America. Yet this House has not had the need of this scheme honestly explained to it.

Why do I say that?

Because, despite all the bombast about the world situation, our so-called commitments abroad, the threat of "aggressor nations," and so forth, no Member of Congress can tell the House or his people what the present national defense program embraces.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that. No

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that. No Member of this House can tell any prospective draftee what our military and foreign policy is—in plain, understandable English.

Just as during the war, Members of Congress could not tell what we were fighting for except perhaps to mumble about the four freedoms and the Atlantic Charter—now both in the waste-basket, neither can a Member of Congress tell what our present military policy includes—whether we are trying to dominate the non-Russian world, prop up the British Empire, or what. No one can answer. Why not?

AMERICANS, LIKE RUSSIANS, KEPT IN DARK

If this bill is passed, the House will be shoving down the throats of the American people the despotic concept of—

> Theirs not to reason why; Theirs but to do and die.

More than a month ago I asked Secretary Forrestal what our defensive boundaries are. I received a reply that can mean anything you choose to make of it.

Once the need for larger manpower is determined, then it should be shown that every intelligent method of enlarging the forces by volunteer methods has failed. That has not been done.

Increased pay, 1-year enlistments, the morale-building proposals of the Doolittle report, and changes in the courtmartial system—all of these have been given what amounts to the run-around.

H. R. 6401 would establish in America, without the people having any genuine voice in the decision, the totalitarian concept that the state owns the individual.

Such a lesser abridgment of liberty as the prohibition amendment, even after being taken to the people, failed because popular support evaporated.

This measure would cause a steady deterioration in the morale of the American people to the point of disaster.

This measure would declare to the world that Hitler was right—that the threat of communism externally justified militarism and regimentation at home.

Congress would be surrendering to the militarism that it sent 400,000 American boys to die fighting against—thereby outlawing the Declaration of Independence concept that man is endowed with certain inalienable rights.

(a) Having made this surrender of human liberty, Congress can no longer effectively defend the rights of the people from aggrandizement by the state. You cannot enslave youth and then defend lesser individual right.

CONSCRIPTION MAKES ERP A CERTAIN FLOP

Passage of this bill would practically guarantee that ERP will be operation rat hole. It will be a signal to shrewd people everywhere that United States hostilities with Russia are to be expected.

That prospect would cause the people of Europe and Asia to abandon most plans for private domestic investment. No sane person makes permanent investments on a prospective battlefield.

Passage of this bill would play right into Stalin's hands.

(a) It would imitate the Communists by adopting the principle of article 132 of the Russian Constitution—peacetime conscription.

(b) It would multiply the tensions among our own people. It would enable the Communists to truthfully proclaim that our talk about the dignity of man and freedom was rotten hypocrisy.

You cannot send a conscript, who has been deprived of freedom, to Germany to teach the German people about the blessings of freedom.

HYSTERIA FANNED HERE IN HITLER FASHION

This bill seems to be the product of carefully created hysteria designed to stampede Congress into full-blown milttarism

(a) Great Britain is spending only 23 percent of its budget on military costs whereas we are about to spend at least 37 percent. That amount is almost 60 percent larger than Britain.

(b) Canada has no draft and is spending only $20 per capita on defense, against over $100 per capita here.

(c) Many people have swallowed the propaganda that our 1948 military position is comparable with 1938. They have accepted the deliberate untruth that our defense is a hollow shell. Nothing could be further from the truth.

First. Our military expenditures for the fiscal year 1949 will be around $15,000,000,000. The enormity of this amount is shown by the fact that in the 18 years ended July 1, 1939, our total military expenditures were just over $15,000,000,000.

Second. In 1939 Army ammunition on hand was nil. Today it is 8,500,000 tons.

In 1939 Army matériel on hand was nil. Today it is 9,000,000 tons.

Third. Our Navy today is larger than all the rest of the world put together.

Fourth. We have the atomic bomb. We have powerful bases, especially air, almost around the world.

(d) Continued hysteria and surrender to the militarists would repeat France's fatal stupidity of the twenties when her surrender to the militarists weakened her civilian economy so that it collapsed when the test came.

IS CONGRESS BECOMING SUBSERVIENT TO

H. R. 6401 may move Congress decisively into the realm of impotence in the direction of national affairs. The military already has the fearful power inherent in the spending of close to $15,000,000,000 annually.

The additional coercive powers surrendered to the military by this bill can make the civilian branch of the Government completely subservient to the military. Already there is much evidence to indicate that Army spending and interference in civil government approaches the point of domination.

For 160 years a youth born in America has been assured at birth of opportunity and freedom unsurpassed on this planet.

This measure would destroy that heritage and reduce an American boy to a second-rate degree of freedom compared with the youth of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and other lands.

Congress should not make such a surrender of liberty on the basis of 10-day hearings.

AN ECONOMIC PEARL HARBOR IS PARAMOUNT DANGER

Passage of this measure would accelerate the wholesale Government spending that will eventually cause run-away inflation. That is made to order for our enemies. You cannot achieve economy in public spending in an America that is conscripting its young men. The Communists could win their aim of world control by avoiding open hostilities.

Once run-away inflation occurs here, the military advantages we have today will evaporate.

Mr. Chairman, the most plausible excuse for this bill is, to quote its advocates, "to show Russia that we mean business."

Let us examine this claim realistically. Do you remember 2 years ago when Byrnes started "talking tough" to Russia? What did that accomplish?

Or do you remember Marshall's claim that we would erect a dollar curtain that would halt Russia? Already that claim, used to put over the Marshall plan, has been exploded by Marshall himself in demanding the draft.

BILL PROMOTES RUSSIAN AIMS

Mr. Chairman, instead of stopping the Russian menace, the so-called show of force embraced in the draft bill actually promotes the Soviet objective.

That objective today, as always, is an economic Pearl Harbor in America.

Mr. Chairman, the record proves that this administration does not comprehend the real tactics of Russian expansion.

Their aggression is based upon inducing America to become more and more economically overextended—without a let-up. Thus far that policy has worked perfectly—for Russia.

By cleverly opposing our economic blood-letting scheme, the Communists may have promoted their adoption. They have given us a long rope, which the administration has grabbed enthusiastically. This bill would wrap that rope around our neck.

This bill would constitute an unsurpassed grant of power to an administration with an unbroken record of bungling in our foreign and domestic affairs. For Congress, with full knowledge of this record of failure to make this surrender seems to approach the irresponsible. That, I believe, is the kindest appraisal you can make of such action.

HAS HOUSE LOST FAITH IN FREEDOM?

In meeting the challenge of the times we have three roads open to us. One is appeasement—finally the leadership that now demands conscription claims to have abandoned that stupid policy.

Now that same leadership demands an equally stupid course, the Hitler road of militarism, regimentation, and economic collapse at home.

The third course open to us is to remain free and strong, to keep the lights of liberty burning on this Western shore as an inspiration and example to those struggling for liberty elsewhere.

Extinguish liberty here by conscription, Mr. Chairman, and the powerhouse that sends out the current of liberty to other lands will slowly or quickly atrophy. That is the unbroken record of history.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the chairman of the Committee on the Armed Services for affording me an opportunity to speak on this legislation about which I feel most keenly. During my short tenure in Congress I have heard many men in the well of this House praise the Air Force and say that our national defense, our national security, is well provided for by our possession of the atomic bomb and in our scientific warfare. It so happened that in World War II I served as an infantry officer, a doughboy, with that grand old Pennsylvania Division, the Twenty-eighth National Guard Division. I recall at that time there were a lot of other men that were serving in the infantry, approximately 4,000,000 carrying rifles; not a very glamorous branch of the service. I assume that those men, too, played a part in winning the victory in World War II as well as our fine Air Corps.

I recall the battle of St. Lo. I saw the Eighth Air Force come over and destroyed St. Lo. France, but there were several divisions waiting at the edge of the town and we had a terrible battle to secure that city that the Air Force had destroyed.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the proponents of a strong Air Force, and I agree with them it is necessary to our national defense, and it is perhaps the more glamorous way and the easiest way to have national security. However, I am inclined to believe that we are still going to need men on the ground. All the arguments I have heard today deserve considerable merit. Certainly we need to have a stock pile of strategic materials.

We need our strong Air Force, we need our strong Navy, but we are still going to have the man-a trained man-with the rifle in case of any eventuality that we might encounter. At the present time we do not have aircraft that can leave the continental United States on a military mission and travel to any potential enemy and return. How are we going to secure that base for our aircraft to take off from? I believe it was mentioned a while ago that it is going to be necessary for somebody to seize and secure those bases. That can be done only by trained ground troops. After sites have been secured it is necessary then to protect these installations, and that only can be done by trained ground troops. Therefore, despite our proposed 70-group air force, I am firmly convinced that our strength lies in properly trained ground troops. The history of the United States military operations has been that our strength lies not in our professional Army but, rather, in citizen soldiers, who are trained for any emergency. In the past wars we have had sufficient time to train citizen soldiers from the time war was declared until actual operations began. We have been fortunate enough to have allies who bore the brunt of initial attacks. However, we have no assurance we can plan on this condition ever existing again.

As I have said, I believe trained manpower is necessary for a balanced defense set-up. However, I am reluctant to sup-port this draft legislation for the reason that a few men between the ages of 19 and 25 will be selected to go into the armed forces, while other men in the same age group will not have to assume that responsibility. The Member who supports this legislation should realize that he is actually voting for legislation that drafts the poor boy, the boy whose parents do not have influence, politically or otherwise. They are the boys who will be called upon to protect all of us. I am personally ashamed and embarrassed by this type of program. I believe each of us owe many obligations to our country. We brag about the equal opportunities that this country affords to each of us. Why is it not logical for us to equally share our responsibilities-and one of the greatest responsibilities is to provide for our national security. We all pay taxes—that is a responsibility each of us as citizens owe. So training to preserve our country should be shared on an equal basis. It is a little ironical when just a few years ago men were called into the armed services to save this great Nation of ours. It does not seem unjust to me that we should ask the present generation to preserve that which many of us spent 5 years to save.

Personally, I have advocated a universal-military-training program for some time. If that had been adopted there would be no need for us to be considering the draft today. You would have your trained citizen Reserve and your profes-

My deepest condolences go to the members of the selective-service boards who have to make the decision as to what boy will be selected of his community to assume the responsibility for everyone in that community. The pressure on those men will be tremendous.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Powell].

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, on the threshold of this historic debate of the peacetime Selective Service Act of 1948 may I take this opportunity before we have engaged in it, before we have actually entered into the arena, to serve notice that I will not tolerate any gentleman's agreement in respect to the civil-rights amendments which I am going to offer.

It has been indicated before in this Eightieth Congress by Representatives on both sides that there have been gentlemen's agreements concerning the question of civil rights. The Congressional Record of June 7 bears printed proof that such an agreement was made.

I am demanding that such a momentous question as peacetime military conscription shall not in any way be gagged by any gentleman's agreement. I am assuming the leadership of this fight to bring out the Selective Service Act which, at least, will have some of the decencies of our rapidly being jeopardized as a democracy.

We took our time in debating the Marshall plan, aid for Europe. Do we hold the American plan so cheaply that we are going to gag full discussion, gag a full, free, and complete discussion? Well, I am not going to tolerate it. The leadership of this House wants to get out by this coming Saturday. There is a lot of important legislation which must be finished by then. I intend to ask for full and complete discussion under the 5-minute rule of all of the amendments presented by all Members of this House, whether on the question of civil rights or not. I have prepared 31, all of which will not be offered by me. Some are going to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS], by the gentle-woman from California [Mrs. Douglas], by our colleagues the gentlemen from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO and Mr. ISACSON], and others. Let us stay in sesnight, if necessary. to be blunt and state that if there is any attempt to limit the time in a way that will prevent any opponent or proponent from discussing each amendment to the fullest, then I propose to object to every unanimous-consent request for the balance of this week, to demand an engrossed copy, to ask for quorum calls. May I emphatically state that I do not mind an honest vote on each amendment, in other words, I am not making this statement from the basis that I demand that the amendments be passed, which would be thoroughly undemocratic, I am making this statement from the basis that I demand that full time be allowed which is consonant with the highest principles of democracy.

Under time which I am sure will be granted to me under the 5-minute rule, I will more thoroughly discuss my opposition to various items in the peacetime draft.

In the first place, I am opposed to this draft as a Christian. All of my life I have believed in the power of nonviolence. All of my life I have been a pacifist. I never changed that position until Pearl Harbor. I have never seen wars solve any solution—any problem.

JESUS-HIGHEST AUTHORITY

In the second place, I am against this as an American citizen. I am against the staggering, needless cost. I am against the doing away with rule by majority and substituting wars that destroy.

Third, I am against this bill as a human being because it will destroy our educational system, it will completely disrupt and corrupt family life, it will jeopardize the moral life of the cream of our manhood. Europe has tried it and failed. And I prophesy that if it is passed, America will be reduced to the second-class status of western Europe.

I am against this bill in the fourth place because a vast majority of specialists who have come before the Armed Services Committee or who have been quoted in the public press, including our military leadership, did not state a necessity.

THE PROPONENTS OF A DRAFT DO NOT PLAN TO MAKE IT TEMPORARY

Read the history of how the militarists twisted our wartime selective-service laws to meet their own ends. This could be obtained from the National Council Against Conscription at 1013 Eighteenth Street NW., Washington. A temporary draft of 19- to 25-year-olds could easily become permanent peacetime conscription and total regimentation.

On April 12, when Secretary Forrestal testified before the House Armed Services Committee the following conversation occurred:

Congressman Hébert. I understood you to say that selective service is merely a temporary measure?

Secretary FORRESTAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HÉBERT. Which will be on the books so long as you do not have UMT; is that correct? Secretary FORRESTAL. Yes, sir; that is right.

Mr. Hébert. Then it will be as temporary as some of those buildings on Constitution Avenue which were erected during World War I which are still there—if we do not have universal military training?

Secretary FORRESTAL. That is my opinion. (House Armed Services Committee hearings, p. 6114.)

Our opposition to peacetime conscription is based upon our studied conviction that:

First. The draft is not necessary. This is documented on the accompanying sheet. Secretary Symington told the House Armed Services Committee:

At one time from the standpoint of pilots that have served we had some 80,000 applications for 6,000 jobs. (April 13, House Armed Services Committee hearings, p. 6142.)

Second. It could be a first step toward a war. Our scientists say that no one could hope to win in a major war. Third. The draft for military service could be followed by drafts or regimentation of labor, capital, industry, and loss of our democracy in America.

Fourth. It is contrary to the American way of life. Read the testimony of one of America's best-loved and leading historians, Dr. Charles A. Beard, pages 1053-1057 of the Senate Armed Services Committee hearings. This is a solemn warning that all should heed.

Even the most ardent protagonists of the draft admit that the present world situation is not such as warrants emergency measures. They think of peacetime conscription as a permanent change from our American way of life. Colonel Taylor, of the American Legion, ardently desires UMT and the draft. He testified to the House committee that this is not an emergency when he said:

When the emergency comes you are going to take them all in anyway. (House Armed Services Committee hearings, p. 6560.)

Some of the proponents of the draft do not now recommend regimentation of industry. If the international situation warranted emergency measures they should not call for conscription of industry as well as of young men. Many Americans do not realize that those measures would follow the adoption of the draft program. Note carefully the testimony of Secretary of Defense Forrestal on April 12 to the House committee in response to questioning by Mr. VINSON, House Armed Services Committee hearings, pages 6099–6100.

It is very unwise to even consider such a revolutionary change withing thinking of the cost. The effect of this measure upon our national economy could be disastrous. A $21,000,000,000 defense budget could break our American economy. These figures are found on page 6600, House Armed Services Committee hearings.

It appears that a deliberate attempt has been made to justify the demands of selective service by juggling figures. Study the figures presented in the Congressional Record of May 4, 1948, on pages 5239-5240.

The draft is absolutely unnecessary to bring our forces up to the authorized strength. Read the testimony of Dr. Alonzo F. Meyers to the House Armed Services Committee on pages 6464-6474 in House Armed Services Committee hearings. Read also the minority report on this question.

We feel that an honest effort should be made to make our American voluntary system of recruiting work. The proposal of Chairman Allen of the House Rules Committee that the men who serve should receive the extra benefits has merit we feel. From July 1, 1946, to March 31, 1948, selective service cost $1,155 per man drafted. That money could be given to boys as an inducement for voluntary enlistment.

Any form of even temporary draft legislation would be a step in the direction of permanent peacetime regimentation for military purposes—House Armed Services Committee hearings, page 6114.

Note: The majority of the protagonists of UMT and/or a temporary draft have favored peacetime conscription since World War I.

The churches of America have stated repeatedly their opposition to UMT and/or peacetime regimentation for military purposes—see House Armed Services Committee hearings, pages 6295—6305.

The protagonists of peacetime conscription argue that war is inevitable—Senate Armed Services Committee hearings page 1012. Read the statements of our atomic scientists who warn us that we dare not have another war. The article by William T. Holliday in the January 1948 Reader's Digest points this

The propaganda to regiment America with UMT has been carried on improperly and illegally by public tax money according to the findings of the House Committee on Expenditures. A copy of this report can be obtained from the gentleman from Indiana, Hon. Forest A. Harness.

The effort to promote peacetime regimentation for a military dictatorship upon the American Nation has been promoted by deliberate lies and double talk. For example, former Justice Owen J. Roberts has charged that the "Communists are the solid core of opposition to UMT." Justice Roberts knows that the Christian people who really believe in American democracy are firmly opposed to UMT, the draft, and all unnecessary peacetime regimentation. Read the top paragraph on page 1001 of Senate Armed Services Committee hearings.

On May 4, the gentleman from Illinois, Representative Leo Allen, chairman of the Rules Committee, came out with a bill (H. R. 6444) which is a sincere attempt to get away from the un-American conscription features of our militaristic administration. It calls for lowering the Army general classification test grade from 80 to 70. It was 59 during the war. It would give bonuses of $1,000 or $1,500 for men enlisting for 2 and 3 years respectively after March 31, 1947, or give them the benefits of the GI bill for school.

President Truman called Mr. Allen's proposal asinine. At a press conference Mr. Truman said that Mr. Allen's suggestion was the most asinine thing he had heard yet. Note: When sound reasoning fails we call names. Remember that selective service spent $22,878,000 from July 1, 1946, until March 31, 1947, in order to draft 19,797 men at an average cost of $1,155 per man.

Sixty-four dollar question: Is it asinine to give $1,000 to the boy who enlists instead of to generals, colonels, and draft-board personnel who conscript the boy for military service against his will?

Every Congressman should ponder this question in light of our tradition of a peacetime voluntary Army.

How large an Army do we need? On January 6, 1948, President Truman in his budget message recommended an Army strength for the fiscal year 1949 of 560,000 men. At the Senate hearings on March 18, 1948, it was revealed that as of March 1, 1948, our Army had 542,-

000 men. That is 18,000 short of the budgeted strength of the Army. General Hershey told the House Armed Services Committee that Selective Service required 25,000 paid personnel and 185,000 volunteer personnel during the war. It is obvious that it would be unwise to set up expensive selective-service machinery and hire thousands of men to draft 18,000 men.

In order to justify a draft the figures have changed rapidly.

On March 25, 1948, Secretary of Defense Forrestal proposed an Army of 782,000 men. On April 14, 1948, the Joint Chiefs of Staff recommended an Army of 837,000 men. On April 15, 1948, General Bradley recommended an Army of 822,000 men plus 15,000 if a 70-group air force passes, plus 95,000 men if UMT passes—totaling 932,000 men. On April 21, 1948, the Secretary of Defense suggested that with a 66-group air force we should have an Army of 790,000 men. The above figures are all documented in the May 4, 1948, Congressional Record on pages 5239-5240.

Ike's tricky memory: When General Eisenhower was asked whether a lowering of the AGCT grade from 80 to 70 would make SS or UMT unnecessary, he replied:

My memory is sometimes tricky, but I thought I had directed, before I left as Chief of Staff, to drop, for the Ground Forces at least, the figure back to 70, and I thought there is where it was. (Senate Armed Services Committee hearings on UMT, p. 1001.)

Remember, on March 18, Senator Byrd asked Secretary of Defense Forrestal how they planned to run the draft. Secretary Forrestal said:

I would prefer to not get into a detailed analysis, because I have not approved a plan nor have I thought that plan through in detail that I think would satisfy your question, and I would rather not try to speculate upon the answers. (Senate Armed Services Committee hearings, p. 43.)

The big question: When did our Secretary of Defense first hear of the Truman draft proposal? A week later he had plans.

The Air Force does not need it. Secretary of Air Symington told the House Armed Services Committee on April 13:

We do not feel that selective service is necessary in order to get the people * * * for the Air Force.

General Spaatz added:

I have no doubt in my mind but what the Air Force will get sufficient recruits to maintain the Air Force proper on a voluntary enlistment basis.

The Navy does not need selective service. Secretary of Navy Sullivan told the House Armed Services Committee on April 13:

We believe the way our enlistments have been running we probably will be able to do it without selective service.

Admiral Denfeld, in reply to a question as to whether the Navy could get its strength without a draft, said:

I think you could get it if the present situation continues.

The Army has not made a case for selective service. Secretary Royall told the Senate Armed Services Committee on March 25 that war is not imminent. The Italian elections went off smoothly without selective service.

On March 18—after the President's appeal for selective service—Secretary Forrestal told the Senate Armed Services Committee "the authorized strength of the Army is 670,000, and they have a current strength of 560,000," page 37 in Senate Armed Services Committee hearings.

On pages 636 and 640 of the President's budget for 1948 we find the strength recommended for the Army is 560,000. In other words, if Secretary Forrestal's figures which he gave in his testimony were correct, the Army has its strength as provided by the President's budget. On March 25 Secretary Royall testified—Senate Armed Services Committee hearings, page 343:

At present, as of March 1, we have 542,000 in the Army.

If Secretary Forrestal was correct on March 18, there was no deficit in the budgeted strength of the Army. If Secretary Royall was correct we were short only 18,000 men, which is a poor excuse for a very expensive and undemocratic draft in peacetime. Also the country should realize with what ease mistakes are made in figures in places of high responsibility.

Are the Reserves being used? Read April 10 Collier's, Does the Army Want the Reserves? On April 21, page 6536 in House Armed Services Committee hearings—before the House Armed Services Committee, General Evans, of the Reserve Officers Association, testified:

It is true we have 600,000 on paper; but they have not been contacted. They have not been put into units. They have not been given any training.

He pleaded:

All I am urging and begging and what I have been doing for 3 years is to have some-body do something with what we now have.

Does the world situation necessitate selective service now? General Clay in Germany says the crisis is "a political one and not a military one"—New York Times, March 26, 1948. Secretary Royall told the Senate Armed Services Committee on March 25 that "war is not imminent." Secretary Forrestal on April 26 told a Senate committee:

I don't want to give the impression that we think war is near. But I do believe we are in a state of tension that may last for many years.

He explained that if he had felt war was likely he would have asked for twenty-five to fifty billions instead of the requested appropriation.

In thus stating its case, the Army should have pointed out that rapid mobilization really would have to be instantaneous mobilization to be worth anything. The testimony of the atom scientists is clear that if there is another war there will not be time for mobilization . For example, Dr. Morris Perlman, according to the Washington Times-Herald of October 28, 1945, told his fellow scientists that "victory for an aggressor nation can be assured in a few terrible hours in an atom war of the future." In support of this is the statement of a former Lockheed executive, Harry E. Stowe of Los Angeles, who, as assistant to the president of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America, said on June 8, 1945:

The future aggressor's aim would be total destruction of his victim in the first 24 hours of hostilities.

Admiral Halsey confirms the statements of General MacArthur, the atom scientists, and others, that if there is another war it will be over in a very short time. Halsey is reported in an October 29, 1945, UP dispatch from St. Louis as having said at a Navy Day Victory War Loan Rally that the next war probably will not last 6 months and that when the term "duration and 6 months" is applied to future struggles the 6 months are likely to be considerably longer than the duration.

Contrast these statements with General Marshall's in his last biennial report that it would take a year fully to muster those who have had their peacetime training and have returned to civilian life. In line with General Marshall's comment is the testimony of Admiral King on November 16, 1945, before the House Military Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Iowa, Representative Martin asked: "The principal value of your peacetime training would be in the early weeks of the emergency."

Admiral King replied: "I think, Mr. Martin, it would be rather a matter of months than weeks."

Secretary of War Patterson also spoke of the difficulties of mobilization when at a press conference in San Francisco, according to the September 3 Oakland (Calif.) Tribune, he said:

It would take 6 months to mobilize the strength we had a year ago.

Patterson was speaking of boys who had a lot of military service and who would be mobilized by trained and experienced draft-board personnel.

Moreover, boys trained under the Army plan would, after mobilization, need to be retrained before they could be used. General Palmer in the August 1944 Reserve Officer wrote:

Every able-bodied young American should be trained to fight for his country if a war should come within 3 or 4 years after he completes his training.

In other words, a boy trained at the age of 18 will be useless after he is 21 or 22 unless he is trained all over again. General Eisenhower goes further to indicate that without any 3- or 4-year time limit all will have to be retrained in the event of war. He said in June 1945 to the House Committee on Postwar Military Policy:

Physical training will always have to be repeated after the war starts, but takes the least time. Psychological indoctrination * * * requires the longest time but fortunately it is never completely forgotten.

Furthermore, those who would have had their training and gone back into civilian life would not be brought back into the Army as members of teams as the War Department plan proposes. Once the training is over the teams would be broken up and men would be drafted and placed in the Army according to General Marshall's statement in his biennial report "just as men are now called by a committee of local neighbors in an order of priority." The Army has never proposed any other plan than selective service, which automatically breaks up teams. Many men trained in teams will become indispensable in industry and will never be called in the event of war.

Nor would the compulsory-training proposal provide "individual specialists" as the War Department plan claims. Any training in the technical schools and colleges would be gotten by men in civilian status as readily as if they wore uniforms while attending college. Other than such training there is no real likelihood of specialists developing. Certainly they will not develop in the 6 months the Army suggests. Many military leaders have pointed out that it takes a year or more for ordinary training, to say nothing of specialist training.

For example, General Chennault, according to the October 29, 1945, Washington Post, called for 18 months' training, saying:

It takes 12 months alone to teach men to operate modern weapons. The man should also perform some field service if the training is to be of any benefit.

Admiral King is quoted in the October 28, 1945, Washington Star as saying that from the naval point of view, 1 year's training would probably not be enough. He thought it would require 15 to 18 months.

The Army completely omits reference to the problems involved in mobilization in the event of atomic war. We have the testimony of the scientists that any aggressor could in a few hours time destroy New York, Chicago, Detroit, Pittsburgh, and other large cities, killing 40,000,000 people, almost a third of our population. No mobilization set-up would be possible before America could be completely destroyed. In the initial attack railroad centers, transportation devices. ships and docks, selective-service headquarters, trained officers and men-all necessary for mobilization-would be wiped out. In such an event, how would the Army carry out its purpose of mobilization rapidly in an emergency?

Even if it were possible to mobilize the peacetime conscripts, they could not be used for the invasion of enemy lands or to prevent further atomic attack. Commodore H. S. Schade, formerly chief of the United States naval technical mission in Europe, told a Senate subcommittee—page 271, Senate hearings on Senate Resolution 107—that if Germany had had enough atom bombs, the Allied landings on Normandy's beachhead would presumably have been unsuccessful. Gen. Henry A. Arnold, the commander of Army Air Forces, in reply to the question, "Can the United States be invaded by a water-borne armed force in the face of planes with atomic bombs?" said, "Who would want to invade by water if they had the atomic bomb?"—Capitol Gist, volume 8, No. 4.

As a result of circumstances such as these, Charles Bolté, chairman of the American Veterans Committee, wrote in the September 29, 1945, Nation:

A conscript army could hardly be assembled, and, if assembled, would hardly find a place where it could fight to any good purpose—I hasten to withdraw my argument in favor of universal military training.

The second major purpose the Army gives for compulsory training is—

The readiness of the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Organized Reserve Corps can be maintained at the highest level during peacetime due to prior intensive training of enlistees.

Unless the War Department assumes that every young man who has had compulsory training will or must later serve for a period in the Army, the Guard, or the Organized Reserves, why not on a voluntary basis give prior training only to those who will serve in one of these military organizations. There is no point in forcing everyone into the same mold so that the few who enlist in military service may have prior training.

There is also an undefined element in the term "maintained at the highest level." Will the highest level mean anything in the event of actual war, or will further training be required? Ranson Baldwin, Annapolis-trained military analyst of the New York Times, said in that paper on December 1, 1946:

No part-time soldier, such as the National Guard man, can ever become, even with the best will in the world, ready for service anywhere in the world on M-day.

On October 23, 1946, Baldwin wrote:

Six months of training, even though followed by part-time training in the Guard or Reserve components, is too short to make an efficient soldier.

The fifth purpose of the Army is to train men who would be able to defend and assist in the community in the event of local disasters resulting from initial enemy action which may be expected in the early stages of a war of the future.

The Army does not suggest how it will through military training prepare boys after they have returned to civilian status, to defend local comunities from atomic bombs. In an article, There Is No Defense Against Atomic Bombs, W. A. Higginbotham, chairman of the Federation of American Scientists, writes in the November 3, 1946, New York Times of the difficulties which the defenders of London and Antwerp faced against ordinary rockets.

You could not entrust to boys of a year's training such defense and no other defense even approaches realism. Not only would no real defense be possible, but the Army has not indicated how it would train disaster units. No scheme was worked out at Bikini except to keep men out of the areas of radioactivity.

Real disaster training should be civilian, not military, and it should include first aid, mechanical, fire fighting, and other skills which do not require generals and colonels for instructors.

General Eisenhower himself, perhaps inadvertently, revealed the Army's real uncertainty and indecision when on September 28 from Frankfurt-on-the-Main, Germany, he replied to a question from a United Press correspondent:

What the atom bomb is going to mean to us is a matter over which we study and sweat blood every day. I think there is no one who can say what this means to the numbers and equipments of armies.

I am against this bill in the fifth place as a lover of pure democracy. This bill is a rape of democracy. The Mundt-Nixon bill began it and this bill will finish it. The Republican-dominated Congress will not be kissing democracy good-by. It is a military coup. It is a bloodless revolution on the part of brass hats

And lastly, I am against this bill not because I am a Negro but because I know that until this Nation of ours faces the Negro problem squarely and stops preaching democracy for Europe and denying it in America, we are going to have trouble and plenty of it because no nation in this world is going to view us with any respect. The greatest propaganda used in the Pacific and in Europe during wartime by the Nazi-Fascist-Jap military axis was the way American people were treating Negro people.

Now do not think for a minute that this speech is demogogic politics because it is not. Let no one bring out the bugaboo of communism either unless you want to charge the members of the President's commission on peacetime conscription as being Communists, unless you want to charge the Federal Council of Churches, unless you want to charge the Protestant churches of the State of Indiana, where our majority leader comes from, as being Communists. Let no one bring up the issue of partisanship because I am placing the blame squarely where it belongs. If this bill is passed, it will be the fault of the Republicans. And I further charge that if the President of the United States signs this bill in its present shape, he will be branding himself as a two-faced liar talking civil rights out of one corner of his mouth and refusing to practice them out of the other corner.

As I said before, I intend to go through all of these items very carefully under the 5-minute rule, and as we debate through the week on this subject, that is if the time is given me. And if not, I intend to resort to every parliamentary trick to keep this House in session.

I make no apology for what I have said, will say, or plan to do. There is a higher authority than this House of Representatives, even higher than our Supreme Court, yes the Constitution and the Bill of Rights included, that authority since the foundation of the earth, has laid down the inexorable, indisputable law that there is none and therefore shall be no difference between the races of people, Finally, let no one say that these amendments which I propose to offer are not germane.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, 4 minutes is a very short time in which to try to compress some 35 years of interest in this particular subject. Anticipating that, I put my speech in the Record. It appears in the Appendix of today's Record at page 3864. I could not possibly cover that speech in 4 minutes' time, so I will discuss some of the points a little further. I wish to thank the gentleman from New York for the opportunity to speak in opposition to this bill.

I believe I am the only retired Regular Army officer in the House. I claim no military prowess because of that, because I served my last duty 25 years ago. finished my final service in October 1923. as assistant professor of military science and tactics at the University of Iowa. taught military policy. I thought I had worked out a policy that would bring us national defense. Throughout my entire life I have opposed anything drifting toward militarism. I do not confuse militarism with defense. I believe I know enough about this subject to draw a clear line of demarcation between them. I have given more time in Congress to the matter of adequate equipment of our armed forces than any other one subject. I was on the conference committee between the House and Senate in 1939 on Public Law No. 117, of the Seventy-sixth Congress, the first strategic materials bill. I am one of two survivors of that conference committee now in the House. I served on the subcommittee that developed Public Law No. 520 in the Seventy-ninth Congress. I served on Special Committee No. 3 of the Military Affairs Committee to investigate the war program in 1941, in which we pointed out the weakness of this Nation in our strategic and critical materials.

To my amazement, in the year 1948, June 11, I find before the Ordnance Association in Detroit a statement quoted in the Evening Star, which reads:

The Army has nearly enough World War II stocks on hand to equip the additional six and one-half divisions it has asked Congress to authorize, but a spokesman said today the equipment would be "out of balance."

By being unbalanced we mean, for instance, that we have sufficient artillery but no prime movers to pull that artillery, and, similarly, we have plenty of antiaircraft guns, but no modern fire-control equipment; we have weapons of great technological advances and design, but no ammunition for use of this equipment in either training or in combat. Examples of this type of unbalance are manifold and these are but a few pertinent examples.

Then I got hold of General Bradley's speech before that same Ordnance Association, delivered on June 9. He said:

Contrary to popular belief, the Army does not have sufficient balanced stocks of weapons and other equipment to tide us through industrial conversion in the event of another Skipping a bit, he said:

The military value of our existing reserve stocks is limited not only by their inadequate over-all quantities but likewise by their unbalanced composition.

Even with the best advanced planning of civilian consultants to the Munitions Board, and even with the full cooperation of industry, we shall face an irreducible lag of 1 year or more in the production of munitions in the event of war. Our ability to defend sensitive outposts and to support a limited offensive during that first year of waiting will depend entirely upon our stock pile of equipment reserves. Without this margin of safety, we could conceivably lose a war or certainly prolong a costly conflict, long before our industrial plan could be brought into action.

As the range and power of offensive weapons are increased with each passing year, it becomes more and more necessary for us to bank upon strength-in-being rather than upon our potential reserves.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gavin].

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to compliment my very good friend and colleague from Michigan [Mr. POTTER], who has a very distinguished war record, serving under Gen. Dan Strickler of the Twenty-eighth Division. I was pleased and greatly impressed with what the gentleman had to say today.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVIN. I gladly yield to my friend from Michigan.

Mr. POTTER. The General, he was Colonel Strickler then—was my battalion commander and one of the finest, grandest soldiers that ever lived.

Mr. GAVIN. I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan. I know General Strickler will be pleased to hear of this fine tribute that has been paid to him.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to take my time to discuss with the membership amendments I intend to introduce at the proper time. They read as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO H. R. 6401

After section 11, page 41, line 4, insert the following new sections to be numbered 12, 13, and 14, respectively, and renumber the existing sections 12 through 23 accordingly:

"SEC. 12. Under policies established by the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force are authorized to accept original enlistments in the Regular Army, the United States Navy (including the Marine Corps) and the United States Air Force from among qualified aliens not less than 18 years of age for enlistment periods of not less than 3 years: Provided, That the total number of aliens who may be enlisted pursuant to this section shall not exceed 100,000 at any one time. Persons enlisted pursuant to this section shall upon completion of 3 years' honorable service in one or more of the armed forces of the United States, be eligible, subject to such qualifications and examinations as may be prescribed, for naturalization in accordance with the provisions of section 324 of the act approved October 14, 1940 (54 Stat. 1149; 8 U. S. C. 724), and other provisions of applicable law.

"SEC. 13. Provisions of law prohibiting the payment of any person not a citizen of the United States shall neither apply to aliens who enlisted in the Regular Army, the United States Navy (including the Marine Corps), or the Air Force, under the provisions of section 12 of this act, nor to their dependents or beneficiaries.

"SEC. 14. So much of section 2 of the act approved August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., ch. 179, 216; 10 U. S. C. 625), as amended, as reads '; and in time of peace no person (except an Indian) who is not a citizen of the United States, or who has not made legal declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, shall be enlisted for the first enlistment in the Army,' is hereby repealed."

Section 12 is similar to an amendment adopted in the Senate to the selective service bill known as the Lodge amendment. Let me point out the difference between my amendment and the Lodge amendment.

The Lodge amendment would authorize only the Secretary of the Army until June 30, 1950, to accept not to exceed 25,000 enlistments in the Regular Army whereas my amendment would authorize the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force, under policies established by the Secretary of Defense, indefinitely to accept enlistments in the Regular Army, the United States Navy, and the Regular Air Force provided the total number of aliens who may be enlisted shall not exceed 100,000 at any one time.

The Lodge amendment would establish a maximum age of 35 years whereas my amendment would contain no such restriction.

The Lodge amendment would set a minimum enlistment of 5 years whereas my amendment sets one of 3 years.

The Lodge amendment makes no mention of naturalization whereas my amendment spells it out and insures an alien after completion of 3 years' honorable service of becoming eligible for naturalization.

The Lodge amendment would suspend until June 30, 1950, the present prohibition on original enlistment of aliens which is now effective in time of peace whereas my amendment would repeal the prohibition.

This amendment, if adopted, will give us an opportunity, Mr. Chairman, of securing the services of some hundred thousand aliens, stateless people in most instances, who are anxious to become citizens of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Gille].

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Chairman, on several occasions during the past 3 years I have discussed at length on this floor the reasons why I am fundamentally opposed to compulsory military training in peacetime. They are well known to the Congress and to the people of the Fourth Indiana District.

Peacetime military conscription has never prevented a war in the past. It has been weighed in the balance and found wanting in many European countries. In this atomic age it is a futile gesture toward preventing a future war. It is significant that every major nation in history which has had peacetime conscription inevitably has been led into war and eventually to defeat and ruin.

Compulsory peacetime military conscription is, as a matter of fact, a breeder of wars. The conquests of Alexander, Caesar, and Napoleon have proven that military-minded nations have become aggressor nations. When nations arm to the teeth and put forth their energies into the establishment of huge armies and navies, situations arise or create themselves for the use of these forces.

We are interested in preserving our American form of democracy and this can best be accomplished by devoting our energies toward the establishment and maintenance of world-wide lasting peace.

The majority report of the Committee on Armed Services has been widely quoted in support of this measure. The opposition report of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short] and his colleagues however, makes a lot more sense—in my opinion.

In recommending a stepped-up program of voluntary recruitment for the Army, the report points out the Army has deliberately refrained from making all-out efforts to utilize voluntary recruitment methods. "Just as little interest has been shown in supporting the Reserve establishments as long as the Army feels that universal conscription is obtainable, so the Army has been unwilling to pursue energetically the problem of making Army service more desirable to the average potential soldier," the report states.

Summing up arguments against this bill, and in support of our traditional peacetime volunteer methods, the report asserts:

We have taken all steps necessary to provide the United States with an adequate defense against any enemy. The most modern weapons, the greatest Air Force and Navy in the world, the possession of the newest and most effective atomic bombs, and a modernized Ground and Service Force backed by the productive resources and manpower or the United States are a formidable defense.

The men needed to complete our Ground Forces can be secured, just as those of the Navy and Air Force are being kept at peak requirements, through voluntary enlistments. Backed by a Reserve force and a National Guard brought to full strength, the Army will be of such size and quality as to meet all our defense requirements. Ample evidence is available * * * to prove that no compulsory peacetime draft is needed to build up the Army to required strength.

Various public-opinion polls have been cited by proponents of this measure in an attempt to prove that a majority of the American people favor this radical departure from traditional American policy. Questioning the accuracy of these polls, I conducted one of my own in April of this year among the citizens of the Fourth Indiana District. A detailed report of this poll appears in the COMGRESSIONAL RECORD of Tuesday, May 11, 1948.

More than 60,000 ballots were sent out containing the following question: Do you favor compulsory peacetime military training?

In spite of the tremendous Nationwide propaganda campaign which has been carried on in support of this measure, only 37.8 percent replied in the affirmative. Expressing opposition were 59.8 percent, while 3.4 percent had no opinion on the question.

I intend to vote against this bill because I believe, along with many other sincere Americans, that peacetime military conscription is a form of slavery which will wreck our free institutions; that it will turn America into a militarist Nation and that, instead of insuring peace, it will surely and inevitably lead to another devastating war.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. Bolton].

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, we have before us a bill to induct into the Army certain of our young men. told that need for this compulsion has been proven by the failure of voluntary enlistments. Other Members have emphasized the fact that the methods and regulations of the Army itself have been to a very great extent responsible for this I shall not go into the details already put before you. But I cannot refrain from protesting the regulations now current governing enlistment and reenlistment. The high I. Q.'s demanded, the consequent difficulty in obtaining reenlistment or enlistment all have a very real bearing on what is considered the failure of voluntary enlistments. I want to point out to you that high I. Q.'s are not necessarily the best material for a hard-fighting two-fisted army. We need intelligence, yes, but we do not want nor can we handle, as we certainly proved in the last war, the high-tensioned nervous systems of some of the high I. Q.'s. That sort of sensitivity makes poor soldiers. The high-strung boys who are between boyhood and manhood, who are to be requisitioned under this bill, and subjected to Regular Army life, not to training as such, may not be the material that we are supposed to need so dramatically. Under this bill you propose to take a group whose feet are not yet secure upon life's road. You take them away from their families. You put them into situations for which they are not prepared, unless they exempt themselves by hasty marriages, emotional instability, psychiatric unbalance, categories of that kind, and by all the things they can find to do to escape compulsory service as they did before. You will put these boys into situations for which they are not ready. You take some of them, only a small number of lads of these ages, filled with the ambitions that are so strong in the early years and what do you give them? Security? Strength? Balance? Surely not! You give them obsolete methods, Mr. Chairman, for if the world goes to war again nothing we now know will hold.

Can you not see that the military service you are setting up under this legislation actually defeats itself? You will recall that the trained armies in Europe and Asia did not get very far until the fresh, inexperienced, green troops from this country appeared on the scene. Yes, they were raw troops, and undisciplined, but they were vigorous and they brought a new force the trained armies did not possess.

True, we lost men who did not know how to protect themselves, boys taken by the so-called selective service on their eighteenth birthdays and shipped over to their death, in spite of the assurance given the country by the Army that such inadequate training would not be pos-

Where is the American tradition in this bill as submitted to us? A small group of boys only-is that democratic, Mr. Chairman? How will they be chosen? What pressures will be used to force some in and keep others out? What is intelligent about refusing additional service to men who want to stay in the Army through reenlistment and then declare the voluntary system a failure?

It has been said on this floor that failure to pass this bill will be a sign to the U. S. S. R. that we will not back up our protests in language they understand. This is not true. What will be a signal to them is that we know what we want and that we will do just that, no more, no less.

No Member of this House is more sincerely interested in keeping America strong than I am, but that strength must rest upon firm foundations. In company with many others here assembled. I do not find justification for action so far removed from our American tradition as is peacetime compulsory military service. I have not been able to find sound reason for this action. Nor do I believe it is an adequate solution for the security of this country and the peace of the world.

I shall support certain amendments that are to be introduced, Mr. Chairman. Without these it will be legislation I cannot in good conscience support.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Chairman, I have listened to all the testimony that was given on this problem to our committee. What we propose to do today is, under ordinary peacetime conditions, contrary to our traditionsit is contrary to our democratic way of life-yet I believe that the wise step for us to take is to pass this bill.

Why do I say that? Why do I feel that way when I have been opposed to militarism or anything military all my life? The reason is simple and plain. I have traveled around the world trying to find out what the condition of things is in various parts of the world. All over the world, following the terrible destruction of four long years which you cannot imagine unless you have seen it, are kegs of powder, dynamite, tinder. I am terribly afraid that we might light one of those spots in Korea, in Austria, perhaps in France or in Trieste, or even in China.

We are not living in an ordinary time. We have not peace in the sense which we used and interpreted that word 10 or more years ago. We are living in a world of fear, of chaos, of uncertainty, and, to a certain extent, of hopelessness. After the great destruction caused by 4 years of war, the world is having a hard time to get on a peace basis. Our efforts at bringing about peace have been obstructed, delayed, and frustrated. Why? Partly the fault is ours because of bad commitments we made and for other reasons. But it is useless to dwell on our failures or mistakes. We are confronted with the problem-how can we forge the peace?

I believe that we can lead the world to peace by retaining or building our military strength. We are the one nation that has that obligation and the capacity to carry out a strong program for peace. Our able colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Potter], who as a young soldier, fought with the Twenty-eighth Division, the great Keystone Division, pointed out to you that the land soldier is still a very important cog in our military machine. We do not yet have the long-range airplanes that can go from our continent to a target abroad and return. Our fliers can go to the target, but we cannot get them back. So, in the event that trouble should come-and we all pray that it will not come-we must have the land soldier to hold the bases that we will require to strike back. It is true that our military men say that there is no direct evidence that war is upon us. But, do you not see that if we get weak and one of the great powers of the world interferes politically, economically, or subversively with other countries, the very crisis that we are trying to avoid might be upon us. I believe that if we will retain our strength, if we are prepared for any eventuality, that that eventuality will not come. That is why I am going to support this bill. It goes contrary to our ideas in peacetimes to do a thing like this, but there is no greater mission that we have to perform than to try to make the peace. are the ones that can furnish the leadership through our economic, our military, our social, and our political strength. This is one of the steps that I believe will bring this about. If we do not do it we are going to waste 300,-000 lives and we are going to disappoint a million wounded men that are lying in the hospitals, who fought for freedom. Security is the very cornerstone of freedom. You cannot have liberty unless you have security. This bill will help bring about world security, in my opinion. The little countries of the world, like Norway, the home of my mother. look to us to furnish the strength that will protect them, and if we protect ourselves then these little nations of the world, these small peoples, and the American citizen on our own continent. will have the freedom that we all cherish. But, we must retain our strength. We must live up to the status of the great world giant in the military field, in the industrial field, and in the productive field. We are the colossus that can lead the nations out of this chaotic, transitory world into a world of peace, and it is my opinion that this bill will help to solve that situation.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a step in the direction of militarism. It is a realistic step toward peace. It is a temporary step that world conditions require us to take if we wish to bring the peace that our fighting men fought and died The law is limited in its duration. It is one of those contradictory things that we must do to really win the peace that the war was fought for. It is a positive step as distinguished from "drifting" that has gotten many nations into war. The one symbol that any antagonist will look at with respect is strength-military, productive, and social strength. This is evidence that we not only intend to remain strong but that we are determined that we will have security and freedom even at the risk of fighting for it. Our 70-group air force; our mighty Navy and a strong Army, well drilled and disciplined will bring the respect that will result in agreements and compromises that will produce the peace. That briefly is my reason for supporting this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BRADLEY]

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, the American merchant marine has not been a success in the general understanding of that term for many de-cades. To be candid, it has been a very lame duck-unable to take care of itself financially except in war or national emergency—unable to strongly attract passengers at times because of a reputation for inefficient or impolite service—unable even to propagate itself without outside aid. Yet the United States must have an adequate merchant marine, both to protect its industrial position in time of peace and to bolster its national defense in time of war. To get this merchant marine, we have spent countless millions of the taxpayers money during recent wars. In World War II alone we spent more than $15,-000,000,000 for ship construction. Now this great fleet of ships is being rapidly disintegrated by the influx of new foreign ships into the overseas commerce. New foreign ships are coming out almost daily. New American ships are not coming out. We are too short of steel to be able to build ships at any price reasonable even according to American standards. Yet there is a ray of sunshine for the merchant marine in the attitude of the Eightieth Congress which one of our great national publications declares "has restored faith in Government by discussion at a time when that has seemed by many to be a losing proposition," and further that "the Congress, like the people who elected it, has acted in the last 2 years with great good sense.

This speech, Mr. Chairman, is an appeal for fair and just treatment of the American seaman on the part of this Eightieth Congress which, with sound wisdom, stopped sales and charters of American ships to foreign nations and directed that at least 50 percent of American goods bought in this country with ERP funds for shipment abroad be shipped in American bottoms; which only a few days ago granted funds to the Maritime Commission to commence the construction of urgently needed vessels; and which only yesterday passed two bills amending the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 so as to encourage ship construction in the United States and ship operation under the American flag. It is an appeal for that same sort of justice which the House demonstrated so forcefully a few days ago when it accepted an amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] to the displaced persons bill so as to admit some 2.000 deserving Czech patriots who had fought for liberty.

Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons why we do not have a better merchant marine, a more reliable merchant marine, a more efficient merchant marine, is that we have treated the men who go to sea in merchant vessels with utter contempt: we have refused to give them even the most basic recognition of their accomplishments in time of war; we have turned them out to be beggars on the streets or recipients of public charity even when sick or disabled-because their disabilities could not be connected directly to a war-risk casualty. I know of no class of workingmen in the entire Nation who have been treated more shabbily by a supposedly grateful Nation than have the merchant seamen who were absolutely indispensable to victory in World War II.

I believe that most of this ingratitude and indecent treatment has been due to a misunderstanding of facts. I wish I had time to spread these facts before you. Unfortunately, I do not, so shall confine myself to only one or two outstanding examples.

The very first thing one hears when he discusses wartime merchant seamen is the big wages they got in comparison to the armed services. We hear that they made fortunes through high pay, bonuses, overtime, and so forth. At one time I almost believed this myth. Fortunately, however, I learned the truth during extensive hearings the Subcommittee on Ship Operation, Construction, and Maritime Labor had last session. Now, Mr. Chairman, this testimony regarding earnings is conclusive insofar as anything human can be. It represents the facts as given by ship operators, by the Maritime Commission, and by the men themselves. If you will examine the tables which I am inserting here—tables furnished by the United States Maritime Commission—you will find that, all things considered, the earnings of naval personnel and of merchant seamen of comparable positions were approximately

Let us take comparisons between the Navy and the merchant marine. Exact comparisons are not possible as there are no exactly equivalent ratings.

Navy: Chief petty officers, $217 per month, petty officer, first class $188 per month.

Merchant marine: Able-bodied seaman, $182 per month.

Navy: Petty officer, third class, $145 per month. Seaman, first class, $130 per month.

Merchant marine: Ordinary seaman, $177 per month.

Note.—The wages of naval personnel include family allowances. The wages of merchant-marine personnel are after income taxes. Naval personnel in these brackets paid no income taxes during the war. Retirement benefits for naval personnel have not been taken into account in these wages.

It is to be noted that the earnings of merchant-marine personnel given above include bonuses and overtime, this latter being a very minor item during the war in comparison with present practices.

Now just as a matter of interest let us see what the comparative personnel costs of operating a Liberty ship under the Navy and under the merchant marine were during the war.

Navy: For AK with complement as of February 28, 1944, $25,516 per month. Merchant Marine: Same vessel, merchant complement, $14,873. Navy gun crew, armed guard, $3,868. Total for ship plus armed guard, $18,741 per month.

A difference in favor of the merchant marine of $6,775 per month.

I appreciate fully that a ship under naval jurisdiction usually did a different job from that of the merchant marine and I have no criticism of the higher costs for personnel. My sole intent in the comparison is to show that the Government got its money's worth from merchant marine crews.

It appears to me that this data should thoroughly dispel the illusion of extraordinarily high pay for the merchant seaman during the war.

Another field in which the merchant marine is supposed to have had an advantage is in free life insurance. This also is largely a myth. What they did have was a war-risk insurance good only for casualties due strictly to war as distinguished from usual occupational hazards. This insurance did not cover a man who died of heart trouble or who was killed by a falling boom. Even in the event of death through combat casualty, it furnished no continuing protection to the dependents of the deceased. In fact, the war-risk insurance is just about the same as the Government furnished free to every member of the armed forces for 3 months after entry into the service, and continuously for every holder of a Government service life-insurance policy. Only a few seem to understand that Government policies make no charge for war risks but, rather, have their premiums based upon the actuarial tables of peacetime deaths and disabilities. Merchant seamen would have paid for Government insurance policies with joy if such had been made available to them. As it is, the soldier or sailor had all the best of the insurance situation any way one wants to look at it.

And now, Mr. Chairman, we find that the men who went to sea during the war in merchant ships are entirely forgotten in this selective-service bill. They are treated as though they had not existedhad performed no war service for the Nation. It is an amazing picture to me— a direct reversal of the policy in effect toward the close of the war when these men were exempted from induction if they held certificates from the Maritime Commission of substantially continuous service for as much as 12 months. Apparently, we hold here that we should cast aside all feelings of gratitude; that we should waste all of our financial investment in the training of these men; that we should say to them, in effect: "You are in the same catagory as if you had remained ashore in safe, remunerative, civilian occupations." We say this, Mr. Chairman, to a body of men whose loss of life was at a higher percentage than that of the armed services for the first year or more of hostilities, and which ended the war with a percentage loss of life equal to that of the armed services. We say this, Mr. Chairman, to men who sailed through the ice cold seas off northern Europe in the long winter nights when the expected loss of ships was just 50 percent of those which cleared for Russian Arctic ports. It seems fantastic that we should regard these men in such a cold-blooded way just because they do not wear the uniform of one of the armed

How can we expect to build up a satisfactory body of merchant seamen while we regard them as outcasts, and as undeserving of even the simplest recognition by a people for whom they died to the extent of more than 7,500, for whom they starved on rafts, were cremated in the burning oil of torpedoed tankers, or were blown to bits by falling bombs. Some say the veterans object to recognition of the wartime merchant seaman in any way whatsoever. I do not believe this. Brave men do not object to decent recognition of other brave men. The American fighting man is not built on a narrow, biased pattern. He can share a little of his glory and shine yet more brilliantly from the added appreciation which will then become his lot.

Please take recognition of these comments from the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission:

Unlike those employed in shore-side war industries, they signed employment contracts which obligated them to serve for 12 months, if the voyage, as many do, should need to be that long; they were subjected to military court martial; their employment was not continuous and they were not compensated between voyages; they could not live at home nor could they take their leisure daily at liberty; and shore leave in foreign ports was rigidly curtailed. Like the military, however, they served in active theaters of war; and, as part of active task forces, they carried troops, ammunition, and supplies to such theaters of war as the Pacific islends, Anzio and Normandy beachheads—

And so forth. Mr. Chairman, there are relatively only a few of these men who would fall into the age limits of this selective-service act for peacetime service. No one wishes to exempt them from service in time of national emergency or of war. We do want to preserve their skills and their readiness for those very emergencies.

Mr. Chairman, to me, looking back over two wars; looking back over the years of training it takes to make a good seaman; looking back particularly at the fine new ships I have seen largely useless due to lack of adequate trained personnel to operate them; this drafting of the merchant seaman for Army services does not make sense.

Mr. Chairman, to me, considering the outstanding achievements of the merchant marine during the long years of World War II—the fact that we could not have conducted our overseas campaigns without merchant ships in the thick of combat activities—this complete lack of recognition of the heroism and steadfastness of the men of the wartime merchant marine does not make sense.

Mr. Chairman, to me, the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars each year to build up and maintain a merchant marine under the American flag, while at the same time we completely destroy every vestige of pride in service on American merchant ships—every vestige of desire to serve again in such vessels in the event of war—simply does not make sense.

Mr. Chairman, an amendment will be introduced at the proper time to give some sign of recognition to the wartime seaman. I hope this House will give it most careful consideration.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Isacson].

CONSCRIPTION

Mr. ISACSON. Mr. Chairman, the district I represent—Twenty-fourth Congressional District, Bronx—is in many respects a cross section of America. It is populated by many peoples—most of whom came to the New World to escape the tyranny of the Old World. To escape the very system of Prussian peacetime conscription which we are considering here. They could tell you that conscription fails to prevent war. They could tell you that conscription corrupts our freedom and liberty.

I rise to speak out against the peacetime draft of our young men between the ages of 19 and 26.

I rise to speak out against this bipartisan design to commandeer these young men, in time of peace, away from their homes, their jobs, their schools, their careers—for precious years which can never be returned to them.

I rise to speak out against this plot to conscript the sons and kid brothers of America, the teen-agers of today and tomorrow; the lad courting his first sweetheart—starting out to college—or bringing home his first pay check; to teach and indoctrinate these youths of 19 years in the fine art of killing other boys 19 years of age.

I rise to speak against this bill which seeks to conscript the youth of America, while my bill, H. R. 6780, which would conscript industry by nationalizing the manufacturers of munitions, is bypassed. Why not draft the profits of the wealthy before we draft the lives of our youth?

I charge that President Truman and his coterie of military schemers and profit-hungry monopolists have deliberately and openly created a spurious war hysteria and have scorned all efforts to bring about a century of peace.

I charge that the Republican leaders in both Houses of Congress have joined with the Truman administration, its Wall Street brass, and the business-controlled press and radio of the Nation to wage a psychological war of fear against the American people in order to whip them into line behind this unconscionable grab for profit and world power. THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WANT PEACE—NOT WAR

The people of America do not want another war.

The people of America want peace.

They want a permanent peace, a dignified peace, a peace with honor achieved through world cooperation in the United Nations.

The people of America want a strong and prosperous country.

They want homes; and health and the promise that educational advantages will be available to every boy or girl, in the calling he or she may choose; with no exclusions, no discrimination, no deprivation because of race, creed, color, or national origin.

They want new, modern schools; and broad, free public parks and playgrounds. They want improved social security for all; old age pensions; full employment so that men may no longer be driven to strife against one another for the right to earn a living.

They want a future of promise; a future guaranteed and safeguarded against the ominous, terrible threats of the kind of war which might befall if the heads of nations are men unfit to lead; if the moneyed interests and the military cliques win the control of our Nation as they have sought to do with unparalleled vehemence in the last 3 years following the victorious end of the war against fascism, nazism, and Japanese militarism.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WILL PREPARE FOR WAR IF THEY ARE THREATENED

Yet, beyond all these things which our people want and hope for, they are deeply and sincerely stirred by a love of country first. They stand ready and willing to offer great self-sacrifice and, yes, sacrifice of the very lives and futures of their children, if the security of our great land of promise be in true peril.

For love of country, for preservation of the sacred heritage of America, all Americans whether of ancient American lineage or newly come to our shores, would sacrifice all these things and more.

This is the deep-rooted faith of the people of America in the hope and promise of democracy as inscribed in our Declaration of Independence, in our Constitution, in our Bill of Rights, and the other epoch-making resolutions which compose the greatest fabric of freedom ever designed in the history of the world.

OUR COUNTRY IS NOT THREATENED

But our country is not in danger. Its security is not threatened.

Therefore it is most scurrilous, Mr. Chairman, it is an unthinkable breach of trust to the great, self-sacrificing people of our country that our Nation's powermad, profit-hungry leaders dare to exploit this great spirit of America in order to assure profits for the overpowering corporations of the free-enterprise system. Step by step they are taking us down the road to war.

The administration wants us to believe that a world crisis has arisen which threatens our security. But it has presented no facts to substantiate this. I charge that an artificial crisis was deliberately manufactured to stampede Congress and the people into accepting universal military training and conscription which they have always strongly opposed.

It was General Ludendorff, Hitler's military mentor, who first advanced the totalitarian theory that the imminent danger of war must be drilled into people's minds in order to prepare a nation for an aggressive, militaristic course.

The danger of attack and the need to prepare to fight for existence must be stressed. Then the Nation will go obediently through the steps and sacrifices and human costs of building a war machine. Then on command, the people will go willingly to war—an aggressive war and not a war of defense.

This was the Ludendorff theory; this was the trick Adolf Hitler played on the German people.

This is the trick now being played on the American people.

THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE WANT PEACE-NOT WAR

Are we threatened by the Soviet Union? That nation lost 10,000,000 lives in the war. The most productive sectors of its economy were destroyed. After 2½ years of reconstruction its production has just regained the prewar level. It will take the Soviet Union many years to attain an industrial output equal to one-half our current production. Meanwhile, if we do not squander our resources in preparations for war, the United States can increase its output by 50 percent in the next decade, raise itself to an undreamed-of prosperity, and help promote the prosperity of the rest of the world.

The Soviet Union has just adopted its sixth demobilization measure since the end of the war and has been steadily reducing the percentage of its national budget for munitions expenditures.

Does anyone seriously believe that the Soviet Union wants another war? The most ardent advocates of the get-tough-with-and-hate Russia policy admit that the Soviet Union does not want war. They even concede that the Soviet Union fears war. The fact is that the Soviet Union cannot attack the United States. As the hard-headed Wall Street Journal cynically said, if the Russians wanted to attack us, they would have to swim to get

There is no military threat to our national security. The administration has merely concocted a nonexistent threat to force through unpopular legislation and to guarantee great corporation profits.

To insure corporation profits, to halt the march of real democratic progress in our Nation and in other countries of the world, the administration has conjured up a great, dynamic lie—as evil in its own way as Hitler's great lie which took the lives of millions of people including 6,000,000 in Europe solely because they were Jews.

Behind the propaganda front of this great lie—behind the campaign of fear against the mind of America—these men conspire to conscript the youth of America—to take America's sons and plunge them into regimentation of mind and body of the very sort over which we have fought the totalitarian world. They would indeed perpetuate Jim Crow and racial discrimination by refusing to eradicate this un-American principle from our military branches and from the production of military material.

They seek to destroy civil liberties and to train the mind of young America the way Hitler trained the Hitler youth—to the necessity of a holy war to protect profit and greed.

Mr. Chairman, the leaders of our Nation have deceived the American people and withheld vital information from them in order to traduce the Nation into accepting the totalitarian regimentation demanded by American monopoly capital.

Here are the facts, unchallenged and undisputed although our Administration has sought desperately to draw a curtain of iron and steel and cotton and tobacco and oil over this vital information upon which our people must base their decisions between war and peace.

WE HAVE NOT REALLY SOUGHT PEACE

On March 17, 1948, the President of the United States stood before the joined bodies of the Congress and, with apparent concern and desperation, called upon the legislative branches of the Government to take immediate steps to mobilize and militarize America. He declared that peace was threatened and that our power to maintain peace was nearing an end.

Yet the fact now stands indisputably revealed that last January, a full 2 months before the President made his appearance before Congress his own administration had flatly turned down an overture from the Soviet Union for peace.

The facts now stand revealed that on a certain evening in January of this year, an emissary of the Soviet Government in Berlin called upon Mr. Robert Murphy, the adviser and consultant assigned by our Department of State to Gen. Lucius Clay, who heads our military government in Germany.

This emissary came to the house of Mr. Murphy at 8 o'clock on that January evening.

The two men talked until 2 o'clock the next morning. They discussed in detail the problems and differences existing between the Soviet Union and the United States which had led the existence of the cold war and the threat of open conflict.

This was last January—let us not forget—two full months before President Truman wrung his hands before Congress and pleaded for the mobilization of America for war.

What was the result of that Berlin discussion last January, by an accredited representative of the Soviet Union and participated in by our top policy-maker in the area of immediate conflict between Soviet and American interests?

Did our Nation pause in its waging of the cold war?

Did we ask for more details?

Did we send General Marshall to meet Mr. Molotov to air further these problems and differences?

We did not.

Rather, our White House and State Department not only refused to discuss the matter, but even went so far as to deny that the original exchange of views had ever taken place. Clearly, even last January, our administration was determined to conjure up a Frankenstein monster of war.

No peace overture could be permitted to upset the creation of the specter of

For unless that Frankenstein, that specter, were created, the American people could not be regimented into docile battalions for the profit of the monopolists.

Then, significantly, two whole months later, President Truman appeared before Congress to ask for a peacetime draft to build our Army to wartime strength.

This act—undertaken 2 months after the Soviet Union had sought to initiate conferences to iron out our differences was a clear and indisputable indication that certain forces in our Nation were determined on a war program, even though the peoples of the world wanted peace.

Can we, as an intelligent, democratic, progressive Nation, condone acts like these?

Are we to be so taken in by those who make huge and unconscionable profits out of war and war programs that we can close our eyes and ears to facts such as these?

The answer should be obvious, but there is still another chapter to this story of greed, deception, and bipartisan flouting of our people's will for peace.

On May 9, our Ambassador to the Soviet Union, Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, held a conversation with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov and later submitted to him a confirming note. Our Ambassador said that the United States considered the door always open to negotiations for peaceful relations between the Soviet Union and ourselves.

Perhaps General Smith thought that this conversation, like the one in Berlin 4 months earlier, could be blotted out by our expensive tapestry of iron and steel and cotton and tobacco and oil.

At any rate, he went fishing.

But this time the Russians decided to tell the story to the world.

Perhaps, it is true that as our President and State Department cried later, the Russians sought to put them on a spot.

Whether or not that was the Soviet's intention, our leaders were put on a spot. But the spot was the spot of peace. Did they want peace or not, yes or no?

The whole world waited breathlessly for the answer.

Again our President and our Secretary of State made it indubitably clear that even on this point they were determined to disagree with the Soviet Union.

In plain, simple diplomatic mumbojumbo they said General Smith's conversation was misinterpreted, its meaning distorted.

Did they mean that General Smith did not mean to propose peace?

Do our leaders mean that the American Nation wants war?

CONSCRIPTION BRINGS WAR

We, the people of America, want peace. We have never wanted anything else. Peace is a basic ethic of America. We are a peace-loving people. We do not raise our sons to die in wars—we raise them to be useful citizens in a democracy at peace.

Our leaders, in their desperation to sell their war-profits regimentation to the American people, tell us that the way to peace is through military strength, a swollen armaments program, and conscription of America's young manhood to train for war.

What nonsense this is.

If you train men for war, will you have peace?

If you teach our youth to fight and kill, how can we ever, ever expect our future generations to want peace?

Mr. Chairman, all the great institutions of our democracy cry out against militarization, against the peacetime conscription of American youth. The churches, the colleges, the trade unions, our social agencies, the fathers and mothers of America and even youth itself—all these oppose conscription and war.

Only business and the military and the press and politicians representing them are behind this back-to-war movement.

Let us call a halt now, in this final crucial moment in the drive to war, before greed and political blindness steer us all into the total destruction of atomic war.

Let us turn our course toward peace peace and understanding and a sincere helping hand to the oppressed and suffering peoples of the rest of the world.

Let us turn the mind of America away from war and toward achieving full democracy in our own land for all our people.

And above all, let us cherish and preserve our youth for this great American mission.

CONSCRIPTION BRINGS FASCISM

Let us not conscript a whole American generation to sacrifice themselves on the battlefields of greed and hate.

For conscription of our youth means conscription of their minds as well as their bodies.

Sir Norman Angell has said:

Conscription to be effective must be a conscription of minds as well as bodies • • • the state must take charge not only of the expression of opinion, but of the dissemination of facts which lead to the formation of opinion.

Major Hinman of the Morale Division told a writer:

It is not our job to teach the men in the Army what is right. It is simply our job to teach them to fight for what is right—as laid down by the Government.

Let us consider the impact of thinking like this, in the teaching of all our young people. In the current war psychosis, what is "right" as laid down by the Government? Current-events teachers may be permitted to say that our Government's betrayal on Palestine was unfortunate, but they will be compelled to add that it is right because it adds to the profits of the oil monopolists. They will have to teach that it is right to feed the power of Fascist Franco, Salazar, Peron, Chiang, the Grand Mufti, and the puppets of Greece and Turkey.

Civic teachers will be compelled to teach that only Reds are in favor of racial equality, for segregation is as fixed a part of UMT as it is in a Memphis railroad station. It will be their job to explain how right it is for the President of the United States to trail along behind the denunciations by the British Foreign Minister of disloyal New York Jews.

It is this aggressive military doctrine which constitutes the real threat to American security.

Yes; we must keep our Nation strong. America is strong.

But we must keep America free.

A compulsory peacetime draft will reduce us to slavery.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Jackson].

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Chairman, the debate thus far on the floor reminds one of the tragic days before Munich. It takes one back in memory to the sad trail taken by Neville Chamberlain, umbrella under his arm, and hope in his heart, as he walked unhesitatingly down the path of appeasement, that unhappy path followed by so many who were blind to the fact that when you are dealing with brute, fanatical force, sometimes controlled and directed force is the only weapon at your command. Reason would be far more desirable, but reasoning with a blueprint for world conquest is less than futile.

So long as we are in the business of subsidizing almost every group, bloc, and faction in this great land of ours, people who raise everything from potatoes to peanuts, it might be well for us to subsidize some of the firms who make umbrellas, because certainly we are going to be in need of them if this trend continues.

After the rain of death that fell upon Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, it is indeed astounding that so many minds remain so relatively dry. In my district I have several hospitals full of the maimed, broken, and crippled who paid, in that attack and in the attacks that came later, for the criminal negligence that preceded that fateful day. These men are watching this House today and watching the action that we take toward preserving those things for which they fought.

It must have been a debate of this kind that caused Patrick Henry to rise angrily from his seat in the Virginia Assembly and give impassioned voice to those immortal words known today to every American schoolboy. You will remember them, too:

Gentlemen may cry "Peace, peace," but there is no peace. The war has actually begun. The next gale that sweeps from the north may bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms. Our brothers are already in the field. Why stand we here idle?

Our brethren are in the field, Mr. Chairman, in France and in Italy, in the low countries, in Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland, Greece, and Turkey. Men and women who believe in liberty, willing to fight for it, are taking up their stand against the specter of militaristic communism, that ever-enveloping shadow that creeps across the face of the earth and threatens the things that free men hold sacred. They are determined that their lands will not be added to the tragic roll call of nations who fell victims to aggression. Others have found out too late the high price of attempting to shield liberty with a veil of hope and a wishful dream.

This body would do well to heed the words of warning and of sound judgment spoken by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] who paid a high price in his distinguished service. Brute force prowls undisguised across the world today. Apologists and fellow travelers here at home cannot make it look like anything but terror on the march. I suggest, if you have not read the Communist Manifesto of Marx and Engels, that you read it. It is 100 years old this year. If you want to know what fate holds in store for you in a Communist world read it and read it well, for it affects not only you, but millions and millions of other American citizens whom the drafters of the manifesto and their beneficiaries call the bourgeois.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON of California. I yield.
Mr. BUSBEY. I would like to ask the gentleman when Czechoslovakia went Communist, if the brute force of the Russian Army marched into Czechoslovakia to take it over?

Mr. JACKSON of California. There I take issue with the gentleman. Czechoslovakia did not go Communist. Czechoslovakia had communism forced upon it by a minority. That is the very real danger that faces every nation which tries to stand in constitutional dignity and human decency. We are dealing with force, and if we are wise we will show any aggressor that we can and will use force to defend ourselves if necessary.

Mr. BUSBEY. I thought the gentleman was dealing with ideologies.

Mr. JACKSON of California. That is where the gentleman and myself have a serious difference of opinion.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON of California. I yield. Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the fifth column of Russia, that operated in Czechoslovakia, was backed up by an army?

Mr. JACKSON of California. The threat of the Red Army was an everpresent factor in the Czechoslovak coup.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Philbin].

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Chairman, let me make it clear at the outset of my remarks that I deeply regret to have to differ with my distinguished chairman and other distinguished members of the Armed Services Committee with respect to the merits of this bill.

Let me also make it clear that I do not intend anything expressed in my remarks to be construed as indicating animosity or ill-will toward high-ranking members of the armed forces or toward those who have sponsored the viewpoints of the armed services before our committee.

I have admiration and highest regard for most of the men who are leaders of our armed forces because on the whole in war and in peace they have demonstrated not only great ability but great personal valor and loyalty to our country. My differences of opinion with them concerning this issue are honest, deeprooted, and fundamental. I do not believe that the military should control the American Nation or the American economy. I believe that under our Constitution the military was definitely intended to be subordinate to the civilian authority and I stand here supporting the continuance of that time-honored tradition of our democratic Nation.

This present draft measure is the most far-reaching and the most revolutionary peacetime proposal ever advanced to place shackles upon American freedom. Unless the Nation is facing a genuine emergency, unless the national security is at stake or in jeopardy, there can be no logical rational justification for the imposition upon American youth and the American economy of the burdens contemplated by this bill. I cannot concede that such an emergency exists.

This bill demonstrates that the country is confronted as never before with the evil of supermilitarism. The only barrier to a completely militarized and regimented American society is this Congress Warmongering, war scares, and war hysteria have been feverishly generated and flagrantly promoted by those high in official civil and military authority.

Misleading reports have been spread throughout the country that foreign submarines have been seen off our coasts, though it is a common and perfectly legal practice in time of peace—one which we follow ourselves—for naval craft of foreign nations to ply the high seas.

Reports are circulated that Russian planes have been observed in Alaskan waters, though it is a known fact that in these waters Russian territory is only 47 miles away from the Alaskan coast and one of our own islands in that area is only 3 miles away from a Russian-owned island.

The Army has recently released to the press, from the Surgeon General's Department no less, a news article which was widely disseminated containing full instructions to the American people on how to conduct themselves in the event of an atomic-bomb attack on American cities, though it is known to the Army and every other informed source that no nation, apart from our own, is presently able to make atomic bombs for military use.

Another war-scare report declares that the United States Army in occupied Germany has been put on guard against "flying discs."

In countless other ways of late since this bill has been pending a campaign to develop a war spirit in this country has been carried on and a war fear has thus been artificially produced and spread in the Nation which has unwarrantedly but gravely upset our people, and has had disturbing repercussions on the public sentiment of other friendly and peaceloving nations.

All these propaganda devices have been utilized lately in the intensive drive for full compulsory military regimentation of the Nation.

This bill will ruin and wreck the United States which we have traditionally known. It will enslave our youth, undermine our educational, religious, social, and industrial standards, regiment our economic system and business, reinstate wartime controls over industry and commodities, and completely militarize the Nation. This permanent militarization—for that is what it will be—means excessive tax burdens—about twenty-two billions for military purposes for fiscal year 1949 and steadily growing thereafter to even higher figures—and threatens the country with stagnation and bankruptcy.

There is absolutely no necessity in peacetime to militarize our cherished American institutions of freedom of the individual and freedom of initiative in order to secure the Nation against danger from foreign attack or to prepare it to meet other types of aggression or dangerous infiltration. I favor and support a strong and impregnable national defense, a modernized, streamlined, fastthinking, and fast-moving Army, the mightiest fleet in the world to protect our bases, our commerce, and lines of communication-which we already haveand an overwhelming air force comprised of the latest type of aircraft and invention. These powerful forces in peacetime under our American system should and can be manned entirely by volunteers. The evidence conclusively shows that the Navy can get all the men it needs without the draft, that the Air Corps is now turning volunteers away, and it is neither wise or necessary to institute the draft, or any other compulsory system in order to get the relatively limited number of men allegedly required by the Army at a time when there is no national emergency. The voluntary system has not been given a fair chance. The Army high command is prejudiced against it.

Immature boys cannot handle the intricate devices of modern war. Experienced, professional career men, organized voluntarily, well-paid, well-housed, well-treated, and scientifically trained are required for this task. Organized Reserves and the National Guard-an organization which has rendered such conspicuous service to the country in the past-should be encouraged and built up to adequate strength though the Army has done virtually nothing along these lines, in fact by the provisions of this bill, the National Guard will be absorbed into the Federal military bureaucracy of highly paid, high-ranking officers at an early date.

If the Army would put half the effort into getting the men it claims it now needs, which it has put into hysteria-producing, war-scare measures, which it has put into its campaign for UMT and the peacetime draft, it would have no trouble getting an adequate force.

Our armed services must be streamlined and modernized, ancient, outmoded concepts of organization, strategy, tactics, techniques, and personnel relations, modeled after the Prussianized army of continental Europe—the same kind of reactionary outlook which was responsible for drumming the late and great Gen. Billy Mitchell out of the Army because he dared to assert the growing importance of air power-must not be permitted to dominate the thinking of our military leadership. Under our Constitution the military authority is subordinate to the civilian authority and that is the way it should remain. It should not be permitted to dominate, as it is now seeking to do, the policy-making functions of the Congress. This country exists for the people and not for the military. Supermilitarism as provided for in this bill is no answer to the problems of democracy any more than it is an answer to the problems of national defense in this advanced atomic age.

Americans have amply demonstrated that they can outwork, outproduce, and outfight nations and that they do these things best when they are free and unfettered by the techniques of autocratic militaristic government. Only war or the danger of imminent war could justify compulsory military services by our youth. We are not now facing that danger.

In my opinion, Russia has no intention of attacking this country and Red Russian leaders know better than anyone that their nation does not have the strength or the industrial potential to stand up for long against this country in war. Moreover, the problems of dealing with Russia and establishing an enduring peace cannot be solved by warmongering militarism, bluff, threats, bluster, and swashbuckling. Military men cannot alone settle these problems. They are problems that will have to be dealt with by trained, seasoned, experienced diplomats and statesmen and will have to be approached in a spirit of moderation and fairness. Be adequately prepared as we must be, and we intend to be, but also let us work and seek permanent enduring peace with all nations and thus try to avoid the horrible bloodshed, slaughter that will inevitably attend the next great war.

Militaristic fascism is just as much of an outrage to America, just as obnoxious to our people, just as alien to our institutions as is Marxist communism. Both systems are the enemies of democracy. Both are alien to the spirit Let us recognize these danof freedom. gers before the hour is too late or we will lose our birthright of freedom to the organized might and intrigue of totalitarianism, Red or black it matters not. This bill gravely imperils the institutions of America and I hope the American Congress will rise up and fight it and defeat it and thus repudiate militarism just as we are prepared to repudiate communism.

The draft is merely a stopgap arrangement to build up the manpower of the armed forces until universal military training can be adopted. It is just the first step in the program for complete militarization of the Nation by those who believe, among other things that the Army can train our young fien; yes, and our young women, better than they can be trained in the homes, the churches, and the schools and colleges of the Nation. It was freely admitted by Army officials testifying before the committee that the draft was a temporary measure to tide the Army over until UMT could be enacted.

The Army has made no real effort to enlist volunteers, or to build up the Organized Reserves or the National Guard. The classification test rating which was fixed at 59 during the war has been raised to 80 thus barring many capable young men able and anxious to serve. If this rating were reduced to 59 large numbers of able-bodied young men would join the Army.

The failure of the Army high command to build up the National Guard is shocking. Congress made generous provision for the development of the National Guard and provided nearly $150,000,000 of which up to a recent date only $30,000,000 had actually been spent. The National Guard has been in the past a most effective instrument for implementing the national defense. This bill will relegate it to be a mere adjunct of the vast military machine contemplated by the draft and UMT.

The Organized Reserves, according to the clear testimony presented to the committee, stands in virtually the same position. No real attempt has been made to build it up to the levels intended by Congress. Under the 1940 Selective Service Act, it was specifically provided that all Army personnel should be discharged into the Reserve, but this provision was disregarded by Army officials, and according to testimony presented to the committee, instead of discharging the very large numbers of personnel taken into the Reserve under that act, the Army availed itself of the plenary war powers of the President in order to give unconditional discharges to millions of trained men who would have made excellent material for Reserve components.

The present bill is being enacted on the theory that it is necessary in order to meet conditions of tension and crisis and emergency that exist throughout the world and gravely threaten the security of the United States. If this bill is adopted it will be very difficult to convince the American people that we are confronting a state of crisis and emergency when the Congress passes this measure and then adjourns. The American people will not be much impressed by the argument that an emergency exists. When the Army starts taking young men under this bill, a vast public protest will arise.

There is no question of preparedness involved in this measure because most every Member of this House is agreed that the Nation should have and must have in these uncertain days an adequate and formidable national defense. Military preparedness must keep pace with scientific advancement. It cannot be based exclusively or even in large part upon massed armies as the recent war has so well demonstrated. The atomic bomb and other equally destructive weapons and agents have revolutionized modern warfare. Our armed services must be implemented along scientific lines, and must be manned in very large measure by experienced and trained technicians. Six months' training or even 1 or 2 years' training is not sufficient properly to indoctrinate and train modern, scientific, armed-forces personnel.

New weapons and agents are developing with bewildering speed and assuming amazing character. Jet-propelled planes, radio-directed aircraft, rockets and guided missiles will have great and most important effect upon the shape, composition, and technique of modern armies. The colleges and technical schools of the Nation as well as certain of our industries will have to train and furnish the high skills required by this new type of warfare. As constituted at present and based upon the draft and UMT as proposed, our armed services cannot do this great job. I repeat-the armed forces must be modernized and streamlined to conform to the requirements and fast-moving developments of scientific warfare.

Our armed forces to be sure, have made some very commendable efforts to adapt themselves to these new needs but much remains to be done in this direction. In my opinion, the armed forces will have to be fundamentally changed before they can be welded into a smooth-functioning, instantaneously-responding, effective fighting force.

Another objection to this bill-and this relates to our whole military set-up-is the present high cost involved in maintaining our national defense establishments, including the draft. It was testified for example that the cost of the military program for fiscal year 1949 would be more than $22,000,000,000, a staggering sum, a crushing burden to place upon the American people in peacetime. Clearly as we proceed with the draft program and with UMT and other programs being projected, this huge cost will rise still higher and we will move into a situation where military establishments will be consuming a disproportionate share of the product of our industry and labor and the substance of our people to the exclusion, or at least the very marked detriment, of other essential activities and functions of our Government such as proper care and provision for our veterans, social security and pensions, salaries of Government employees, payments on the national debt and proper provision for agriculture and labor. But this is not all.

The gigantic military machine provided by this and other bills will have to reach out for the resumption of controls over our economy, for the return of priorities, allocations, rationing, price fixing, and all those other onerous and irritating social and economic controls which were hard enough to stand during wartime, accompanied as they were by gross bureaucratic abuses, but which in peacetime can never be tolerated by the American people except in periods of genuine emergency.

Let us not blind ourselves to these realities because the militarization proposed by this bill and ancillary measures will inevitably entail crushing burdens on the taxpayers, misadjustment and maladjustment of industry and the economy and will definitely move in the direction of that which most Americans have been striving so anxiously and so aggressively to avoid—the regimented totalitarian state.

The lessons of history plainly show, and the demonstrated experience of nations clearly prove, that unbridled militarism in any nation, let alone a democracy, has led to war, absolutism, ravaged economies, and loss of that cherished thing called human freedom.

Because I believe that this measure is not necessary at this time, because I believe in a national defense based on scientifically devised and trained units and not on massed armies, because I believe it is a dangerous departure from traditional American practice of raising armed forces in peacetime, because I believe that it is a forerunnner of additional measures to militarize the United States which leads in the direction of a military dictatorship, because I believe that it unsettles our educational and family relationships, provides for permanent conscription which has been so disastrous in European countries and which has been responsible for so many wars in the past, because I believe it is an indefensible encroachment upon the American free way of life, because it involves staggering financial burdens and controls, I propose to vote against this bill if I have to stand alone. But I will not have to stand alone. There will be many here moved by the same considerations which move me, who will also vote against this bill. In another forum, the greatest forum in the Nation, the forum of the American people working their will through the ballot, this matter will be finally determined. I am convinced that when that time comes an overwhelming verdict will be rendered against this monstrous, coercive, un-American measure which so greatly threatens American family life, American education, the welfare of the American youth, and the shape of our free political, social, and economic institutions.

War is not imminent. Peace is not impossible. International order is not beyond our reach if we but strive for it. In order to set up an adequate national defense there is absolutely no need to militarize the Nation, no need for drafting our young men and taking them away from their parents, homes, and schools and forming them into what may well become a vast military dictatorship that will ultimately overpower freedom in this country.

Let us exercise prudence and levelheadedness in meeting present difficulties and moving to solve present problems, great as they are. I hope this un-American bill will be defeated.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, obviously in the brief time allowed each of us, it is utterly impossible for one to discuss fully and satisfactorily a measure such as that before us of such vital importance, and that is fraught with such momentous consequences to all the American people.

Regardless of the opinion which any individual in this Chamber might have of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], the able chairman of the House Committee on Armed Services, I can state, I think, the true feelings of every member of that committee that we all regret very much he is leaving as a Member of this House and the committee. For several years I have sat at his side, and much as we have differed on various occasions, I have learned to respect his ability, to admire his courage, and to appreciate the very valuable and useful service he has rendered in committee.

I am just a little regretful that at the beginning of his remarks today he rather insinuated that those who opposed this particular measure are either ignorant or are unpatriotic. It may be true that every subversive element in this country is opposed to this pending measure, but I can hasten to assure other Members of the House that not every opponent of this measure is a member of any subversive organization. And some of us we like to feel are not too ignorant but know a little about this bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. In view of the fact that my good friend is obliged to take time from his main discussion to refer to this latter matter, I am going to yield him an 'additional 5 minutes. But may I say that it was the least thought in my mind that anyone who opposed this measure is of the kind the gentleman has indicated.

Mr. SHORT. I am sure the gentleman has properly stated his position. I did not want anyone to gather the inference that he meant otherwise. That is the reason I take this time, and again I want to thank the gentleman for being eminently fair in granting me 5 additional minutes. He has always been kind and considerate with me.

Mr. Chairman, should the United States become engaged in a major war tomorrow, we would find ourselves in a very precarious situation, due chiefly to the lack of strategic and critical materials and minerals to make the weapons with which to wage war. Modern mechanized warfare consumes enormous quantities of raw materials. In winning two World Wars in our generation, we have depleted and exhausted many of our national resources. We pumped many of our oil wells dry; greatly reduced the deposits of copper in Montana and Arizona; depleted much of the lead and zinc in our mines all over America; slashed the best timber from our forests; and devoured much of the iron ore on our Mesabi Range.

I regret very much that on yesterday, after spending over an hour before the Committee on Rules on this particular bill, they saw fit to table the Russell bill by a vote of 5 to 4 which would have continued premium payments on the production of lead, copper, zinc and manganese to build up a sufficient and adequate stock pile so that the present members of our armed forces would have something to shoot. Then immediately after tabling that meritorious measure that would provide the sinews of war, because the minerals produced under it would have gone into our stock pile, they reported out this bill by a vote of 6 to 4.

I want to reiterate what I said on that occasion that to me it is utterly foolish to spend billions upon billions of dollars in appropriations on our armed services. or to build up and increase the numbers of men in the Army, Navy, and the Air Force, unless we first furnish them the weapons of war with which to wage a You know and I know that in this troubled world, war torn and bleeding, in this time of stress and strain, until the United Nations becomes more firmly established and we have an international police force to carry out its decisions, the United States of America, which has been left militarily supreme among the sovereign nations of this earth must, of necessity, and in self-defense, remain strong on land, on sea, and in the air.

Let us make it clear that there is no difference whatever between the proponents and the opponents of the pending measure so far as maintaining a strong national defense. Those of us who are opposed to peacetime military conscription are not against adequate preparedness. We want to see this Nation strong, able to defend itself against any possible emergency. But I submit to you that with our Navy greater than all the other combined navies of the world, with a splendid Air Force, and with a reservoir of men who know how to fly the latest ships, with more than half a million men in our ground forces, our Army, almost 500,000 in the Navy and Marine Corps, with 370,000 in our Air Forcea total of 1,400,000 in our armed services, and after appropriating $11,000,000,000 in January of this year for national preparedness, this Nation is not weak. We are carrying on scientific research, technological development, and building up a strong intelligence. When the Secretary of State says after such vast expenditures, and with the equipment that we now have, in spite of certain shortages in our stock pile, that our defense is "a hollow shell," then I say something is rotten in Denmark and we need some new managers somewhere.

This Nation is not weak or impotent. We have control of the atomic bomb, the latest bacteriological methods of modern warfare; we have the greatest reservoir of highly trained, skilled, technical men in this country; with the greatest industrial output-superior to any likely combination of nations on the face of the earth. And it was America's industrial output, our productive capacity, the men in the mines, on the farms, in the forests, and in the factories of America who helped win this war as much as the men on the front battle lines. That is something that we must keep constantly in mind. Russia has not forgotten that it was American equipment that saved the day at Stalingrad.

Now, that we we are living in uncertain times, no one will deny, but every single witness, from the Secretary of State and from the Chiefs of Staff, General Eisenhower, General Bradley, and the Secretaries of the defense forces.

frankly admitted to us that we are not in a crisis at this moment. None of them believed we are in grave danger of imminent war. They did say that we were in the midst of great international tension, but we have had so many crises during the past 16 years in this country, in both time of peace and war, that some of us cannot keep from feeling that some of these crises, perhaps, are artificially manufactured for political gain.

Now, what are the facts? We all know that the whole world, especially Europe and Asia, is a heap of rats, rubble, and ruin today. The world is in a state of economic collapse. General Clay, in Germany, is absolutely right when he says that the struggle in Europe is not a military one but a political one.

Many of you have seen the devastated cities, the razed factories, the underfed and underclothed helpless peoples wandering like nomads not only in Japan but in all the countries of Europe. While we must be alert and on our guard, and never go to sleep at the switch, we must not grow panicky and become unduly alarmed or show great fear of any other world power. I know that Germany, Japan, and Italy are not going to jump on anybody for a long, long time.

I do not view with great consternation that Boston, New York, Washington, or Philadelphia will be bombarded by the Greek Navy. I do not think the Bulgarian hordes will soon be running over the plains of Texas. I do not think that even Russia, with all her potential possibilities, her vast territory, her virgin forests, her rich mineral deposits, her diversified agriculture, is capable of waging a global conflict today against the United States.

The truth of the matter is the economy of Russia is very bad. Her standard of living is low. The misery of her people is great. There is much discontent. One of the greatest things we could do would be to use psychological warfare to penetrate the iron curtain and get over our ideas of freedom to those people, because I believe that any totalitarian state, whether it is Communist, Nazi, or Fascist, is doomed to utter failure. It is a government of force, of terror, of murder, of the gestapo, of the ogpu, of the concentration camp, and of the firing squad.

The present world crisis is fundamentally a moral and spiritual one. Bread and bayonets alone will not establish world peace. Ideas and ideals are just as necessary. The chief trouble with every nation is that men have lost faith in themselves and in their fellowmen. In an age of might, money, and materialism, we must not overlook faith, hope, and charity. We shall continue to trust God and keep our powder dry, but we will not place our whole redemption upon sheer physical force.

There must be no weakening of America's position—no evidence of fear. But likewise there must be no provocative act that will convince the world that war is inevitable. The United States must not now begin an armament race but rather accept the opportunity to give real leadership for peace. We do not want the rest of the world to think by our action here that we are going to march down once more the road to war. We must, however, maintain the strength to end all appeasement with wrongdoing but at the same time give evidence of a policy that is both firm and patient. In order to accomplish this sane balance it is not necessary to adopt peacetime military conscription which is a radical departure from our American tradition, and the acceptance of a discredited European philosophy.

It seems incredible to me that after fighting two world wars in our generation and winning both as freemen we should now reach the point where we are going to adopt the techniques, the methods, and the plans of the very nations we fought to destroy. Germany had peacetime military conscription, Italy had universal military training, Japan put her faith solely "in horses that run upon the rocks." I submit that history is replete with instances where every major nation that has had peacetime military conscription has inevitably been led down the road to war and eventually to utter ruin.

After the expenditure of so much of this Nation's wealth in both men and money, in blood and treasure, are we now to admit that freemen are not as strong as conscripts or as slaves? If the last war taught us one lesson it was that freemen can outwork, outproduce, and outfight slaves anywhere. The Axis Powers looked upon Great Britain and the United States as the two western, "unprepared, weak, and soft democracies." It did not require long, however, for us to rise in our might and go forth as freemen to conquer and all but destroy those countries where men were compelled to live in a regimented society. cast in a military mold, and forced to goose-step to the commands of the Fuehrer and Il Duce.

The Air Force can get all the volunteers it needs. There are 80,000 applications down there for 6,000 jobs. I have had men come to my office recently and I have talked to them, as dozens of Members of this House have, who are not only willing but eager to get back into the service, but they are rejected. The Navy admits it could get all the men it needs through the volunteer system. It is only the ground forces that are short.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Would the gentleman like to call back into active service the reservists who fought in the last war and make them fill up the Army this time?

Mr. SHORT. If they want to. If you give them the inducements, they are not only willing but eager to do so, and I would take them. I would not deny any man. I think they would make much better soldiers to protect and defend this country than the men you take into the service against their will. A volunteer army, every militarist will admit, is the best army on the face of the earth. Now since the Air Force and the Navy can get the men they need by the volunteer method, why must the Army resort to peacetime conscription? Here are a few of the reasons:

First. The Army has opposed any change in its courts-martial system that would correct many injustices and abuses and treat officers and enlisted men impartially and alike.

Second. The Army has been slow to abolish its caste system and to carry out the constructive suggestions of the Doolittle board which would improve relations between officers and enlisted men.

Third. The Army has failed to provide anything like adequate and decent housing for enlisted personnel and noncommissioned officers. If this is due to a lack of funds the Congress is partly if not mainly responsible.

Fourth. Whether deliberately or not, the Army has unmistakably circumvented the clear intent of Congress in its shameful treatment of our Organized Reserves. Gen. E. A. Evans, Director of the Reserve Officers Association told our Armed Services Committee that the Army had done "very little" to help the Reserves, had done nothing to furnish equipment, and did not contact or put in units the members of the Reserve. He agreed that "there would be no need for a draft, UMT, or anything else if the Army had done its duty and supported the Guard and the Reserves, having made a sincere and earnest effort to build them up."

Only today General Evans, according to the AP, stated in Denver, Colo., that—

Our military leaders have been sitting for 3 years watching a highly trained, combat, hardened Reserve force disintegrate. The Navy has done something, but not enough. They all have lost the cream of the en-

They all have lost the cream of the enlisted men of World War II who joined the Reserves for a 3-year hitch. The average Reserve officer is disgusted, his morale is way down. We have no real Reserve force which could be rallied for national defense in an emergency.

It is also interesting to note that in the same article our former colleague from Minnesota, Hon. Melvin Maas, who is a colonel in the Marine Corps Reserve, declared:

In the last war, 98 percent of the fighting was done by civilians. Yet in peacetime to-day less than 2 percent of the armed forces budget is devoted to civilian defense activities.

Fifth. The Army has neglected our National Guard in such a way they would make one blush. Maj. Gen. E. A. Walsh, president of the National Guard Association, advised us in a telegram dated May 3, 1948:

The enactment of H. R. 6401 as now drafted will mean the complete dissolution of the National Guard of the United States by June 1950. The security of the Nation cannot be assured by destroying its reserves. If there is a possibility of war the measures proposed are utterly inadequate. If there is no possibility of war then the measures proposed are excessive.

Mr. Chairman, these are just five—but very good—reasons that the Army wants peacetime conscription. It would seem that in peacetime at least some officers are interested chiefly in pay and promotion and would like to govern large bodies of men. The only reason one can think that the National Guard and the Organized Reserves have been ignored or sadly neglected is to force UMT or selective service upon this Nation. The Congress and not the Army is the policy-making body of this Nation, and we should never become a rubber stamp of certain officers who want to prussianize the Nation.

It is also interesting to note that in our demobilization after World War I 1 officer was discharged for every 8 enlisted men discharged while following World War II, the military discharged only 1 officer for every 16 enlisted men discharged. In other words there was twice the ratio of officers retained with respect to enlisted personnel after World War II as after World War I. This meant that thousands of highly paid individuals were retained as officers with little or nothing to do since 1945 unless to plug for the enactment of UMT or peacetime military conscription.

Now when a man gets a big salary plus an authority over his subordinates in rank, far greater than that possible under a civilian system such as America enjoyed in the past, it is to be expected that he will take steps to insure that his pay and position are not abolished through a return to a peacetime economy.

What are we doing? We appropriated $11,000,000,000 in January for national defense. Then we appropriated $3,400,-000,000 in supplemental appropriations following the President's frightening speech of March 17. We also voted $882,000,000 for the 70-group air force. If we enact this measure, we will require $2,000,000,000, or more than two billion, to set up the machinery of the Government for training, equipment, and to get the program under way. Then if we reequip the 25 divisions, we will require four billion additional dollars, and you will have a budget for $21,000,000,000 alone for national defense. Add to that, if you please, $7,000,000,000 that the Veterans' Administration is paying, and you have $28,000,000,000. Add to that $5,-500,000,000 in interest on our national debt at the present rate, which is a very low rate of interest, and then you will have an annual budget of $33,000,000,000 for national defense, Veterans' Administration, and interest on the national debt without a single dime for any of the ordinary functions and operations of the Federal Government.

How much longer can we continue down this road? I believe in a strong Army, Navy, and Air Force. If we are ever attacked, it will be from the air and from the sea. With our superior Air Force and with the best Navy on earth, who is going to attack us or can attack us in the immediate future? The only reason anyone would attempt it is if we bleed ourselves white. Take all the money that we are spending on the preparedness program, plus the $17,000,-000,000 we are going to send to Europe under the ERP plus the proposed aid under new legislation to rearm western European countries-figure that up and then you will know that we are in great danger of becoming a bankrupt Nation.

A bankrupt nation has never been able to lick anybody. I think the Army and Navy and Air Force constitute only one arm of our national defense. The first line of any nation's defense is its financial solvency, a sound economy, and a thriving, going industry.

If we enact this bill, I want to say to my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Philbin], whose arguments impressed me greatly, we are going to control the lives of the youth of America, we will invade homes, and disrupt family life by taking men against their will. You can talk about universal training or service, but this peacetime conscription is compulsionit is coereion. The Army will go out as the strong arm of the Government and will take these 18- and 19-year-old boys at the most formative and impressionable years of their lives and will segregate them into a body by themselves. I have never thought that it was a wholesome thing for any body of men to be segregated regardless of their age, and certainly not boys in the adolescent stage, such as they are talking about. They will imbue them with a militaristic spirit. Mere boys will be taught to kill. A few will become leaders-most blind followers. In the meantime, you are building up a great military hierarchy in this country with militarists sitting in high places and positions of the Government who will control, who may impose upon us a type of military control which most of the citizens of America do not want and which their ancestors left the Old World in order to escape.

We must keep ourselves strong as a nation in time of peace as well as in time of war. The front line is never stronger than the home line. If you enact this draft bill now in time of peace, you will control not only the lives of the youth of America, but industry as well. You will be causing increased demands for weapons and materials of war which will be required. You will be forcing control of the productive processes of this country. Military orders will take priority over many of the other civilian orders that we have for durable and consumers goods today. We all know that we need all of the materials and manpower that we can get. Many factories are holding back in production because we have allocated steel. If we pass this legislation, with the great demands not only for military expenditures, but for our exports to Europe under the ERP, and particularly under the contemplated lend-lease to rearm western Europe, we will have to resort to the rationing of many commodities. I do not like priorities, allocations, rationing, but we will perhaps have to return to the rationing of gasoline and the allocation of steel. There will be a shortage of the supply of food. Groceries will be even higher in price. There will be less lumber to build homes. Because of the lack of steel we will not have as many automobiles and less farm ma-

Because of the lack of copper, you are holding back REA and crippling the electrical industry. You cannot create scarcity at home without further adding to this vicious spiral of inflation that is now threatening to destroy us. I am not so much fearful of Russia today as I am fearful of the things she is hoping and praying will happen-economic collapse in America, with vast unemployment, a discredited currency, and a prolonged depression. Russia has won every diplomatic battle not with her army; she has won every diplomatic battle since VJ-day without firing a shot. Psychological penetration, infiltration; divide and conquer. Here we are. Seven or eight years ago we had about $7,000,-000,000 in currency in circulation. day we have $28,500,000,000-four times as much money-greenbacks-in the pockets of the American people. But it is not worth 50 cents on the dollar. If we continue to bleed ourselves white, if we continue to put our faith only in material things. I say the time is not far distant when many of us will be cashing in our Government bonds and life-insurance policies that we purchased with good sound money at 10 cents on the dollar. That is the thing that threatens this country with disruption and defeat. God help us men to stand firm and to exercise reason, and not give completely away to emotion in this jittery age when many people have grown panicky, due to the everlasting, tireless propaganda waged by some of the brass, who frankly admitted, before a subcommittee headed by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS], spending thousands of dollars in order to put over the UMT and to cram this bill down our throats against our will.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short] has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri is always eloquent and entertaining. He was in good form today—as good form as I have seen him except on one prior occasion, to which I will refer a little later. I also appreciate the fact that there are many here who intend, under no circumstances, to vote for this bill or anything similar to it, and who got a great deal of comfort out of the eloquence of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short].

I have been somewhat amused, too, at the satisfaction which has come to some in talking about stock piles, small arms and ammunition and everything else in the world except facing the realities which we have here. No one in opposition to this bill has come forward with anything concrete with reference to our ability to secure, by voluntary enlistments, the minimum number regarded by all as being necessary for our protection.

Talk about Russia winning all of her battles politically. Let it be thoroughly understood that she has never taken over any country that her army did not occupy or surround. In each instance that she has taken over the government of a country, her army has either occupied it or surrounded it. She has never taken over any country when her army did not occupy it or surround it. She did not get Greece or Italy because she neither occupied nor surrounded those countries. She did not get Italy through election because the United States came forward with the European recovery plan. Many of those who speak so eloquently here against this proposal at that time opposed just as eloquently that effort.

We are facing here a practical situation: A great nation at this time wants to arm by 1950 to the extent of only 2,000,000 men when the only other major ideology existing in the world now has at its disposal 235 divisions. Oh, yes; the gentleman from Missouri is eloquent. I remember another time when the gentleman was eloquent, a little before De-cember 1941, when the attack came on Pearl Harbor. The speech that he made here that day was just as eloquent and just as persuasive and made every point that he made here today, saying how secure we were and how there was no danger of anyone attacking this Nation, and that we ought not then to extend the Selective Service Act. I shall never forget that night. I sat in this Chamber and watched extension of the Selective Service Act carry by one single vote. Had one other Member voted the opposite way, instead of carrying by 1 vote it would have lost by 1 vote. That was in August 1941. The same people who tell us today that we do not need this, that we are totally secure, told us exactly the same thing in August 1941, and I think they are just as good prophets today as they were then. I believe it is up to those Members of this House who have always carried the burden of protecting this Nation in national defense to protect it again and vote down this effort to protect us with eloquence and nothing else.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, what I want to leave with the membership in closing is simple fact.

The amount required to be added to the national defense program through passage of this bill is $1,700,000,000. The total budget on that basis will be $17,-500,000,000.

Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that when the House almost unanimously adopted the 70-group airforce program, that meant an expenditure of $3,200,000,000. I should like to point out to you that of those 70 groups, 10 groups alone consist of many squadrons and each squadron has many planes, and there are from 45 to 50 men specifically set aside for each plane, airborne troops, engineers, and infantry. The number of planes placed end to end and wing to wing would fill the Mall completely from the Capitol to the river and the men to man them the Army has not got today. That is something for those who voted for it to think about.

One-third of the Army overhead goes for the upkeep of the Air Force. Thousands of men in the Army must be utilized to supply the Air Force.

I should like to say something about enlistments. Statistics definitely show that with the increase required for the Navy in this bill alone the Navy will require a very large enlistment, far more than they have ever received during peacetime except when selective service was in being. Selective service automatically makes enlistments easy for the Navy.

So far as the Army itself is concerned, it today has 540,000 men, approximately 300,000 of whom are serving overseas in Japan, Germany, and other places, leaving the balance in this country. There are only  $2\frac{1}{2}$  active, well-trained combat divisions in the entire American Army of that large number of 540,000. The rest are all police in foreign countries.

The Army will require within the next year some 800,000 men. That does not necessarily mean that large an increase. That is the increase needed to bring it up to strength for the Air Corps and to take care of the natural attrition that will result during this year.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr.
Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is it not a fact that in every war we ever fought, including the Revolutionary War, we never were able to obtain the necessary number of men to fight the war, no matter what inducement was offered, and this is no exception to any past experience we ever had? Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Yes, the gentleman is quite correct. The actual inference as a result of this bill will not be so much. I cannot see that it is going to mean rationing this or rationing that simply because we increase the armed forces by two or three or three hundred thousand people. That is not going to do it. Why, a most remarkable report has been prepared, one of the most remarkable in the history of this Congress for a long while, by a subcommittee headed by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short], even before we had passed the 70-group air force bill, pointing out that in their opinion

Mr. SHORT. Which proves my point. Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I think it does.

the rationing of gasoline was imminent

Mr. SHORT. We have an acute shortage of petroleum and steel at this time.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. And we have the 70-group air force. As I stated, I cannot see how increasing the Army by two or three hundred thousand means all the other controls are going to be thrown in, too.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman said a moment ago that we have a 70-group air force.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. We have not today; we will have in 1951.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. The gentleman's report says that the cost of selective service will be $40,000,000 and the cost under this bill will be $1,700,000,000. Is not the difference for troops, which opponents of this bill say are needed, anyhow; therefore there is no additional cost because of the draft?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Each man who is brought into the Army is an added expense, and he is just as expensive if he volunteers as if selective service is put into effect.

Mr. Chairman, it comes down to the question, Do you want an army or not?

Mr. Chairman, at this time I would like to say something about the members of the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to bring out that should this legislation be enacted into law, there will be 25,000 additional people placed on the Federal pay roll in order to carry out the

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. There will be quite a few people in the Office of Selective Service Records. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.
Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE]. Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, it is, I know, unnecessary for me to make any effort to convince the membership of this House of the importance of national defense, nor is it necessary for me to preface my remarks with an explanation that our very existence as a nation depends upon an adequate national defense. You ladies and gentlemen of the House are well aware of that fact.

Before we go more thoroughly into the preparedness program and what is being done about it, let us review briefly the structure of our national defense. The system is based upon two fundamental principles which are set forth in the Constitution of the United States. First, defense is a national function; it is the responsibility of the Federal Government and is not to be left to the States alone. The States are allowed to maintain militia to enforce their own proper authority, but they may not maintain troops or ships of war in peacetime without the permission of Congress. Neither may they engage in war unless they are actually invaded or are in imminent danger which will not permit delay. The efforts of the States are part of an overall effort, but let me emphasize the fact that full responsibility rest with the Federal Government. The second principle is that in our system civil authority is supreme over military authority. We have always relied upon a civilian army, hurriedly recruited in time of crisis, rather than upon a large standing army. We have resisted and shall continue to resist all attempts of the military authorities to extend their powers beyond the rigid limits prescribed.

The responsibility for the national defense rests primarily upon the Congress and upon the President. Congress has the sole power to raise and support armies and to provide a navy. Congress alone can raise and appropriate money for the maintenance of the Military, Naval, or Air Establishment. Congress determines the broad policies which are to be followed by the armed forces. War can be declared only by Congress although hostilities may, of course, begin without an actual declaration of war. There is also the possibility that the President in his conduct of foreign relations may bring the country to a point where there is no honorable alternative to war. Congress also endows the Chief Executive with much of the broad power required for the mobilization of a successful national war effort.

The President is the central figure in national defense by reason of the powers he derives from two sources—the Constitution and the Congress. In addition to being the Chief Executive of the Nation, he is also Commander in Chief of the armed forces, and as such has broad powers if he cares to exercise them. Beside these powers, he has those granted to him by the Congress in order to facilitate the mobilization of the national strength in time of war.

To assist Congress and the President in discharge of their responsibilities relative to the national defense, there are a number of Government establishments. Chief among them, of course, is the National Military Establishment, but several of the executive departments and independent offices, agencies, and establishments of the Federal Government have some concern with national defense. Then, too, there are the National Guard and the Organized Reserve Corps, both of which play an essential part in our organization for national defense.

In addition to these obvious components there are others which we sometimes overlook. Where would we be without industrial production to supply the innumerable items, including weapons, munitions, clothing, vehicles, and so forth, which would be needed in case of war? National defense cannot be effective unless industry produces a sufficient quantity of good quality materials. A weapon which will not fire affords little protection against an attacker armed with the most modern and most efficiently functioning weapons. The influence of industry is also making itself increasingly felt in the field of polformation. There are agencies within the National Military Establishment which deal with the mobilization of our economic resources in case of a national emergency. The Munitions Board and the Industrial College of the Armed Forces are examples. Operating outside the National Military Establishment, but working very closely with it, is the National Security Resources Board, which is charged with the function of advising the President relative to the coordination of military, industrial, and civilian mobilization.

Another important factor in the national defense is scientific research and development. Between 1940 and 1944 the Federal Government spent more than $2,000,000,000 for research and development. The first session of the Eightieth Congress passed the National Science Foundation bill, which constitute a recognition of scientific research as of vital importance to the United States. Although the President vetoed that bill, it was because of objections to the particular administrative set-up provided, rather than because of any objection to the purposes of the bill. The place of scientific research in national defense is most effectively illustrated by the development of the atomic bomb during World War II. I shall speak of this in more detail in a few minutes.

Often forgotten in any recital of the various elements which go to make up the national defense is that United States' membership in international organizations represents implementation of United States foreign policy. It is axiomatic that our foreign policy is directed primarily at preserving our national sovereignty. Thus international organizations which contribute to world peace and stability and of which the United States is an active member are in very real sense a part of our national defense. The outstanding example of such an organization is, of course, the United Nations.

In spite of all claims that in modern warfare machines are of maximum importance, the basis of national defense is still an adequate supply of manpower. We need men to serve in the armed forces in case of need. We need men to work in industry to produce the weapons and materials of war. We need men in the scientific laboratories. We need men in the National Guard and in the various Reserve components of the armed forces. We need men to serve in the Government departments and agencies which are concerned with the national defense. There can be no adequate defense of the United States if we do not have a large body of men who are physically and mentally qualified to perform the functions which will be required of them. We learned during World War I, and it was confirmed in even more shocking fashion in World War II, that millions of our young men are not fit for such service. Of the 22,000,000 men between the ages of 18 and 32 years who were registered for military duty in World War II, 5,000,000 were deferred on essential occupational grounds; 5,000,000 of the remaining 17,000,000 were found unfit to join the armed services. In North Carolina, 227,600, or nearly 43 percent of the 530,800 men between the ages of 18 through 37 examined by August 1, 1945. were rejected. This percentage was far higher than the national average; in fact, only one State had a worse record. The defects most commonly found in North Carolina were musculoskeletalaffecting the muscles attached to bones as distinguished from the heart, intestines, and so forth-feet, mental deficiency, eyes, and certain heart disorders.

Mental deficiency was one of the most important causes for rejection and included educational deficiency, mental deficiency, and the specific diagnosis of morons, imbeciles, and idiots. What do these statistics mean? They mean that our present health program is inadequate. When I say our health program I mean the program not only in North Carolina but in the rest of the United States as well. The figures also indicate that we have failed to accomplish the ideal of spreading the benefits of education to all the people. This situation must not be allowed to continue. We cannot permit our reservoir of manpower for national defense to be so reduced by lack of adequate health and education programs. Neither is it fair for a man in Iowa, for example, to be drafted to serve in the armed forces, at considerable cost to himself, because a man in North Carolina has been deferred for illiteracy. Furthermore the existence within the population of such a large group of physically and mentally disqualified persons can result only in the reduced social efficiency of the Nation.

What is to be done about it? Some of you have undoubtedly heard me call for a national public health program. North Carolina could spend a greater portion of her revenue on health measures. She could take advantage of legislation already passed by the Congress and support all Federal legislation proposed for that purpose. The over-all solution to the education problem calls for the passage of a sound Federal aid for education bill by the Congress. In the meantime the States must do all that it is in their power to do to improve the status of education. North Carolina should not wait for the Federal Government to take action but should do what she can herself. I am delighted to hear that at the end of March of this year nearly 75,000 veterans in North Carolina were taking advantage of the provisions of Public Laws 16 and 346. Five and a half thousand disabled veterans were receiving aid in colleges, schools, on the farm, or on the job. Nearly 19,000 veterans were attending college under the GI bill; 13,000 were in other schools below the college level; more than 18,000 were in training on farms; and more than 19,000 were participating in on-the-job train-I sincerely hope that these men will realize the value of the training they are receiving and will see to it that their children have equal or better opportunities.

Let us now turn to a brief consideration of the defense issues other than a national health program and Federal aid to education which have been up for consideration during this session of the Congress. The most significant of these are the proposals outlined in the legislation we now consider, and the 70-group air force which this Congress set in motion some weeks ago.

The Selective Service Act of 1948 is one way by which our Nation would provide a sufficient supply of manpower for the armed services in order to insure an adequate national defense.

President Truman in his St. Patrick's Day message to the Congress explained the state of international affairs which makes preparedness necessary for the United States at this time. Secretary of State Marshall, appearing as a witness before the Senate Committee on Armed Services on the same day, declared:

We desire a state of affairs which would make repetitions of the fate of Hungary and Czechoslovakia, the intimidation of Finland, subversive operations in Italy and

France, and the cold-blooded efforts to destroy the Greek Government unlikely, bethey would definitely be fraught real danger to those who would attempt such

General Marshall and witnesses who followed him went on to point out that the present strength of the armed forces is inadequate for the national security due to the failure of the voluntary enlistment system, and that UMT, or in my opinion selective service, would fill the long-range need for adequate military strength at the lowest cost. Selective service would make the National Guard and the Organized Reserves fully effective by providing them with the necessary number of trained men.

There are those who believe that there is no need for building a new reserve of men, that we can simply call again upon the 15,000,000 veterans now in this country. Not only is this decidedly unfair to the veteran who has already given some of his best years to the service of his country, but it completely ignores the fact that this veteran reserve is being rapidly depleted as the men grow older. marry and gain dependents. Within a few years this reserve will have been thoroughly depleted and what shall we do then unless we make preparation now? In the meantime, diplomatic action to be effective must be backed by force. The bully is not impressed when his victim declares: "If you do not stop that right now I will hit you smack in . the face with this cream puff."

There are several other good arguments for selective service but I should like to mention just one more-one which is connected with the problem of health which I have already mentioned. Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, wartime director of the Selective Service System, recommends a year of training essentially for national preservation but including such secondary objectives as physical conditioning, physical rehabilitation, practice in healthful living, and training in democracy by having one place and 1 year when and where young Americans will meet in training.

By an overwhelming vote in both the House and the Senate, a 70-group air force has been authorized. It was over this issue that Secretary of Defense Forrestal and Secretary of the Air Force Symington differed. This difference between the two has been seized upon by the newspapers as indicating a total lack of cooperation within the National Military Establishment. This view is exaggerated. It is, on the contrary, an example of democracy at work, an example of a subordinate voicing his views even though he is well aware that they are not in accord with the beliefs of his superior. Secretary Forrestal is not opposed to the 70-group air force as such, but fears that "building up any one service without commensurate augmentation of its supporting sister services can be as dangerous as the neglect of such a service." Secretary Symington believes that balancing the Army, Navy, and Air Force should be subordinate to providing a sufficient number of the only adequate defense weapons now available to us.

The 70-group air force will require nearly 6,900 planes of various types. group is composed of as many as 30 bombers, requiring 9,000 men, or 75 fighters with a complement of 6,500 men. In addition to the bombers and fighters there will have to be a large number of troop carriers, trainers, reconnais-sance planes and so forth. Those who believe that the establishment of the 70group air force will eliminate the need for the draft or other means of supplying manpower may find themselves much mistaken. Life magazine for May 17 carried an estimate of the number of men it would take to operate and maintain a typical large overseas air base. Six groups of bombers would require 55,-000 men; 8 groups of fighters would require 48,000 men; 6 groups of miscellaneous planes would require 22,000 men. In addition, there would have to be an inner security force of 59,000 men, and a flank security force of 115,000 men. An Army supply base, including 100 harbor craft, would take 176,000 men. A Navy force of 15,000 men would be necessary to man the 300 ships required for transportation and supply. The total number of men required for such a base would be over 500,000. On this basis the 70-group air force would necessitate the services of more than 1,750,000 men. Support of such a program would also mean the development of a reserve of several thousand planes and adequate numbers of aircraft for the Air National Guard and the Air Reserve.

The monetary cost of such a program will eventually run into more than $7,000,000,000 a year. The effect on our economy will probably not be felt until about 1950 when the program gets into full stride. Then there may be fewer automobiles due to a shortage of steel for that purpose, fewer vacuum cleaners, fewer refrigerators, fewer houses and kitchen utensils which require aluminum. There may well be higher prices as the result of higher wages paid to lure workers into remobilization factories and the consequent reduction in the amount of civilian goods produced. In spite of this fact, we cannot say that the 70-group air force is either unwise or unnecessary. The price of freedom is never low, but neither can it be too high.

No survey of national defense would be complete without mention of atomic energy. On January 1, 1948, a report was released by the President's Air Policy Commission entitled "Survival in the Air Age"-otherwise known as the Fineletter This report recommended a strong Military Establishment-particularly a strong air force to protect the United States against new forms of aggression, chief among them being atomic The authors of the report stated frankly that they could not forecast definitely when such an attack might occur, but the conclusion they reached, after consulting a large number of estimates. was that other powers would have atomic weapons some time between 1951 and The new strategy of defense formulated by the Commission called for the building of an air arm capable of dealing with a possible atomic attack on this country by January 1, 1953. minimum force needed was estimated to be 12,400 modern planes organized into 70 combat groups, and 22 special squadrons supplemented by 27 National Guard groups and 34 groups of Air Reserves. The findings of this Commission were borne out later by the Senate Congressional Aviation Policy Board in its report released March 1, 1948. The recommendations of these two Boards provided a basis for Public Law 547, enacted May 21, 1948, which provides for appropriations for a 70-group air force and otherwise strengthens the Military Establishment.

The hope of averting an atomic war has recently been greatly dimmed by the collapse of the United Nations' efforts to reach an international working agreement. After more than 2 years of negotiations for world control of atomic energy, 7 countries in the 11-member Atomic Energy Commission decided there was no use talking about atomic control any longer until the U.S.S.R. changed its mind and was willing to accept the essential provisions of the majority plan. On May 7 the Commission made a report to the Security Council declaring that it had reached an impasse and recommending that the report be referred to the General Assembly at its next regular meeting, which is scheduled to take place in Paris this summer. The report and its recommendations were accepted, and the Commission was authorized to discontinue all further meetings for the

The need for a change in our defensive as well as our offensive strategy has recently been highlighted by an announcement of the United States Atomic Energy Commission that three "improved" atomic bombs have been successfully fired at Eniwetok. In this connection, we learn from an article in the New York Times of May 23, that Secretary Forrestal has "borrowed" Mr. Russell J. Hopley, president of the Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., to draw up a countrywide plan for civil defense. Mr. Hopley and his assistants hope to evolve a plan by the end of July under which the civil, or passive defense of the United States could be conducted in case of an atomic attack. The ideal pattern for civil defense is said to start with the principle of self-help. We are then told that an estimated 555,000 persons would be killed and a like number wounded if a single bomb were dropped on each of 37 cities of the United States having populations greater than 250,000. It is difficult to conceive of any plan which would be effective in the event of such atomic slaughter.

But let us turn from these frightening figures and suppose, for the sake of improving our spirits, that men and nations are able and willing to base their hopes for survival on the constructive rather than the destructive uses of atomic energy. Here are some of the heartening facts. A few weeks ago David Lilienthal, Chairman of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, announced that cobalt, a cheap and plentiful mineral, could, after irradiation in an atomic oven, be used just as effectively in the treatment of cancer as radium, an ex-tremely rare and costly material. Besides this and other medical uses of products of atomic energy, there is indication that the lot of the farmer will be improved. For instance, tracer atoms of phosphate allow plant chemists to learn what happens to phosphate in the soil, how it is taken up by the plant, where it goes in the plant, what happens as as a result of its presence there. may be some years before atomic energy is available as a source of industrial power but researchers have listed more than 1,000 potential industrial uses for atomic radiation. There are, then, phases of atomic energy which promise us a future of health, welfare, and human betterment. Let us pray that atomic energy is used in this fashion rather than for mass destruction.

In conclusion, let me leave with you these thoughts: The health and education of all our people are the basis of any sound system of national defense: enactment of a national health program and legislation for Federal aid to education is therefore necessary in the interests of national defense. Industrial production and scientific research and development are essential to an adequate defense and must be maintained at a high level. Let me state with emphasis, Mr. Chairman, that in my opinion the passage of H. R. 6401 is necessary to provide the necessary and minimum adequate manpower for the armed forces and their Reserve components, all of which must be kept strong while world conditions remain so sensitive and unsettled which today is undeniable.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Blatnik].

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my opposition to this draft bill, H. R. 6401, which is now under consideration. The adoption of this proposal to subject to conscription some two-thirds of our single, nonveteran men in the 19- to 26-year age group will mean the establishment of the first genuine peacetime draft in American history, and I am convinced that such unprecedented action represents a serious departure from American tradition and a violation of the principles of our democracy. I am thoroughly convinced that this measure is neither practical nor necessary, and I am going to vote against it.

I am opposed to this measure on several counts. One reason is that military conscription in time of peace is contrary to our American traditions, and the establishment of such a set-up poses a serious threat to our democratic way of life. Over 150 years ago Thomas Jeffersonthe great apostle of democracy and author of the Declaration of Independence-warned our Nation that military conscription, large peacetime armies, and militarism are extremely dangerous to democratic governments--that militarism leads to war and loss of freedom. Dr. Arnold J. Toynbee, one of the most popular historians of our times, in his monumental study of the rise and fall of past civilizations, states: "Militarism has been by far the commonest cause of the break-down of civilization." The leading American historian and political scientist, Charles A. Beard, has expressed the same sentiments.

In my opinion, it would be a serious mistake for the United States to adopt the peacetime draft. We cannot adopt ways that have corrupted and destroyed other civilizations and expect to escape the same fate. I might say that we have already witnessed trends to militarism in this country during the last 2 years. Today the military is extending its control over our democratic institutions, and the result has been the gradual weakening of one of the most important safeguards of democracy—civilian control of government.

Let us examine the record. One index of the influence of the military in government is the amount of money appropriated for military purposes. The record shows that 54 percent of the 1947 Federal budget was appropriated for the military and agencies relating to the military. An even greater amount was appropriated for 1948, when some $18,000,000,000-66.3 percent of the total budget-was granted to the various war agencies. Over $31,000,000,000-79 percent of the total 1949 budget-is for war or the effects of war. About $14,-000,000,000 of this goes for direct military expenditures, or more than $85 a piece per person in the United States, and 12 times more than was spent for military purposes in 1940.

The increasing size of our military budget, however, is only one measure of the growing influence of the military in our national life. Another index of this trend is the growing number of admirals and generals finding their way into key governmental positions. For example, Admiral Leahy is President Truman's chief adviser, General Marshall is Secretary of State, and Marshall's chief advisers are Brigadier General Carter, West Point's John Peurifoy, and General Hilldring. Gen. Lucius Clay controls Germany and General MacArthur runs Japan. Ten of the 20 ranking executives in the State Department are military men. Many of our top diplomatic posts are held by military men-Gen. Bedell Smith is Ambassador to Russia, Admiral Kirk is in Belgium, General Holcomb represents us in South Africa, just to mention a few.

In other words, the recent trend has been toward more and more generals and admirals in Government, and their increasing influence in political affairs. This pattern becomes doubly disturbing when you couple it with the Wall Street infiltration into Government. For example, Defense Secretary Forrestal, ECA Ambassador at Large Harriman, former Secretary of Commerce, and the Treasury Secretary Snyder all belong to the Wall Street banking circle. This combination of military and Wall Street influence makes for reactionary politics—at home and abroad—as their logical consequences.

I maintain that the adoption of peacetime draft legislation would present a serious threat to our democratic government and our precious American liberties. Militarism is gaining a strong foothold in America—the military is exercising ever growing influence in Government, politics, in our schools and universities, and in control of atomic and other scientific research. The military is also exercising tremendous influence over American foreign affairs to the detriment of peaceful international relations and world peace. Now the militarists and their Wall Street allies are attempting to extend their influence by seeking the adoption of the peacetime draft.

I am opposed to surrendering any more power to the military crowd. I believe that draft legislation in times of peace is a denial of the spirit of the United Nations in that it rejects international cooperation in favor of unilateral action as the basis of international security.

Those who are supporting this measure base their whole case on the claim that this conscription program is necessary to our national defense. An examination of the facts, however, show that the United States is today the strongest military power in the world. The authorized strength of the Regular armed forces is 1,703,000 men, and the actual strength of the Regular Army, Navy, and Air Force units plus the Organized Reserves adds up to nearly 3,000,000 men. In addition, we have the strongest Navy in the world, and a monopoly on the atomic bomb.

It is true that our Regular forces are not at full strength because enlistment quotas fall below monthly quotas. The proponents of this bill are using this as a justification for a return to the draft; but they ignore the fact that the War Department has raised the enlistment standards far above prewar levels, and is rejecting 50 percent of all volunteers at the present time. I fail to see the logic of drafting boys when the Army is turning down volunteers by the thousands every month.

Furthermore, there are more practical methods of obtaining the manpower needed for our military needs. Enlistments in the Regular armed forces can be stimulated by offering additional inducements for volunteers, such as better pay, and more opportunities for promotion and education. The suggestion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] some months ago to pay a $1,000 bonus to all those who complete a 2-year enlistment, and $1,500 for 3 years, would encourage many young men to enter the armed forces. In addition, the Army would become more attractive to our youth if some of its undemocratic features were eliminated-we should abolish the special privileges now enjoyed by commissioned officers, and the caste system which it creates. We should also eliminate Jim Crowism, and all other forms of racial discrimination in the Army and Navy. In other words, the military crowd in America have ample means of securing a sufficient number of volunteers to fill their monthly quotas, but they prefer conscription because it enhances their prestige and power at the expense of democratic government.

Just to make the record clear, I have always supported adequate appropriations for national defense, and I intend to continue to do so. During this session, I have voted for military appropriations totaling nearly $14,000,000,000—the largest peacetime military budget in American history. I have supported the building of a 70-group air force, and I have always advocated the expansion of the National Guard and the Organized Reserves. I have repeatedly urged that additional inductments be offered for enlistments, and that the caste system and racial discrimination be eliminated in the Army and Navy, as a means of attracting more volunteers.

We have been told here today that voluntary enlistments and Reserve training cannot do the job of providing the trained men necessary to man our country's defenses. I wonder if we have given these voluntary programs a real chance to prove their worth. This Congress has been most generous with appropriations for the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force, appropriating the $14,000,000,000 I have mentioned, but there has been no time to demonstrate whether the additional facilities this money can provide will do the job.

There is no question but that the various Reserve units have had a hard time during the past year in holding their members because of poor facilities.

Recently I paid a visit to the headquarters of the Fifth Infantry Battalion of the United States Marine Corps Reserve here in Washington. This battalion is located a few blocks away from the Capitol, in the old Boys Club building. There is a tiny room for inside drill which is too crowded and cramped for any real exercise. It isn't even large enough for a basketball court. No wonder that many former marines who enlisted in the Organized Reserves are dropping out.

The Fifth Infantry Battalion is one of the famous Marine outfits. The Marines have always preferred volunteers, and in the early part of the war the men who fought at Guadalcanal and Tarawa were 100 percent volunteers, and a large proportion from the Organized Reserve. A great many of the Fifth Infantry men, who were called up in April, 1940, were among the gallant defenders of Guadalcanal

I am convinced that the provision of better facilities for volunteer groups like this Marine battalion, and for the Army, Navy, and Air Force Organized Reserve, will pay real dividends and prove a workable substitute for the proposed draft.

But this military-conscription bill now under consideration, Mr. Chairman, is a measure to militarize America rather than to promote national defense. It is a proposal designed to regiment our Nation rather than protect it. It is not a desirable means of obtaining military manpower, and it is contrary to America's democratic heritage. For these reasons, I have no honest course but to oppose it.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may desire to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. Doug-LAS].

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, the Army has asked for a draft of our young men. It is the job of this Congress to determine whether or not the draft is essential to obtain the authorized strength of the Army. A draft in peacetime is a very serious matter. To enter upon a peacetime-conscription program is to depart from the tradition that has been the foundation and bulwark of our freedom.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot take this step in good conscience unless it has been irrefutably proved that there is no alternative.

Secretary of the Air Force Symington and General Spaatz both told the House Armed Services Committee on April 13 that they did not feel selective service was necessary to bring the Air Force up to requirements. Secretary of the Navy Sullivan and Admiral Denfeld testified that the Navy could get its authorized strength without a draft.

I have seen a Navy chart which shows that in June 1947 they were accepting volunteers at the rate of 5,500 men a month. In July volunteers were being accepted at the rate of 12,500 a month. Volunteer recruitment fell back to 11,500 a month in August, but rose to 15,000 a month in September. In January 1948 it rose to over 19,000 per month. The volunteers exceeded the appropriation the Congress had authorized for recruitment.

The Air Force has had little trouble in obtaining volunteers for numerous reasons:

(a) Its recruiting drive has never

(b) It has something specific to offer in training young men for highly skilled trades.

(c) It gives better pay and better living conditions than the Army.

Until the Army reforms itself it will never be able to compete with the other services. I can see no reason otherwise among the services which would make it more difficult for the Army to recruit.

I cannot help but feel that, after serious study of the hearings, the Army has failed not in its efforts, but through its lack of effort to obtain volunteers.

General Bradley told the House Armed Services Committee on April 14 that if our Reserve units were filled up with men with proper training we believe we could reduce the size of our Regular Army.

General Evans, executive director of the Reserve Officers Association, told the Senate Armed Services Committee on April 1:

We talk of doing things, we talk of spending money and the possibility of legislation, but nowhere do we hear of the possibility of doing something to maintain, revitalize, keep intact our Reserve which we have at the present time. A 2,400,000 Reserve is no small-sized Army and Navy.

The Army has neglected the volunteer Reserves and the National Guard in order to get a compulsory program. It is all very well and proper for the Army to ask for a draft, but it is the duty of the Members, Mr. Chairman, as custodians of the people's liberty to evaluate this request calmly and objectively in the light of the needs of the Republic.

I am convinced that the Army could get more volunteers if it really wanted to do so

The hearings show that of the 240,000 men the Army says it needs and can only get through the draft a very small percentage will be sent overseas. General Bradley on March 25 told the Senate committee that only 13,000 additional combat troops and 1,000 service troops would be sent overseas if the Army increased its strength by 240,000 men and got a peacetime draft.

If this is true, I ask why do we not enlarge the WAC? The last war proved how efficient women could be in military jobs, taking over all the clerical work, radar plotting, ack-ack batteries, the supply services, the many jobs which the Army itself calls housekeeping—not kitchen work. Women have shown eagerness to get into uniform. Why not let them, since we need them? Every Wac enlisted gives the Army a man for another job.

If there was a sincere desire on the part of the Army to obtain volunteers without the aid of the draft many ideas suggest themselves to me which the Army could initiate. It could try to make army life as normal as possible, that is, like civilian life. It could provide decent housing near posts so men could live with their families. It could permit men to live off post and come to work every morning as they would on any other job—b and c would help get enough mechanics for the air force. Mechanics do not have to be as young as pilots or infantrymen.

The Army could keep promises when enlistees are allowed to choose branch of service and type of duty. It could abolish "chicken" regulations which make post life unbearable. Reveille could be at a useful hour instead of a traditional one. Furloughs, passes, parade regulations could be liberalized. Martinets could be prevented from ruining the Army.

These smaller reasons for opposing the draft are based on the belief that the Army by reforming itself could attract enough young, intelligent men to fill its present needs. The Army has not yet been able to prove otherwise. Let the harmy make the reforms and see if it is not true. Then, if it is not, let us think about compulsory military service.

If men are to be drafted, why not women, too? And above all, why not industry, too—at least to the extent of providing all goods to the armed services at absolute cost. Not one cent of profit. No cost-plus. If young men must give their youth and their lives, then the least the older men can give is their profits.

If we pass this peacetime draft we might as well recognize the fact that it is not a temporary measure. It is one with which we will be saddled for many years to come, with the danger of our country becoming a hugh military state dominated by military ideas and military people.

How can we take this step unless we have honestly tried every voluntary means of obtaining manpower needed to bring our Army up to authorized strength?

At this point it is well to remember history. In every nation where compulsory peacetime conscription has been adopted freedom of speech and action has been jeopardized or lost altogether.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley].

LEST WE FORGET

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the fall of 1941 during the Seventy-seventh Congress, legislation came before the House to extend the draft to 18- and 19-year-old boys. During the course of the debate, quite an effort was made to amend the bill so as to guarantee these boys at least a year's training before going into combat. The War Department and the Chief of Staff objected to this amendment, asking that the determination of the period of training be left to their good judgment and assuring the Congress that sufficient training would be given, as nearly a year as possible, and that the units in which the boys would be incorporated would have thorough training before combat. On the strength of that assurance many Members voted for the extension to include these young men.

My own disillusionment came a short time later when a young man from my district was killed in France just 5 months after he was inducted. No Chief of Staff or Secretary of War could tell me that he had been sufficiently trained or that the loss of his life might not be traceable to that fact. There were many other examples of men killed shortly after their induction, so apparently the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War talked to the Congress with tongue in cheek. I wrote to the Secretary of War of the circumstances in this particular case, and after some delay I had a long letter, saying practically nothing, but from which I learned that by their assurances when the legislation was being considered they meant that the units would have a year's training, not the individual soldier.

I am just recounting this now to show that one should accept with a grain of salt a lot of the promises of the War Department. Another thing I remember is that during the war many young men came to me and told me that their officers had forbidden them to write to their Congressman. This may not have been on instruction from headquarters, but it was done. What these officers did was to deny these citizens in the Army the right to petition the Congress. Why should these men be denied the right of any other citizen just because they were in the Army? Will this sort of thing be done again? Some measures should be taken to instruct the officers that the soldier has every right to talk to his Congressman or write to him if he pleases.

I expect to support this legislation, but I do it with a great deal of reluctance because I am not convinced, as many others are not, that the War Department has done everything it could do to build up its strength through voluntary enlistments. Certainly the Congress has granted its every request and made voluntary recruitment as easy as possible, in the hope that our strength could be built in that way. But that method has failed, and we have arrived at the point where the Congress now has to pass legislation to permit the Army to go into the homes and seize the young men again. I know there are many Americans who feel that the War Department has fallen down on its efforts to build up the forces by voluntary enlistment, and now with the draft the people must pay for the War Department's shortcomings.

Under selective service in this last war many injustices were worked when young men were taken from homes where they were needed and their induction created a hardship. When once they were taken, there was scarcely any recourse. The appeal boards almost never reversed the orders of the local boards. In several deserving cases, it was necessary for me to go to the director in the State in order to have the local-board action countermanded. Appealing to Washington was of no use. There was one instance of a local board persecuting a family for personal reasons. Other injustices were committed, but they were upheld by the appeal board. I wonder if we will have this sort of thing again, If we are, the public will know about it. More consideration should be given to the people in this, for it is a terrible thing to give authority to the War Department, or any other department to draft young men out of their homes for Army service. It is about the most ruthless thing that I know of, and the possession of such authority should not be misused, but exercised with wisdom and discretion.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Crow] may have permission to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to support this bill. In doing so, I realize that traditionally we are departing from a long established policy of depending upon a peacetime military establishment composed of volunteers.

As a member of the House Committee on the Armed Services, full information as to world conditions and the threat to universal peace was laid before us by responsible spokesman of our Government. I want to emphasize that it was not the military alone but spokesmen for nonmilitary agencies that stressed the need for the immediate strengthening of our national defenses.

As a veteran of two wars, I learned to appreciate the value of an adequate national defense. My memory takes me back to 1917, when we were pushed into World War I totally unprepared. Likewise, I think of December 7, 1941, when in the matter of a few moments we found ourselves involved in World War II.

On both of these occasions we soon realized the inadequacy of our national defense and the value of preparedness. No one can deny the fact that we depended upon our allies to hold the front lines while we moved into high speed in perfecting a program of national defense. At this point, let me add that as a result of our unpreparedness many American lives were sacrificed.

When World II concluded we had the greatest fighting machine ever assembled. But overnight demands for demobilization caused that war machine to crumble until today it is a mere skeleton.

While we were demobilizing and preaching peace on earth, good will toward men, Russia, our ally of World War II, continued to maintain, modernize, and expand her military defenses. Without going into detail, today Russian military forces are strategically distributed on the continents of Europe and Asia in a manner that threatens the peace of the world.

It is not my intention to become involved in our problem of foreign relations with other nations or the delaying tactics of Russia at the peace table. But I do want to point out that it is the blunders and mistakes in the world of diplomacy that often overnight can plunge a nation into war. At that moment the need of an adequate national defense is imperative.

This bill is designed to provide our armed forces with the necessary manpower that will permit building our armed forces to the point where they can be expanded within a reasonable timeto meet any national emergency.

While we are living in a period of peace, it is common knowledge that dark clouds have gathered on the world horizon. With such a situation demanding that this Nation be equipped with an adequate national defense and the fact manpower is needed to reach such an objective, in my opinion this bill is necessary.

By this legislation, the responsibility of serving in the armed forces is not placed upon a few but becomes the duty of all young men between the ages of 19 and 25, who are physically qualified. The provisions of this bill are a guaranty that the rich and the poor will be treated alike.

For months we have heard the statement that voluntary enlistments can provide the reservoir of manpower needed for our national defense. this question has been discussed quite freely, as a Member of Congress, I feel I cannot discharge my obligation to the American people by taking the world of armchair strategists, regardless of how sincere they may be.

To the contrary, I prefer to follow a great soldier-Gen. Omar Bradley, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, who, in testifying before the House Committee on the Armed Services, cited the urgent need for this legislation. The statement of General Bradley emphasized the inability of the Army to recruit foot soldiers for the Ground Forces. His statement alone on this point is sufficient evidence to warrant the enactment of this

Like many Members of Congress, this bill does not entirely satisfy me. For that reason, when the opportunity presents itself, it is my intention to offer a series of perfecting amendments, which I hope will have your favorable consideration.

Three of my amendments concern the National Guard, which we all recognize as a strong arm of our national defense.

My first amendment concerns section 5, paragraph D, page 12, lines 1 to 5, in-This amendment provides that a young man who enlists in the National Guard either before or after this legislation becomes a law, shall be permitted to serve in the National Guard. Under the present language of the bill, after it becomes law, a young man cannot enlist in the National Guard.

The second amendment concerns section 19, paragraph G, page 48, lines 8 to 11 inclusive, and deals with the defi-nition of "organized unit." My amendment provides a definition so that exemption from the draft will not be on the basis of the amount of pay received by the individual, but rather on the amount of training the man actually receives.

The third amendment concerns section 22, paragraph G, page 49, lines 3 to 16 inclusive. My amendment will rewrite this statement of policy to conform to the provisions made in the Selective Service Act of 1940, which guarantees that the National Guard will be trained and equipped, ready to be used in case of emergency, and not left standing on the sidelines as could be the case if the present language of the bill remains unaltered.

These three amendments have the endorsement of the National Guard Association of the United States, who join me in the hope they will be adopted as an aid in maintaining the National Guard at its proper strength and protecting its functions as a reserve component.

As I said in my opening remarks, I am in favor of this bill. I think it would be a mistake for us to pull our punches at this time when a two-fisted national defense is our best guaranty for world peace and our own national security.

Mr. CROW. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to discuss this very important matter, the drafting of our boys during peacetime. This is a move that has never been necessary in the history of our country and we have engaged in quite a few wars, with what I believe could be called a perfect record; we have never been defeated.

I would like to ask the question, "Why is it necessary to draft our young men, now that World War II is over?" I ask that question advisedly for it seems to me that even the heads of our present Administration have different ideas on the subject. President Truman on Sunday night said:

There is no danger of war, ERP is having a wonderful effect on the peoples of Europe and peace is certain.

But only yesterday General Bradley appeared before the Appropriations Committee and said:

The world situation which dictated the necessity for this expanded military program has not changed. We must still measure the capabilities of our nations without trying to guess what they will do.

General Bradley is merely pointing out that the military must look at the darkest picture that can be painted, but for him to say that the picture has not changed does not make sense. We all know that things are not as bad as they have been painted.

I would like to discuss the possibility of Russia starting an armed conflict with the United States. That would be the last thing in the world she would want to do. Could Russia supply her armies in case of another war? We all know that she could not last a year without the factories of the United States resupplying her with equipment. Germany would have completed the campaign in Russia with ease if we had not been successful in getting our equipment to Russia in time, and sometimes I think that might have been a good solution, let Hitler clean up the Communist Government in Russia and save our equipment to wipe out Hitler and Mussolini. Then we would not have had the trouble of trying to complete our moves for peace in the world with all of the dictators wiped out.

We ended the war winners but we started the appeasing of Stalin and permitted him to move into Poland and other Balkan countries, and what did we Sent him a note of protest on the one day and recognized his Communist Government on the next. Now that he keeps on his political moves and gets into Czechslovakia, we finally feel that we had better arm to the hilt, and stop the robber. It is like locking the stable door after the horse was stolen. There is still no more danger of war today than there was when Stalin moved into Poland. What this administration needed was the backbone to stand up and tell Stalin where to stop.

I remember when I was overseas and was finally told that I had enough points to go home, I told my boss, General Englehart, that he should not be sending me home but we should keep our armies intact and tell Stalin right then what he was going to do toward peace and we should have kept that big stick over his head to see that he complied with our requests.

Mr. Chairman, the people back home did not see it that way and our armies were broken up. The National Security Act required that when the men were discharged they were to be assigned to Reserve units and kept in the Reserve until the emergency was declared over and peace treaties completed. Was this done by our armed services? No, the men were permitted to volunteer for the Reserves and they were informed that they would be assigned to organized units. Some 1,500,000 men signed up for the Reserve and even to this date only a very small number were ever contacted and assigned to any units. Most of the men are unassigned or members of conglomerate groups of the Reserves. It has been a peculiar thing to me that the Regular Army has been so negligent in the forming of Reserve groups to make up a strong national defense. Here we have about 15,000,000 men, all war trained and ready and able to don a uniform at any time, if necessary, and the Army decides that the only thing they are interested in is UMT and the draft. I have been told by men in high places that they were not interested in the old Reserves, what they wanted were the 18-year-old boys for their Reserves.

The Regular Army has spent your money and the taxpayers' money for all manner of propaganda for the purpose of selling UMT and to me it is the most ridiculous idea of a way to secure an adequate national defense. The UMT program even specifies that the 18-year-old boys would be trained in all lines even up to the division commander. I know that some of you men who have served in the armed forces will appreciate that. I personally believe that it was nothing but a plan to try and keep some of the stars on the shoulders of some of the Regular Army officers.

Chairman, here we are today spending $11,000,000,000 for our national security and the top brass admits that we have no security. Someone should be required to answer for that, if we do not have any defense, where has the $11,-000,000,000 gone? What rat hole are they using? I think I can answer for part of it. When the end of a fiscal year comes near orders are issued to spend all of the money in your budget, whether you need anything or not. Get rid of the money or Congress will cut our appropriation next year. I think it is high time that some method is devised to put a stop to such waste, when so much of their supplies are in the hands of the WAA and still they buy. This information was given to me by a Government employee very recently, and he stated that it disgusted him. I think that our committees in Congress should start some investigations of our own to bring out some of these facts.

Mr. Chairman, I was discussing the Reserves and I want to emphasize the importance of the Reserve and National Guard units as a real national defense. If we had not had our National Guard divisions and our about 160,000 Reserve officers at the start of the last war our Regular Army would have been lost. I served overseas for a period of 41 months and I served in several headquarters, the last one being the Pacific Ocean Area Headquarters, under General Richard-son, and at no time were there more than 3 percent Regular Army officers assigned to it. The other 97 percent were Reserve, National Guard, and AUS officers. In the other headquarters there were only 1 percent Regular Army. Now does that show that there are some Reserve officers, National Guard and AUS officers, who are available with proper training under war conditions to be assigned to organized units and be ready for any eventuality? I believe that the Army has taken the wrong position toward the Reserve.

I am pleased to read the minority report on H. R. 6401 and I wish to state that I agree with it 100 percent. I am glad to see that General Evans, the head of the Reserve Officers Association has expressed the same sentiments as I have outlined above. I do not believe that any draft of any kind would be necessary if they had complied with the law and built up the Reserves and National Guard. In fact if they had only encouraged instead of discouraged the Reserves who are patriotic enough to want to remain in training and be ready if they are needed in the future. I am a colonel in the Ordnance Reserve and I feel that I could still go out and do my job in the Ordnance if necessary.

Mr. Chairman, once a man becomes a member of the Reserve he will be so interested in the work he will continue to be a Reserve and will remain in it as long as there are training courses and they are kept interesting. I have been a member of the ROA since 1925, and we were very much interested in the work. I started as a second lieutenant and when the emergency came in 1940 I had worked up to the grade of major, and when called we were all glad that we had kept up to date on our work because we felt we were capable of handling anything that might come up. I am sure the Reserves of today will be the same type of enlisted men and officers and will make you the strongest national security that any nation could organize at this time, including Russia.

I am opposed to breaking up the period of education of our boys and if you do not think we are already doing that you should have been with me last Sunday when seven college boys were in my home and if you could have heard the questions that were asked of me, you would have realized that the youth of our Nation are so confused and disturbed that they are not able to study. They all feel that they might just as well quit and join up and get it over with, so why study. Some of the boys had very poor marks for the first time in their lives. I blame the Regular Army and the propagandists who are trying to paint the ugliest picture that can be painted.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the eyes of every mother in the Nation are on us today and there will be many heartbreaks when this day is over if this bill is passed, as I expect it will be, if the vote in the other body is any criterion. We all know that all mothers will gladly lend their sons to their country in time of emergency and many will bravely withstand the many sacrifices that must come out of the ravages of war, but when their is no apparent emergency, no war in sight, it is most difficult for them to believe that this is a real emergency, and not just a trumped up emergency to save the New Deal in an election year. Everyone is aware that the New Deal thrives on emergencies and the western nonpolitical trip of the President's show how far they will go, at the taxpayers expense, to try to win their point.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the proper solution to the problem of personnel could be solved by the proper action on the part of the Army. They have increased the I. Q. rating of enlisted personnel from 55 to 80 and this to me is ridiculous. There are many jobs in the Army that can be done by boys without an I. Q. of 80. I realize that some jobs must be held by scientists but they are few and far between, there are still many others that can be performed by the lower I. Q. men. I believe that the Army could reduce their requirements to 60 and get many good men. In fact they are refusing to take the men every day. I also believe that the Army could be made more inviting by having better food facilities for their troops overseas. Refrigeration is very important to the stomach of the fighting man. During the last war in the Pacific, the Navy always had room for reefers for the Navy units but not for the Army. We had to eat the canned foods and they on their ships would have steaks and ice cream. Even the Navy units who were landed on an island base carried their reefers. These sound like small items but they are the main point when you talk of the morale of the men and I believe that it is part of the solution in getting men to join the Army rather than the Navy.

I feel that the Army should go to work on the solution of this problem, at least as hard as they have worked to try and sell the country UMT, and maybe they could have had a solution by this time. The money would be spent for a better

In conclusion, I believe that the draft should be adopted as the last resort, and, to my way of thinking, we have not given the matter of enlistments a fair trial or enough energy to say that we have reached the end of our string and the draft is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) this act may be cited as the "Selective Service Act of 1948."

(b) The Congress declares that an adequate armed strength must be achieved and maintained to insure the security of this Nation.

(c) The Congress further declares that such armed strength, to be adequate, requires an increase at the earliest practicable date in the number of persons on active service in the armed forces to not to exceed the manpower strengths authorized in section 2 of this act.

(d) The Congress further declares that if at any time such requisite manpower strengths are not attained and maintained by voluntary means, the national security requires that they be provided through a system of compulsory selective service.

(e) The Congress further declares that in a free society the obligations and privileges of such service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selecton as hereinafter provided.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Towa?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I discussed this matter with the Speaker and the floor leaders. It is our intention to let the amendments run just as freely as possible, but there is a great desire to finish the bill as soon as possible. So I must say to my good friend and former colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs that I must object to the request for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I will quote also from the Detroit meeting of the Ordnance Association some remarks of General McNarney, Commanding General of the Air Matériel Command.

Several years would be required to tool up for proper production because of the weakened state of the aviation industry.

If war occurred today, the Air Force combat groups would be composed primarily of planes that were on the drawing boards prior to Pearl Harbor.

In the forty-eighth annual edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica I found an article just off the press by Brig. Gen. Edwin L. Sibert, Assistant Director of our Central Intelligence Group. I was interested in seeing what he had to say about Russia on equipment. I quote:

The Soviet Union spent more than $1,225,-000,000 in 1947 on military strength. An additional $9,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000 was spent on new equipment. A considerable proportion of the allotment to research was spent on atom-bomb development. More than 500 German scientists worked on the development of new and improved weapons, particularly guided missiles, tanks, and aircraft. A new tank, probably the largest in the world, was developed.

In going over General Eisenhower's final report of the Chief of Staff, United States Army, to Secretary of the Army, dated February 7, 1948, I will quote certain parts that I thought were very important. The first is found on page 8:

Many lessons of the last war are available for the design of a defense pattern: The necessity for unified direction of all combat forces in war; the strategic role of the air arm; the need for accurate military, economic, and political intelligence; the necessity of eliminating the costly industrial time lag between mobilization and the application of significant military effort; the necessity for ready Reserve units and a reservoir of trained men; the dependence of the United States for many raw materials on external sources and the consequent need for stock piling adequate reserves of critical items essential to a defense program.

Again, over on page 19:

Widespread dispersion of factories or the establishment of underground facilities is an obvious remedy. However, the economic, social and political obstacles in the way of mass dispersion are so numerous and stupendous as to make an accomplishment practically impossible.

Then I was interested in an article in Factory Management for May 1948, by Robert Magidoff, McGraw-Hill World News correspondent who was expelled from Russia on April 15 of this year. I will not take the time to quote those extracts, but I do wish that the Members of the House would read them. I insert them as part of my remarks so that you will have some idea of what Russia has done to disperse and spread out back of the Ural Mountains their industrial development:

Russia is producing several times the volume of war weapons that the United States is turning out. For example, the Soviets, according to United States Army testimony, are producing 12 times as many combat aircraft as we are building.

And, more important, they are sacrificing their civilian economy to a large extent to multiply munitions-producing capacity.

It would be a fatal error to accept Russia's low standard of living as indicating a comparably low war potential. Russia's war potential is very much greater than her low standard of living might lead Americans to believe.

The building up of huge new industrial centers in Russia's interior-beyond reach, the Russians hope, of American planes carrying atomic bombs. More than half of her current industrial investment is now going into these new centers, many beyond the Urals.

Much of this vast decentralization movement is already complete. Some 1,300 plants and 15,000,000 workers and their families were shifted eastward during the war. Most of them have remained there. By 1950, half of all Russia's steel and coal will come from the East-where only one-third did before the war. Shifts in other industries are compar-

Yet our own Chief of Staff said that was too vast a project for us to undertake.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DURHAM. Since the gentleman has referred to this report, in that report it is also stated that Russia has 3,800,000 men in her army and the United States has 670,000. Is that not correct?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DURHAM. That is a vast differ-

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. There is quite a difference. I must say they are certainly carrying out a balanced program on some points we are completely over-

What is the condition in our own country? I am leading up here to a situation that has developed in the Eightieth Congress, something you are going to have to carry home and explain to your people. As I have stated above, General Bradley and General Mc-Narney have told us we do not have adequate and balanced arms and ammunition for the armed forces to be raised through the draft as presently planned. In the Committee on Appropriations Secretary Krug, on April 29, regarding stock piles said.

Frankly, I will let the committee know that military strategic stock piles don't exist.

He is talking about America.

We have a few items that are not important, but on the extremely important, critical materials, we have virtually nothing in the stock pile.

In commercial use we are pinched in practically every way, and we will even be more pinched with the increase in productivity activity that must come to meet this heavy production program for foreign aid and the defense program.

The foregoing situation makes the action of the Rules Committee extremely illogical in bringing before the House the bill, H. R. 6401, which proposes to draft men into military service in peacetime. and on the same day disapproving and refusing to bring before Congress the Russell bill, H. R. 6623, for national mineral development and conservation, which has for its purpose the building of a healthy mining industry and the building of our stockpile of strategic and critical materials pursuant to Public Law 520 of the Seventy-ninth Congress. As I stated in my speech which appears on page A3864, we must face the present situation in international affairs with sounder logic as to our own preparedness. If war is upon us, the responsible leaders in our Government should be severely punished for America's failure to preserve and produce an adequate supply of weapons for our defense and an adequate stockpile of strategic and critical materials for the making of new and superior weapons. Their total failure to do these things and their total failure to disperse our own postwar industrial development in this atomic age completely discredit the claim of the proponents of compulsory military service that the enactment of H. R. 6401 is necessary or logical at this time.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Javirs: On page 2, line 11, strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "and without discrimination in selection or service, or segregation on account of race, creed, color, or national origin."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane, and therefore should not be considered at this point.

Mr. JAVITS. May I be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from New York.

JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, the Mr. amendment was offered at that point in the bill which declares the policy of Congress, and the bill itself provides that service should be shared in accordance with a fair and just system of selection. I respectfully submit that the amendment I have offered states in more specific terms what is a fair and just system of selection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's argument simply sustains what I have said. This amendment is absolutely not germane to this section of the bill and has no place in it. Therefore, I submit that my point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Case of South Dakota). The Chair calls attention to the fact that the amendment is directed to subparagraph (e), which reads:

The Congress further declares that in a free society the obligations and privileges of such service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selection as hereinafter provided.

The amendment inserts a semicolon and adds the following language:

and without discrimination in selection or service or segregation on account of race, creed, color, or national origin.

The Chair is of the opinion that the language proposed by the amendment clearly follows the suggestion of a fair and just system in the declaration of policy. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, there is bound to be a considerable amount of discussion about the issue just raised by my amendment to the declaration of policy in this bill. I can think of no more appropriate place to have that discussion than right in the declaration of

I served in the Army of the United States, as did so many other Members of the Congress, as an officer in the operations branch. We were taught that it was proper to order what, where, and when, but never how. Therefore when I read this bill to try to decide where this issue of discrimination and segregation ought to be raised-because I am firmly convinced that if we are to have a citizens' army, which is the basic rationale of this bill, it must be a citizens' army with discrimination or segregation excised-I felt it ought to be in the declaration of policy. When the Congress has declared the policy of the United States, for both military and civil officers to follow, then we can of right expect compliance in the administration of selective service.

I might say now that I shall offer at a later point in the bill an amendment to set up a committee composed of representatives from the Senate and House Committees on Armed Services, Foreign Affairs, Appropriations, and Education and Labor, which will be empowered to watch that the civil, rather than the military, remains dominant in the military policy of the United States. The text of this amendment follows:

tions accordingly:

"SEC. 21. (a) There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Military Policy (hereinafter referred to as the committee) to be composed of 18 members, as follows: (1) Three members who are members of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate, two from the majority and one from the minority, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; (2) two members who are members of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, one from the majority and one from the minority, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee: (3) two members from the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, one from the majority and one from the minority, to be appointed by the chairman; (4) two members from the Labor and Public Welfare Committee of the Senate, one from the majority and one from the minority, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; (5) three members who are members of the Committee on Armed Services of the House, two from the majority and one from the minority, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; (6) two members who are members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, one from the majority and one from the minority, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; (7) two members from the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, one from the majority and one from the minority, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; (8) two members from the Education and Labor Committee of the House, one from the majority and one from the minority, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee.

"A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The committee shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members.

"(b) It shall be the function of the committee to make a continuous study of the military policy of the United States with respect to (1) its capability to enable the United States to discharge its international responsibilities; (2) the dominance of civilcontrol in the military policy; (3) the training and orientation in citizenship of the personnel of the armed forces; and (4) the participation of personnel of the armed forces in the foreign and domestic affairs of the United States, and to review the progress achieved in the execution and administration of the military policy of the United States.

"Upon request the committee shall aid the several standing committees of the Con-gress having legislative jurisdiction over the military policy of the United States and shall make reports to the Senate and House of Representatives from time to time concerning the results of its studies together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable. The Director, at the request of the committee, shall consult with the committee from time to time with respect to the actions of the committee.

"(c) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this subsection.

"(d) The committee is authorized to appoint and, without regard to the Classifica-tion Act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians and organizations thereof, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable.

"(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate on vouchers signed by the chairman."

I served as Government appeal-agent of a draft board in the course of the first months of the draft before I went into Army service myself. In that capacity I interviewed hundreds of Negro inductees, as my board was right in the heart of a district largely composed of Negro families. Man after man said to me, "I want to serve my country. I love the United States for everything it has given to me. and for the opportunities which it gives me, but I have this gnawing feeling that in some parts of the country, and for some reasons which I cannot understand, I am put down as a second-class citizen. That is something that worries me and bothers me very much." I said to those men from my own experience that much had been and would be accomplished to make this not so, and that in addition they had the constitutional right, a Godgiven right of every American, to seek and to fight for change.

We are here in Congress to see that inductees who are of a minority race, creed, or color should not have this gnawing feeling when they are called upon to serve the country equally with other citizens. I believe we can do that, and do it effectively by stating the policy, by setting forth clearly and precisely in the declaration of policy which precedes everything else in the bill, that there will be no discrimination in selection or service, or segregation on grounds of race, creed, color or national origin. This is where I think we ought to have this question considered and decided.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. Yes.

Mr. COLMER. Is the gentleman in sympathy with the over-all objectives of this legislation? Does he expect to support it?

Mr. JAVITS. If the gentleman will permit me to continue, I think I will make that very clear.

Mr. COLMER. I wanted to ask that question as preliminary to another question.

Mr. JAVITS. I will make that clear. and if I had more time, I would be glad to yield further, under the circumstances I hope the gentleman will forgive me for not yielding further.

Mr. COLMER. The gentleman has yielded to me.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield no further if the gentleman will forgive me. I would like to make this point: As I see this particular piece of legislation, it has to fit in, if it fits in at all, with the over-all foreign policy of the United States. As I see it, that policy is premised on three bases: Assistance by us toward European economic recovery and economic recovery in other parts of the world; but based on the self-help and mutual cooperation of those assisted; a strong and effective United States adequate to preserve the peace; and the ability by the United States to perform its international responsibilities wherever it has to perform them to stand by our obligations under the Atlantic charter and war and postwar agreements to give self-determination and democracy to all peoples. The intent of this bill should be and what this bill should be directed toward, is implementing our capability to perform our international responsibilities.

That, in my opinion, can be its only justification if there is to be a peacetime draft. I believe those who are observing us to see whether we intend to perform our international responsibilities will judge us not by what we say or even by how many dollars we are willing to grant or lend alone, but by whether the United States is also willing if necessary to implement our foreign policy with the service of citizens, whether we mean what we say, when we say that the United States intends to perform its international responsibilities and to back that up with every resource at its command, financial and material.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Will the gentleman state if this is the segregation amendment? Is it not stated in the bill exactly who is going to be inducted into the service of the United States? Is there anything about segregation?

Mr. JAVITS. My amendment deals with policy, and so requires both the policy of antidiscrimination and the policy of antisegregation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to put the House on notice that, at the proper time, I shall offer an amendment to section 23.

This amendment, I believe, will give the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Kilday] his concrete proposal to do something about building an army by voluntary methods.

The amendment will read:

Strike out section 23 and substitute therefor the following:

"Sec. 23. No person shall be registered or inducted under this act until January 31, 1949, and then only after the President, with the concurrence of the Congress, shall find that sufficient voluntary enlistments have not been provided by an intensified voluntary enlistment campaign. This intensified campaign shall be instituted by the armed forces promptly upon the enactment of this act and shall include the following provisions:

"(a) base pay of enlisted men shall be increased by 25 percent for all grades.

"(b) passing mark on the Army general classification test shall be reduced to not more than 70 points.

"(c) two-year new enlistments shall be accepted for all age groups suitable for military service, with enlistment privileges at least similar to those now provided for longer term enlistments.

"(d) one-year and two-year reenlistments shall be accepted, with proportionate payment of any reenlistment incentives, and other privileges similar to those now provided for longer term reenlistments.

"(e) regular monthly reports and consultation on the methods and results of the intensified campaign shall be furnished by the armed forces to a special joint committee of the Senate and House Armed Services Committee established for that purpose."

That will be my amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by our colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. Javirs] strikes at the very heart of what I said a few minutes ago in the course of general debate.

In response to a question asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. Javits] by one of his colleagues, "Does this amendment strike at discrimination and segregation?" we say, unqualifiedly, "Yes."

"Does it also include selection and service?" Yes.

During the wartime certain efforts were made by outstanding people of America, of both races, to see that the army fighting for world democracy from the United States was a democratic army. We were engaged in a people's war, and we wanted to attain a people's victory, and we knew it could not be attained except through a people's army. We were told during that period by our leadership, from our great Commander in Chief, Mr. Roosevelt, on down, that during wartime was not the time to make any significant changes. Nevertheless, under our late President certain experimental groups were set up in Europe, and certain units of our armed services in the Army, in the Navy, and in the Coast Guard, served without any discrimination or segregation. So well did this policy work out that the Coast Guard adopted it as its policy. In response to a letter from the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, the Coast Guard said that they were in favor of the Powell bill-my bill-to eliminate discrimination in the armed services. The Navy did likewise.

I would like to remind the gentleman again of what I said a few moments ago, that it was the specific pledge of the Republican Party of 1940 and 1944 to "eliminate segregation in the armed services." I should like to remind my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that the President's Commission on Universal Military Training also unqualifiedly recommend that we have an armed service without any segregation.

There is no war on now. No excuse can be given. This is peacetime. We are getting together a citizens' Army to show the world we are strong. The world, however, is not going to believe that we are anything but hypocrites. A lot of us have traveled throughout the world since World War I, and we know with what skepticism our actions here are being viewed in various sections of the earth; and logically, because they do not believe that we practice in America the democracy that we are trying to sell Europe and other places specifically.

Let us have a people's Army or let us have a Fascist Army, one or the other, because that is the choice here before us.

We make no apology for the way the Negro has served this Nation. You cannot find any minority group in America that has served our Nation more loyally than my people have served; no minority from the earliest days of the birth of this Republic. On that day on Boston Common, the first man to die for this Nation in 1773, that first person to fall was a Negro. We have done enough for this country not to be treated as second-class citizens but as first-class citizens. We have proven ourselves.

When George Washington's ragged irregulars of the Continental Army swept over the snows at Valley Forge there were 10,000 black men marching with him.

When Commodore Perry fought his battles on Lake Erie 70 percent of his men were Negro sailors.

In the war with Spain, when Teddy Roosevelt swept up San Juan Hill, Negro cavalrymen rode with him.

When Black Jack Pershing went into Mexico the black troops of the Tenth Cavalry were by his side. In World Wars I and II we were there.

This is the bill, this is the time to tell the world by our actions that we believe in this democracy that we preach and teach or shut up and confess our hypocrisy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we cannot bring debate on this first amendment to a close. This is merely the preamble of the bill.

I move that all debate on this amendment close in 7 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. I hope the gentleman will not press his motion.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Chairman, this is not an easy task that we are called upon to perform today. I am sure every Member has not only thought over this measure, but has prayed over it.

There has been quite a bit of talk to the effect that this bill will break up the families to take these youngsters into the service. I left my home and family when I was 19. It did not break up our family and the 2 years of service I put in in the service and two more in hospitals following the First World War did not demoralize me. I have an 18-yearold daughter who left last fall to attend a school hundreds of miles away. She went out from under our control but it did not break up our family. The fact that many young men may leave home under this bill will not break up their families. They do it every year to obtain employment and for many other reasons.

I too am a Christian. To serve your country in time of need is not un-Christian. I can remember very well reading that when Christ went before Pilate He told Pilate:

My kingdom is not of this world, but if My kingdom were of this world, then would My people fight.

In other words, as head of an earthly kingdom-a nation-He would have an army.

I recall that when He was in the garden of Gethsemane in those darkest of dark hours, He told His followers who were without swords to sell their coats and buy themselves one. This is what this preparedness program means to us today.

Furthermore, that Christ said to His disciples that in days of old it was said "thou shalt not kill," but Christ said that he who is angry with his brother without just cause is in danger of condemnation. Certainly ruthless forces are abroad in the world today and we have every right to rise in righteous anger and not fear that condemnation will be heaped upon us.

I feel, however, that there should be safeguards placed in this legislation and at the proper time I will offer an amendment on page 4 to section (b) which might be called an amendment to regulate the regulators. We can recal; when Selective Service Director Hershey ignored the express and direct language and edicts of Congress and that we as Members of Congress had to pass a law to repeal a regulation issued by the Director of Selective Service relating to farm exemptions.

The amendment I shall offer is as follows:

(a) Before any proposed regulation or order to carry out the purposes of this act shall be issued by any governmental agency exercising authority conferred her under, other than intra-agency administrative rules or orders governing the conduct of its activities or interagency rules governing relations with other agencies of the Government, a draft thereof shall be submitted to the President of the Senate for the Senate of the United States and to the Speaker of the House for the House of Representatives.

(b) The draft of such proposed regulation or order shall be immediately assigned to the Committee on Armed Services in the Senate and to the Committee on Armed Services in the House of Representatives for study, to consider whether such rule or regulation is made in conformity with the spirit, intent, letter and purpose of this act, and that no unusual or unexpected use of powers herein granted is proposed. Such regulation or order may be approved or disapproved by the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate or the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives, or a duly authorized subcommittee of either, absence of action by either committee approving or disapproving such regulation or order, it may go into effect not earlier than the fifteenth day following, but not including, the date of the receipt of the draft of such proposed regulation or order by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. If sooner approved by either committee, it may go into effect immediately upon such approval. Disapproval of such regulation or order by either committee shall suspend its issuance; Provided, that in the event of conflicting committee actions, the earlier action shall

(c) For the purposes of this section, the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, are authorized to sit and act during the sessions, recesses, and adjournment periods of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, if there ever was a time when legislation like this should be under the direct control of Congress it is now. May I say to my friends who fear that militarism or a military clique will rule this Nation that as long as we have a House of Representatives which is alert to its duty and does it, we need have no fear of a military control. The Congress, the House and the Senate, can control the military by controlling the purse strings which furnishes the dollars which pays the troops and buys the supplies. When you control the money you certainly have controlled every activity of the armed forces. The American Congress will not shirk its duty nor forsake those they represent. No military coup need be feared as long as we have constitutional government.

Mr. Chairman, some mention has been made of the Organized Reserves and the National Guard. Those two units did get off to a bad start because the President curtailed and stopped the spending of over half of their funds in the first year, fiscal 1947, their formative year. Congress has remedied that and I am sure you will see in the coming months that both the National Guard and the Organized Reserves will make rapid strides and with a wellrounded, well-thought-out program of training, we will again have civilian components that will be ready to answer the call of the country in time of need.

Mr. Chairman, it has been my sincere conviction that if we had been prepared-if we had been militarily strong we would not have been involved in either World War I or World War II. Twice we have been lucky in having strong allies who were able to fight while we armed and trained. Dare we take a chance on unpreparedness a third time, especially when we stand almost alone?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on one occasion when England was emerging from one war and threatened with another, Shakespeare described the condition of the British people in these words:

So shaken as we are, so wan with care, Find we a time for frighted peace to pant, And breathe short-winded accents of new broils To be commenc'd in strands afar remote.

It seems to me that we only emerge from one war when certain elements begin to pull the scare of another conflict in strands far remote.

Mr. Chairman, I look in the faces of men I served with in the Sixty-seventh Congress, and I am reminded that in 1921, right after the First World War, the same efforts were made to induce Congress to adopt militarism. Now, what is militarism? There can be but one answer. It is universal, compulsory military service in times of peace with all the armaments that go with it.

If we will build the strongest air force on earth, and keep an ample supply of atomic bombs on hand, it will not be necessary to transform America into a military camp or to transform our Government into a military dictatorship, which I fear will follow the passage of legislation of this kind.

For that reason I am opposed to the passage of this bill.

I want to say a word in opposition to the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr JAVITS].

This is an attempt to stir up the race question by representatives of certain minorities, or misrepresentatives of certain minorities.

They attempt to frighten the Congress into passing legislation that is unreasonable, unnecessary, unjustifiable, and which will do more harm to all people than it will do good.

You cannot reverse the laws of nature by an act of Congress. You cannot please anybody who wants to stir up the racial question for personal or political gains. You cannot afford to ignore the vast majority of the white Americans who will serve under this law, if it passes, and bring upon them a condition that will do infinitely more harm than gcod.

For that reason I say that this amendment should be voted down. And those Members who are always whining about racial minorities had better remember that there are some majorities in America that are going to be heard from.

Now, I am speaking for the majoritythe white Americans who fight the Nation's battles in time of war and sustain its institutions in time of peace. I am tired of these misrepresentatives of racial minorities getting up here, whining about race discriminations, and trying to pass legislation or adopt amendments that would injure the great majority of the men in the service and would not do the minorities any good.

I hope the amendment is voted down. Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, listening to the gentleman from Kansas I was almost persuaded that war was a good thing. I heard him tell what Christ said, and I heard him quote the Scripture. If one had not listened closely, he might have thought that war was a glorious pastime. We all know it is a curse to mankind and to nations.

I remember from my early days' training when the children of Israel decided that they could no longer make brick without straw that they even walked across the Red Sea and the Lord let them out by rolling the water back for a dry path across. Then I remember when they got a little uppity from time to time, they had some trouble with their neighbors, and the Lord sent them back to the wilderness to dig a few roots, after they got hungry, to get something to eat, until they behaved themselves and became God-fearing again.

I remember the gentleman from Kansas saying that he went to war at 19. His home was not broken up, so he said. Somebody from his family went somewhere, but still the home was all right. He did not say anything about those young men who were married and went across the sea to fight a war for the four freedoms and did not come back; he did not say a word about them. They died and were buried and their homes knew them no more. Oh, I know it is wonderfully fine when the boys march down the street with the flags awaving, drums abeating, fifes athrilling, the bands aplaying, the crowds cheering. That is a wonderful sight, but I never heard of many of the cheering throngs going down to meet the ships when the boys came back in boxes. Just a few old rags, a few musty bones. Yes, there were some homes broken up. What about these measures we have up now to build houses? Had the boys stayed at home, maybe they would have built their own homes. What about the two or three million young women of America, the would-be mothers of the future soldiers? If you are going to have wars, just who are they going to marry? Who are going to be the fathers of their children? There are two or three million of these young girls who have no opportunity to marry a fine young American. Maybe they can marry those brought in in these foreign labor battalions. Perhaps they can marry some of the Jamaicans, some of the Mexicans, or even some of the refugees from concentration camps. 200,000 of whom are to be rushed to America. I do not know. But, those are the things that we ought to think about.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Powell] talks about liberty so often. He is a very eloquent man, a good American. I wonder if he really believes in the America we have known and which has given us all so much. I wonder if he does.

What is this amendment, and what will it do? Why, the boys that enlist under it, if I interpret it rightly, will be forced into a regiment where they must associate with and fight with others of various races whether they will or no. Do we not fight better, more courageously, more tenaciously, when we fight with those we like? The gentleman may not like me. Should we have a law which will force him to sleep in my bed, in my room with me, to eat with me, if he does not like me nor my ways?

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I cannot yield now, but I will ask the gentleman sometime to answer this question, which is fundamental: When does preference begin and when does it end? When does preference cease and discrimination begin? The gentleman married the lady of his choice. I am sure, without knowing his younger days, or being acquainted with him in those days, that there were many, many young ladies who would have been happy and honored to have been asked into wedlock by him. And what did he do? He discriminated—yes, he did—against all the other women he knew. You may laugh if you want to but that is true. My question is, Where does the right to choose your associates, business and social and in marriage, end, and where, for what and when are you to be accused of discrimination?

Would the gentleman have felt that he was free had he been compelled to marry, I will say, the first good-looking, intelligent young woman, true American, who stepped up and said that she would like to be his wife? Oh, no; no, no. He would have fought to the bitter end, even if she had had millions of dollars; I am sure he would.

There is something wrong with American statesmanship, with those who guide the destinies of this Nation of ours. Here we are at the end of the war, according to Churchill and in our own estimation the greatest, the richest, the most powerful Nation in all the world, and yet what? We want to adopt the methods of Hitler and Stalin and force our men into the Army, as they did. What for? We have the most of everything good in this country, have we not, of any people in all the world? The gentleman from New York [Mr. Powell] nods "Yes." Sure we Then are we so lacking in patriotism that our young people would not volunteer if they believed their services were needed? No, indeed. If the Army would make the proper regulations they would come in if there was need but they are not fooled by the internationalists nor those who, too old to serve, are willing that American blood be shed everywhere any time some "thinker" thinks it is our duty to save the world.

Mr. POWELL. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In everything I said?
Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, first I should like very briefly to state my feelings on this bill. I despise isolationism. I have never been an isolationist. Way back as far as 1935, when President Roosevelt made his now historic speech, I backed him strongly. I did not believe then and I do not believe today that we can shut ourselves off from what is happening in the rest of the world.

My first reaction to the present draft bill was, of course, if the Army needs the draft to meet our commitments around the world, we must give it to them, even at the risk of departing from our democratic tradition with all the serious implications of that departure.

When the last draft was passed on the eve of war, the gentleman from Texas reminded us that it passed with one vote. I was one of those who sat at the phone in California and called California Congressmen and every other Representative

I knew in this House, begging them to vote for that draft.

The draft in 1940 was needed to protect our Nation. There is no imminent danger of war today. There is no testimony in the hearings on this bill to the contrary. There is world-wide tension. On that we are all agreed and it should be the business of this Nation to try to relieve that tension.

Presumably, it is because we would prevent another and more terrible war that the Army has asked the Congress to pass this compulsory peacetime draft. The draft is asked today so that we may preserve the peace, and I am all for that; but I do not want to destroy our democratic way of life in the process.

I approached this bill with the attitude that I would of course vote for the draft if the Army needed it. However, because compulsory military training has such far-reaching implications, I could not come to a sudden decision in this matter. I locked myself in with the Senate and House committee hearings and every bit of evidence I could get on the subject.

I approached the subject in one frame of mind. At the end of my studies I was convinced that the need for the draft had not been proved.

I do not think a sincere effort has been made to obtain young men through the voluntary system. You ask me, will I vote for this bill? I will, if the amendment read by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Shafer] is attached at the end of the bill. If I were convinced that men could not be gotten by voluntary methods, if I were convinced that every sincere effort had been made to obtain men by voluntary efforts, then I would vote for the bill before us. For some reason, and I impugn the motives of no one, certain of the armed forces want this draft. Let us put it on the highest plane. They want it because of the psychological impact that it might have on Russia, of course, hoping then that that would be another deterrent that would keep them from war. in Heaven's name, if the atomic bomb will not stop them, if the biggest Navy in the world will not stop them-I voted for the 70-group Air Force, and I will vote for the aircraft carrier bill when it comes up-if these will not stop them. do you mean to say that the draft will?

Let us boil it down to a very few words—I see ourselves in this draft bill erecting a mental Maginot line built out of the young men of this country.

Where is the integrated program that is needed to truly defend this country by permitting us to win the peace? Where is the price control that we need? Where is the allocation program? Where is the program to expand our steel capacity? Why did we cut the steam plant out of the TVA program? This cut down our power capacity.

Why has the Congress wantonly tried to destroy the reciprocal trade program without which world-wide economic recovery is impossible?

There is a great hue and cry against controls from those who would now draft the young men of America without having first made the simple corrections in Army life that might make drafting unnecessary.

I shall insert in the RECORD the testimony given by Mr. Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, CIO, before the Senate Committee on Armed Services which I think is one of the most intelligent and comprehensive statements made on the subject of total preparedness for peace.

Winning the war was not an easy job. Winning the peace is not easy either. We had better make up our minds to that fact. Drafting the young men of America will not make up for our failures to grapple with the problems that confront us at home and abroad realisti-

I support the amendment of the gentleman from New York. Of course I support it. The man whom I have revered most in political life was Franklin D. Roosevelt. The reason why I entered politics was to support Franklin D. Roosevelt and his program for the people. I believe President Roosevelt would support this amendment today.

I resent very much the suggestion that Members who stand on the floor of this House in support of antidiscriminatory measures represent minority groups, and that that is their only interest in such amendments. I think I express the feeling of the majority of Americans in this country when I support a democratic army free from discrimination. I ask the gentleman from New York: Under President Roosevelt during the war did we not have an Executive order which in effect laid down exactly the principles that you are proposing today?

Mr. JAVITS. I think the gentlewoman is better acquainted with the terms of that order than I am. The intent I have is very clearly expressed in this amendment. It is to that ultimate effect. I am not aware of the specific details of the order.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. I believe that was the case. Mr. Chairman, it is my simple belief that we should work for greater unity. Surely, a democratic country should have a democratic army. That was the policy laid down in the last war. It is the policy which we should follow today. Discrimination and segregation in the armed forces and traditional Jim Crow policies have the serious result of emphasizing irrelevant differences and in effect create a white army and a black army, instead of an American Army.

Just as I despise isolationism, so I despise any kind of isolationism in the community which sets one group apart, and I beg you in thinking of this bill to think of all the people in their proper perspective in relation to Almighty God.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I represent a great congressional district in the South, and I believe that in rising in opposition to this amendment, I am representing the people of my district of all colors, all races, and all creeds. I frankly do not believe that the Negroes in my district want to break down the segregation laws. I rather believe that they prefer to keep their separate churches, their separate schools, and their separate recreational centers. I do not believe that they would want their Congressman to vote for this amendment, and even if they did want me to vote for it, I would not vote for it, because I know enough about the relationship between the races in the South to know what this thing just would not

As the advocates of this amendment have pointed out, we never have lost a war, and yet through every war we have had segregation of the races. Why it is that some Members of Congress seem to believe that Negroes want to camp and sleep with the white people and that the white people want to sleep with the Negroes, I just do not understand.

I will wager there is not a Member of Congress from a southern district, where Negroes are greatly in the majority in some places, who has had a single petition or a single letter or a single telegram from a single Negro asking him to break down the segregation laws. All of this originates north of the Mason-Dixon line. I cannot help but believe that those who are trying to put this amendment on this bill want to make it so obnoxious and so objectionable that many people who would like to vote for the bill would be forced to vote against it.

I do not see any good that could be accomplished. Even during the war, when Negroes went side by side with white men away from my district, I never received a single complaint from a single Negro anywhere in Europe, Asia, or anywhere. Yet the proposition is now put up to me to support an amendment to force white folks and Negroes to associate together.

Mr. Chairman, will the Mr. POAGE. gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. Does not the majority of the people have any rights in this country? We are told about the rights of minorities. What about the rights of the majority to do as they please?

Mr. COOLEY. I agree with the gentleman. I think we are making a mountain out of a molehill. I do not want to impugn the motives of the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] who introduced this amendment, or any man who supports it, but, frankly, it is a ridiculous proposition, and every right-thinking man in this House knows it.

It seems to me that some of the good Negroes in my district, and I know many of them are my friends, and I am their friend, and they feel free to discuss all of their problems with me when I go homeit seems to me that some of them, from the pulpits or the platforms or some place, would have communicated with me saying, "I want you to break down the segregation laws in the armed forces.'

Why should a Negro feel that he is a second-class citizen because he is in company with other Negroes? There is no more reason for his feeling that way than there is for a white man to feel he is inferior because he is in a separate barracks and marches with a separate group. They are all fighting for the same cause. They all have the same interest at stake. It seems to me we should come to an end of this proposition once and for all. It will never be done. There is no way you can pass Federal laws to make the white people of the South accept the Negro on social equality.

A Negro schoolteacher asked me to make his commencement speech. would have readily agreed to do so except for the fact I was not going to be home. I asked him why he did not get one of the Negro Congressmen to come down and make a speech for him.

He said, "No, sir, lawyer. I wouldn't think of it." He said, "They would come down here and start talking about social equality and break up my school and cause more trouble than I would ever be able to get over.'

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may again be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. Javits.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Javits), there were-ayes 23, noes 135.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 1? If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the number of persons on active service in the Army of the United States is hereby authorized to be 837,000; in the Navy, including the Marine Corps, the present statutory authorized strength of 666,882; and in the Air Force of the United States, 502,000: Provided, That the number of persons provided for in this section shall be construed to mean the daily average number of persons in the armed forces during the fiscal year: Provided further, That the num-ber of persons who are serving on active duty for training purposes only and the number of officer candidates shall be excluded in computing the number of persons within these authorized strengths or on active serv-

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Powell: On page 3, line 2, after the period strike out: "Provided further, That there shall be no discrimination on account of race, creed, or color in each and every branch of the armed

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, first of all I wish to say a word to my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFman). The gentleman from Michigan and I are very good friends. We do not agree on anything but we are good friends. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] said that I married the person of my choice. He is right; but this bill does not allow you to do what you want to do; you are drafted under this bill. However, Mr. HOFFMAN, if I had been drafted into marriage, I would have done my best. Just as I expect white and Negro men to do their best in a nonsegregated army.

'I wish to say to my colleague from Texas who spoke last that I appreciate his point of view, I understand it, I understand the problems that he faces and that sort of thing. I don't agree with him. But there are certain things that I should like to enlighten him about that are happening in this world and have already happened.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, some very radical changes have taken place all over America, in Texas as well. I have been in Texas repeatedly, I have been to his city. Lots of things are taking place down there that I am sure he is aware of, but maybe he forgot when he said there has been no desire for a change in segregation. Because changes have and are taking place.

He undoubtedly forgets that a very militant effort was made by outstanding white people and Negroes of Texas, not we damned Yankees from the North, to get Negroes admitted to the law school of the University of Texas. The Supreme Court of the United States has handed down a decision in that case and supported them.

The gentleman from Texas also probably does not know—or forgot, rather—that Negroes are voting in such vast quantities in Texas now that in the city of Houston, for instance, one of the Congressmen running there in July will be defeated or elected according to the Negro vote. There are between 30,000 and 40,000 registered Negro voters in Houston, Tex., where just 2 years ago there were not 1,000. Changes are taking place.

When the gentleman from Texas says that Negroes and whites will not serve together in the armed forces, then may I enlighten him and you: They have served and are serving on a nonsegregated basis right now in the Coast Guard and in the United States Navy. And our Navy is not any weaker. Our Navy is the greatest navy in the world, not only by virtue of its tonnage, but by virtue of the fact that men, irrespective of race, creed, or color, are serving together side by side. This they always did until the 1920's when the rules were changed, but now under liberal leadership the rules have again been changed and Negroes and whites are serving together.

May I say to him also that you may not have received many letters from Negroes in the South about this, but I will be happy to show you letters from Negro people in the South to me from your district saying that they would like to see a genuine people's democracy established in these United States, rather than a segregated one.

May I say, finally, that, yes; the majority do have rights, but the first right of a majority in a democracy is to see that all people, irrespective of whether they belong to the majority or the minority, are treated equal. That is what democracy is. Of course, if you do not believe in a democratic form of government you should not be here.

This amendment I have offered says that Negroes shall serve in all branches of the services of our Government without discrimination. I say that because during World War II the vast majority of the Negroes who were drafted were forced to serve in the Quartermaster There are Negro men today products of the schools of Texas and the other 47 States. They have been especially trained, they are equipped to serve in every branch of the armed services. If you will go back into the Army records, you will read there, according to the Army psychological tests, that where a Negro has been given the same opportunity that a white man has been given. his psychological test is the same and his efficiency rating is the same. In fact, Negro Alpha Beta tests showed a higher I. Q. of New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Ohio than whites of Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Georgia.

This is only going to make America stronger, not weaker: if we give the Negro man an opportunity to serve in all branches of our services without discrimination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.
Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments to the section close in 8 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Marcantonio), there were—ayes 110, noes 14.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman offers a rather peculiar amendment. Let me read it to you:

On page 3, line 2, after the period, strike out "Provided further"— and so forth.

There is no such language in the bill. Mr. POWELL, Insert.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman says now he means "insert" instead of "strike out." That is all right, if that is what he meant. But I was just wondering if he is just as mistaken in his theory of life and as to how we should do things as he was in drawing that amendment.

He is correct when he says this measure is different than some things to which he made reference previously. He states, and he is correct, that under this legislation Uncle Sam goes out and grabs the young men. That is true.

And he grabs them with just as arbitrary a grip, just as securely and just as finally, as ever did a Hitler or a Stalin. When Uncle Sam grabs them, they go, and they fight when and where—and they will be fighting for what reason or for no reason—they will be fighting on the order of that superworld organization known as the United Nations, controlled by individuals who have no interest whatever in America, her people, or her future.

That is why this amendment should not be in there, or any amendment of this kind, because after Uncle Sam grabs them he would under the gentlemen's agreement mix them all up together, according to the gentleman's theory, and put them all in one place according to chance.

That gets back to my original argument. We fight better when we are doing the things we want to do and are fighting for the things in which we believe.

Now, I still believe, in my own ignorant way, that the Lord did create the heaven and the earth. I do not know of any other way to account for our existence. If God wanted us to be all of one kind, I think he would have made us all black or vellow or brown or white, any one of these four colors. Maybe there are a lot more, I do not know. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Powell] shakes his head. I accept his statement. But, the ultimate objective of most of these people that advocate this sort of legislation is amalgamation of the races, and in that I do not believe, because I think the Lord tried to do a fairly good job, and I do not believe that these modern agitators-I will not call them rabblerousers, and I am not referring to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Powell] for I think he is sincere, but those who sincerely believe as does my good friend from New York-I do not believe they know any more about how the people should be colored or live than did the Lord. Maybe I am wrong about that, and maybe the Lord was wrong about that, but that is the way he left it. Some black, some brown, some yellow, some white, some tall, some short, some fat, some thin. My experience tells me, whether it is with plants or animals or flowers or human beings, when you begin to cross them indiscriminately and mix them up, the ultimate result, while it may be an improvement in some strains, the strains that are better will go down. I think an examination of the history of those countries where we have had that sort of thing will show that while perhaps the brown or the yellow or the colored race has been advanced in some way by association and intermarriage and interbreeding with the whites, the over-all result and the average on the whole has been lower and downward. That is why I do not believe in this kind of an amendment, for while it says nothing about intermarriage that is usually where the thing ends.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.
Mr. POWELL. The gentleman does

Mr. POWELL. The gentleman does not understand my amendment. My amendment does not advocate social equality. We are dealing with a draft bill, and it is going to be of importance. It would be very interesting if that did occur, though.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is right. The gentleman said "interesting," did he? It might be. But, there are many things that are interesting that are not for the good of the human race; many, many things, and I do not want to try some experiment which I honestly believe will lower the standard of our people just because it is interesting.

I know that none of these amendments on its face deals either with social equality or with intermarriage, but I do remember many, many previous discussions and arguments which began with the proposition that there should be no denial of opportunity because of race, creed, color or state of origin, and to that proposition I wholeheartedly subscribe.

But that was never the end of the argument. Well do I recall that when, some years ago, a special committee of this House had before it Mr. Ross, who was then the head of President Roosevelt's FEPC, witness after witness appeared and, while, in the beginning, the controversy was all over the question of equality of opportunity in employment, almost always, either directly or openly or subtly and by implication, the advocates of the FEPC were insisting upon social equality and intermarriage of the races.

There should be not only equality of opportunity as to employment and education, there should be opportunity for equality of social intercourse. But never should there be an attempt made by law to force upon either the individual or any group the society, social intercourse, with those with whom they do not choose to associate.

The Constitution does guarantee equality of opportunity, but it also guarantees the right of every man to seek his own happiness through the choice of his own associates.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Powell].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 19, noes 102.

So the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Except as otherwise provided in this act, it shall be the duty of every male citizen of the United States, and of every other male person residing in the United States, who, on the day or days fixed for the first or any subsequent registration, is between the ages of eighteen and thirty-one, to present himself for and submit to registration at such time or times and place or places, and in such manner and in such age group or groups, as shall be determined by proclamation of the President and by rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is amazing to me that serious consideration can be given to a peacetime draft proposal at this time in view of the information that we have. If our information is incorrect, then we should be properly advised. No such enlightenment has been forthcoming from the proponents of this measure. Aside from the fact that we generally understand that conditions throughout the world are unsettled, we are called upon to act in hysteria and further disrupt our own economy. We are told that a peacetime draft is necessary in order to bring our armed services up to the necessary strength. We are asked to accept this in spite of the fact that we know that such a statement is not true. There are many present here today who heard me personally ask Major General Vandenberg of the Army Air Force whether or not they were able to obtain all of the men they need by voluntary enlistment. Those who were present heard the General reply that they had a backlog of applications and that they had stopped recruiting. You know that the Navy and the Marine Corps do not want and do not need this peacetime conscription. You are all aware of the fact that the physical standards of the Army have been raised as well as the mental requirements. You are aware of the fact that the Army, for which this peacetime conscription is primarily intended, clings to the old-fashioned recruiting methods.

The armed forces need men trained for various duties. We have learned that these men can be better trained in civilian life and in private industry than they can be trained in the armed forces. Carpenters, electricians, machinists, mechanics of all kinds, are needed in modern warfare. By leaving these men in their civilian occupations they can perform useful service in providing the things we need, and at the same time they are being trained better than they could be if they were inducted into the Army. We are going into a period of uncertainty for the young men of this country and their families and upset homes and lives in a manner unprecedented. We are losing sight of the fact that employers will be very reluctant to hire and train men within the draft ages, because of the uncertainty which will exist due to the possibility of these men being inducted into the armed services after they are brought up to the point of produc-We have all kinds of shortages, including an acute housing shortage, and yet we are considering taking men out of industry when there already exists a shortage of building mechanics. The whole thing just does not make sense.

As many of you know, I am thoroughly in accord with the view that we should maintain our Military Establishment. I have voted for all the appropriations which would provide for an adequate Army, Air Force, and Navy. I served voluntarily in two World Wars in the Navy and have never been obliged to register for the draft. I have a son who is a corporal in the Army Air Forces, having enlisted voluntarily 2 years ago. My ancestors came to this country hundreds of years ago to get away from Old World regimentation. The principles on which this country were founded, which have made it great and strong, will be violated by the enactment of this type of legislation. I am thoroughly opposed to it, and it is my belief that the American people are opposed to it. I hope that this peacetime conscription proposal will be defeated.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Folger: On page 8, line 7, after the words "between the ages of" strike out "eighteen" and insert "twenty-one"

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, while I subscribe entirely to the magnificent statement made by the gentleman who preceded me, I am not offering this amendment as a dilatory tactic. I am offering it because I believe it is just. If we are going to have conscription, we are not morally in a position to reach down and get the 18-, 19-, and 20-year-old boys who ought to be in school, and whose education has not been finished. They cannot vote. They cannot say a word. When we pass this law, we take that 18-year-old boy who ought to be in school of all places in the world and for 2 years at least we command him to surrender his liberty in the name of conscription and learn to carry on war in peacetime.

Let me read you the section which refers to this. It sounds like a condemnation, something like a sentence pronounced by  $\epsilon$  judge for cause—and this is not for cause, and when applied to a person under 21 years of age, it is taking advantage of one who is helpless in his own right.

The bill reads as follows:

Except as otherwise provided in this act, it shall be the duty of every male citizen of the United States—

Oh, that 18-year-old boy. Oh, that 19-year-old boy. If you would let me draw up another amendment, I suspect I would make the age from 40 to 68, and then then let us see how it would feel to be conscripted for 2 years and taken out of our pursuits in order to make a useless gesture, when we have all the implements of war, if they would apply them, that a nation can have in times of peace.

The bill reads further:

who, on the day or days fixed for the first or any subsequent registration, is between the ages of 18 and 31.

Mr. Chairman, there is not a period in my opinion in the life of any young man that is so important that he remain at home. They say he will go to college. Yes; but he can come back home on weekends when he wants to, and his mother and his daddy can see him and ask him every day that they please, how he is. There is no valid force in putting forth such an argument as that. I say to you that between the ages of 18 and 21 we have no right to reach below that age of 21, especially, and demand that they give 2 years of their lives to this conscription in time of peace.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LYLE. How many men would be available under this amendment or under this bill?

Mr. FOLGER. I am not able to tell the gentleman that. I am not figuring on the total number of cogs in the machine. I am talking about humanity and human rights and fairness toward the people who are helpless and who are in our hands.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. Is it not a fact that in World War I no one was drafted under 20 years of age?

Mr. FOLGER. I do not remember about that. But I do remember a bill was offered which I am sorry that I did not vote for, and that was to require that they must be 21 years of age before they are drafted.

I am going to offer an amendment to section 4, which reads:

Except as otherwise provided in this act, every male citizen of the United States, and every other male person residing in the United States, except those aliens who have not declared their intention to become citizens thereof, who is between the ages of 19 and 26 at the time fixed for his registration, or who attains the age of 19 after having been required to register pursuant to section 3 of this act, shall be liable for service in the armed forces of the United States.

Do you believe that is fair? Do you believe that is the part of the exposition of manhood, to go down and say to the 18-year-old boy, "You must register, and when you shall have registered, when you reach the age of 19 years, by proclamation of the President, under the authority granted in this act of Congress, you shall be taken by the nape of the neck out of your school, away from your home, at a crucial time in your life, and put in 2 years of military service"? It is not right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Folger] has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered seeks to strike out the figure "18" and insert the figure "21" in that provision of the bill which provides for registration. The argument that was made in support of the amendment had to do almost entirely with the question of the service of 18-year-olds. There is no proposal that the 18-yearolds shall be called for service. There is no point in not registering them at 18, because, of course, it is an expensive proposition to carry on the registration. It permits the orderly registration, and a sufficient period of time for the records to be prepared. So that as to the 18-year-olds and 19-year-olds on registration, the arguments made do not apply to the amendment offered.

Of course, we have to be a little practical. We continued to induct men until October 1946. At that time we were inducting them at 19, having gone up from 18. During the war we inducted a great many 18-year-olds. So that when you come to the group above 21 years of age, unless you want to get into the veterans who have already fought a war, put in a long period of active service, unless you want to take married men and do away with your deferments, you will not be able to get any men under this bill.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. Why did the committee put in the bill that they would draft men who were over 21 years of age, then?

Mr. KILDAY. Because there are in that group some men, as the gentleman knows, having been in the service of the country, who were released from duty with less than 12 months of service, and who will, under this bill, be channeled into the Reserve organization.

Mr. SMATHERS. But the great reservoir who have not had service, are in the group under 21?

Mr. KILDAY. They are in the group under 21, because up until October 1946, those men were inducted. I have available the figures for each age bracket.

The 19-year-old group has 692,400; 20-year-old, 528,200. Then, when you come to 21, you drop down to 307,800. So that you immediately lose out of your pool 1,100,000 men 19 years and over. Of course, there is no convenient age at which to do this service, but it is far more convenient if it could be made in that period immediately after high school, when the time can be taken out before entering college. The average boy comes out at 18. Then he is in a position to arrange his affairs so that between his high-school training and his college training he can put in this service and get it behind him.

The bill has been worked out with careful thought and intention as to what is available in the pool. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Would this not include a great many of the boys who are in college?

Mr. KILDAY. If he is in college he can complete the year for which he is enrolled.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. But only the 1 year.

Mr. KILDAY. He gets only the year in which he is enrolled. As I said, there is no convenient time. I fully appreciate the disruptions which will come here and that there would be no time when it could be done with perfect convenience; but I think it is the best that we can do in working on a personnel problem as complicated as this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.
Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H. R. 6401, which will provide us with the necessary manpower to adequately care for the needs of our national defense program and which makes provisions for industrial mobilization.

After every war we resolve that there shall be no new war, but we also resolve that if war does come in the future as it has in the past, we shall be prepared. The changed conditions of modern war—bacterial warfare, speed of movement by air, and the atom bomb—make it a certainty that mistaken calculations in regard to being prepared for national defense will be fatal to America and possibly to the world. The Eightieth Congress must make this calculation.

One of the most important cogs in this great wheel of national defense is manpower. Some people say we have the atom bomb, the best planes in the world, the best guns, and need not worry about manpower. I say that the strength of this country will be determined more by the strength of the men handling the weapons of war than by the guns, bombs, and planes. I am not happy and it will not be with pleasure that I vote for the selective-service bill. The idea of a peacetime draft or conscription law is obnoxious to me, and I believe it is to most Americans. However, I shall vote for the bill because under the circumstances it appears to be the wise course to follow for the protection and security of our country.

Mr. Chairman, our country was caught unprepared in two great world wars. We can only guess as to what might have happened if we had been prepared. It is my personal belief and the belief of many other people that had we been militarily strong, both wars would have been avoided. Every sensible God-loving and God-fearing person in this world knows that this country has led the world in the battle for peace. We continue to assume the responsibilities of this leadership.

Our preparedness at this time can very easily result in a great saving of American lives, resources and money in the future. Near the end of World War II we were spending $90,000,000,000 a year to carry on the war effort. If preparedness shortened a future war by 6 months as no doubt it would, the saving for this period alone would be tens of thousands of lives and $45,000,000,000. If preparedness should prevent war—as we hope it will—the savings would be incalculable.

I am supporting the selective-service bill in the interest of peace and not to prepare us for war. I would rather have training without fighting than fighting without training. General Eisenhower has stated:

In terms of the larger issue of victory or defeat comparison is not possible, because in modern war it is not possible to win without training. But in the more personal matter of the individual's chances for survival, I should say that the trained combat soldier has at least three times the chances of the untrained to live to become a vetran.

Some have said that the Selective Service Act will not frighten Russia. As far as I am concerned, it is not intended to frighten Russia or any other country. However, we do want to demonstrate to the world that we are prepared and our national defenses are strong. Surely everyone will admit that those who speak with authority and possess the power to back up what they say wield more force and influence than do those who talk, boast, or threaten without the power to back up their statements.

I believe the passage of this bill will assure the world that we are going to play our part in the world, that we are going to win the battle for peace. The people of the world who want peace and freedom will be pleased and will welcome the passage of this selective service bill. The aggressor nations of the world will stop, look, and listen for a long time before making further aggressive moves.

Mr. Chairman, again quoting from General Eisenhower, this great leader said:

I am intimately familiar with the attitude of the leaders of the other nations to the armed forces of the United States. It is my personal opinion that the greatest single motivation force for world peace is the organized military potential of the United States.

Former Ambassador to Japan, Mr. Joseph G. Grew, said recently:

Without preparedness, diplomacy (our first line of defense) is bankrupt. The extension of the selective service draft is plain common

The armed services have an authorized strength at the present time of 1,736,882, but they have been able to secure only 1,380,888 volunteers for miliary and naval duty. We have been unable to provide the necessary manpower through volunteer methods.

The Armed Services Committee has decided after extensive hearings that the combined strength of our armed forces should be 2,005,882. This figure was agreed upon after considering the advice of the best authorities we have in the Army, Navy, and Air Force and the report of civilian commissions which studied this question. Adequate strength of the armed forces is determined by considering these three important factors: First, the international situation; second, capabilities of any possible enemies; and, third, evident intent of governments of other nations.

The proposed law requires that those between the ages of 18 through 30 must register with local draft boards and those 19 through 25, unless deferred or exempted, are liable for induction for 2 years of service. Members of the medical profession are liable for service until age 45 with those deferred during the war and those educated at Government expense to be called first.

After 2 years of service the inductee must, first, take another year of active duty, or, second, stay in an organized reserve unit for 3 years, or, third, stay in unorganized reserves for 5 years or until age 35. A person liable for induction may volunteer for 2 years' service to permit his beginning the required period of service when it is most con-

Exemptions will be given Purple Heart holders, veterans with combat or 12 months' service, members of organized reserve units, and ministers and ministerial students. Deferments will be given ROTC students until graduation, essential workers, persons with dependents, high-school and college students. An inducted sole surviving son cannot be sent outside the United States and must be assigned noncombatant duty.

Two years of service is required for those inducted and this law will also require that those ROTC students who are deferred until graduation must serve 2 years active duty upon completion of college. However, the present selective-service bill provides that those entering the senior division of ROTC after enactment of this law must serve 3 years on active duty upon graduation. I am offering an amendment to reduce this period of active duty to 2 years as it will then provide for the same amount of service as we require of inductees and other ROTC graduates. I urge the Members to favorably consider this amendment.

My hope and prayer is that my sons, ages 11 and 12, and other young men of .

America will not have to face an enemy in combat like so many of us had to do. I am convinced that we must have selective-service legislation now which will provide us with the strength to make possible aggressors reconsider their plans to wage a war. In the event of another conflict, our sons will be much better trained and prepared to carry out their responsibilities as defenders of their country.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and on this section close in 5 minutes, at which time it is the purpose of the Committee to rise.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SADOWSKI. What was the gentleman's request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York requested that all debate on this amendment and this section close in 5 minutes, following which the gentleman stated that he would move that the Committee rise.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition: I was on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Sadowski] is recognized.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am afraid this Congress will go down in history, a Congress of which I am a Member-as a Congress of hysteria.

Back in 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1938 I was one of the strongest supporters of an all-out armament, all-out military training program. I was called a militarist and a warmonger back home, but I knew that America had to be prepared, for at that time we did not even have rifles to give to our boys. Today the situation is different; we not only have rifles but we have tanks, we have guns, we have boats, we have planes, we have even got the atomic bomb. It is a different situation.

They come in here and say, "Vote for a peacetime draft" and they throw it right

I am not going to vote for any peacetime draft because we do not need a peacetime draft. If you really want to make America strong and keep her powerful then you can go right back to World War I when I was a student at high school and when I was taking the ROTC program at that time, and we students were obliged to take 1 hour of ROTC training every day. Then we had a little program during the recess period in which they trained us some more. It was a fine program. That program can be put into effect today. Start in your high schools. Give your high-school students an ROTC program. Have them out there 3 months in the vacation period and give them an intensive program of training. Have them out the following vacation period for 3 months and give them a further intensive training program, but do not disrupt, do not disrupt the educational program of our States. It is not necessary.

Who wants this draft? Who is asking for it? Why is it necessary? Why am I compelled to vote one way or another on this question when we are not at war and there is no reason for it? I will tell you who is asking for it. There are two men you can get rid of and you will not have to have a draft. Get rid of Mr. Forrestal, the Secretary of Defense, and get rid of General Draper, the Assistant Secretary of Defense. You get rid of the former president of the international bankers, Dillon, Read & Co., Mr. Forrestal, get rid of the vice president of the international bank of Dillon, Read & Co., General Draper, and you will not have anybody asking for a draft or wanting a draft.

Why do they want a draft? * Because there is a big gold rush on. There is the gold rush of 1948, the gold rush for the Ruhr. It is greater than the gold rush of 1849 in California. There will not be as many people going in 1948 to the Ruhr as there were to California in 1849, but the amount of gold and the amount of money involved is far greater in 1948 than it was in 1849.

They are going over there to take over the Ruhr. Your big boys, your big international boys, are moving into the Ruhr, and the Ruhr is going to be owned by American bankers, not by Germans. Now, I have no love for the Nazis, everybody knows that. I have no particular love for the Germans, as such, but I do not believe that it is right for me to go in there or for American big business to join with the cartelists and monopolists, to go in there and do this dastardly thing. We will bring upon us another war in order to make these investments secure in the Rhur. They will tell you there are other reasons for this call for the draft, but I tell you there is no other reason except to have an army to protest those American investments in Germany.

Your boys will have to be drafted to go into Germany. To do what? To protect American investments in the Ruhr. Whose investments? The investments of my industrialists in Detroit? Oh. no. It is not going to be the investments of the industrialists of my city. It will be the investments of the big bankers, the international banking crowd.

Do you know what is happening in the automobile business today? The Fiat car of Italy is being sold all over Europe. Markets are being created all over the world for that car.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Folger]. The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. Sabowski) there were—ayes 32, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this act, every male citizen of the United States, and every other male person residing in the United States, except those aliens who have not declared their intention to become citizens thereof, who is between the ages of 19 and 26 at the time fixed for his registra-tion, or who attains the age of 19 after having been required to register pursuant to section 3 of this act, shall be liable for service in the armed forces of the United States. The President is authorized from time to time, whether or not a state of war exists, to select and induct into the armed forces of the United States for service in the manner provided in this act such number of persons as may be required to provide and maintain manpower strengths of the respective armed forces not to exceed those authorized by section 2 of this act.

No person shall be inducted for service under this act unless and until he is acceptable to the armed forces for such service and his physical and mental fitness for such service has been satisfactorily determined under standards prescribed by the Secretary of Defense.

Persons inducted into the land forces of the United States pursuant to this act shall be deemed to be members of the Army of the United States: persons inducted into the naval forces of the United States pursuant to this act shall be deemed to be members of the United States Navy or the United States Marine Corps, as appropriate; and persons inducted into the Air Forces of the United States pursuant to this act shall be deemed to be members of the Air Force of the United States.

No person, without his consent, shall be inducted for service under this act, except as otherwise provided herein, after he has attained the twenty-sixth anniversary of the day of his birth.

(b) Each person inducted under the provisions of this section shall serve for a period of 24 months, unless sooner discharged in accordance with standards and procedures prescribed by the Secretary of Defense.

(c) (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, except sections 19 (b) and 22, the President is authorized, pursuant to requisitions submitted by the armed forces, to require special registration of and to make special calls for members of the medical, dental, osteopathic, veterinary, pharmacy, and optometric professions, who have not yet reached the age of forty-five at time of such call, in such professional categories as he shall determine, and persons called hereunder shall be liable for induction for not to exceed 24 months of service in the armed forces: Provided, That during the life of this act there shall be, in the Army, including the Marine Corps, a ratio to total active strength of not to exceed 5 doctors of medicine and 2 dentists per 1,000 men, 1 osteopath per 5,000 men, 1 veterinarian per 2,000 men, and 1 pharmacist and 1 optometrist per 3,000 men.

(2) In inducting persons pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection, the President shall induct, in the following order of priority.

priority:

First. Those who participated as medical or dental students in the Army specialized training program or similar programs administered by the Navy, and persons who were deferred from service during World War II for the purpose of pursuing a course of instruction leading to education in one of the above professions, and have had no active duty as commissioned officers.

Second. Those who participated in the Army specialized training program or similar programs administered by the Navy and who have served on active duty as commissioned officers for less than 24 months (exclusive of time spent as intern).

Third. Those who are less than 35 years of age and have had less than 90 day's prior active honorable military or naval duty.

Fourth. Those who are over 35 years of age and have had less than 90 days' prior active honorable military or naval duty.

Fifth. Those whose total active honorable

Fifth. Those whose total active honorable military or naval duty is less than 24 months. Sixth. Others as prescribed by the President.

(d) Under the provisions of applicable laws and regulations any person between the ages of 19 and 26 shall be offered an opportunity to enlist in the Regular Army for a period of service equal to that prescribed in subsection (b) of this section.

(e) Each person who hereafter is inducted, enlisted, or appointed and serves for a period of less than 3 years in one of the armed services and meets the qualifications for enlistment or appointment in a reserve component of the armed forces of the United States, shall be transferred to a reserve component of the armed forces of the United States and shall be deemed to be a member of such reserve component until he attains the age of 35, or until the expiration of a period of 5 years after such transfer, or until he is discharged from such reserve compo-ment, whichever occurs first, and shall be subject to such additional service as may now or hereafter be prescribed by law for such component: Provided, That any person who completes at least 24 months of service in the armed forces under subsection (b), and who thereafter serves satisfactorily on active duty in the armed forces under a voluntary extension for a period of at least 1 year, which extension is hereby authorized, or in an organized unit of any reserve component any of the services for which he is entitled to receive pay for attendance at drill or equivalent duty for a period of at least 36 consecutive months, shall, in time of peace, be relieved from any liability under this subsection to serve in any reserve com-ponent of the armed forces of the United States, but nothing in this subsection shall construed to prevent any such persons, while in a reserve component of such forces, from being ordered or called to active duty in such forces in accordance with other appli-

Mr. ANDREWS of New York (interrupting the reading of section 4). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of this section be considered as read and open to amendment tomorrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk concluded the reading of section 4.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Case of South Dakota, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6401) to provide for the common defense by increasing the strength of the armed forces of the United States, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to formulate and recommend a national fuel policy adequate to meet the needs of the United States in times of peace and war, including recommendations for a national petroleum policy and the integration of such policy with policies relating to other fuels and energy resources except atomic energy; and for such purposes the committee shall study the current and future fuel supply and demand of the United States and shall study methods of encouraging needed developments to assure the availability of fuels adequate for an expanding economy and the security of the United States.

SEC. 2. The committee shall make a report not later than the close of the present Congress. Such report may be made to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session.

Sec. 3. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution, the committee, or any subcommittee thereof—

(1) Is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within or outside the United States, whether or not the House is in session, has adjourned, or has recessed, to hold such hearings, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary; and subpenas shall be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or by any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member;

(2) May utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the various departments and agencies of the Government to the extent that such services, information, facilities, and personnel, in the opinion of such departments and agencies, can be furnished without undue interference with the performance of the work and duties of such departments and agencies;

(3) May seek information from such sources and conduct its studies and investigations in such manner as it deems advisable in the interest of a full and correct ascertainment of the facts.

JOSEPH P. KAMP

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 495, Rept. No. 2367), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the citation heretofore voted by the Special Committee To Investigate Campaign Expenditures, 1944, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session, for contempt against Joseph P. Kamp, vice chairman of the Constitutional Educational League, Inc., be, and the same hereby is, rescinded for the following reasons:

1. Said citation was not the legal act of the said committee for the reason that information necessary to said committee and to each member thereof for their consideration was withheld from them. Certain of said withheld and necessary information was improperly deleted from the official printed record of the hearings without the knowledge of any member of said committee and, therefore, was not available to the members of said committee at the time they considered the matter and took action resulting in voting a citation for contempt.

Certain of other withheld and necessary information was denied to some members of said committee who were refused answers to specific questions about information available to other members of the committee. Some of this same withheld and necessary information was deliberately kept from the knowledge and consideration of a majority of the members of the said committee.

2. Said citation was not the legal act of the said committee for the reason that exhibits in evidence before the committee and necessary to said committee and to each member thereof for their consideration was withheld from them.

The said withheld necessary exhibits were illegally removed from the committee's files prior to the consideration of the matter by the committee and were not available to the members of the committee at the time they took final action resulting in voting a citation for contempt.

3. The said citation resulted in the indictment of the said Joseph P. Kamp, who was tried for criminal contempt of the Congress in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia in December 1946.

On behalf of the defense, the court issued a subpena for one of the said withheld exhibits. Because the said withheld exhibit was not available in the files of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, where it legally belonged, having been removed without the knowledge of the committee or by the authority of the House, the defendant, the said Joseph P. Kamp, was prevented from presenting a full defense and therefore was denied a fair trial.

4. The said Joseph P. Kamp is again to be tried under the said indictment which resulted from the said illegal act of the said committee. The said withheld exhibit, together with the other committee exhibits, were delivered to a representative of the American branch of an international propaganda movement, and the former chairman of the said committee has unsuccessfully attempted to have the said withheld exhibits returned to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and has written to the said Joseph P. Kamp, * * "We have made another effort to secure the memorandum you desire. We have not been able to get it." Therefore, the said withheld exhibit will again be unavailable and the said Joseph P. Kamp will again be unable to subpena this evidence in his behalf and will therefore again be denied his constitutional right to a fair trial.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order for a few moments?

Mr. POWELL. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. There was a gag placed on discussion this afternoon on one of my amendments. I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to state that there is a veto message from the President of the United States which should be read to the House today, and also several enrolled bills which are of vital importance to many departments of the Government.

Mr. POWELL. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLEMENTAL FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949— VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 714)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 6355, "Making supplemental appropriations for the Federal Security Agency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes."

This bill would provide funds for the next fiscal year for the Social Security Administration, the United States Employment Service, and some functions of the Public Health Service. A measure of this kind clearly should not be disapproved by the President except under unusual circumstances and for the most compelling reasons. Such circumstances are presented by the provisions of this bill which would transfer the United States Employment Service from the Department of Labor to the Federal Security Agency.

I believe that this transfer would be a serious error from the standpoint of the proper location of this important function of government. I believe also that this transfer is clearly substantive legislation which should not be included in an appropriation bill.

Over the past 3 years considerable study has been directed to the proper location of the Employment Service in the Government. It is apparent that a system of public employment offices to secure jobs for the workers of this country is directly related to the major purpose of the Department of Labor, which is "to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States." It is equally apparent that it would be far less appropriate to place the Employment Service, together with its auxiliary Farm Placement Service and Veterans' Employment Service, in the Federal Security Agency, which is primarily concerned with matters of health, welfare, and education.

I am, therefore, firmly convinced that tecause of its intimate relationship to the functions of the Department of Labor the Employment Service should remain permanently in that Department.

To achieve this end, I transmitted to the Congress on January 19, 1948, Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1948, placing the United States Employment Service permanently in the Department of Labor and transferring to that Department the Bureau of Employment Security, now in the Federal Security Agency. This reorganization plan was not accepted by the Congress, principally on the ground that no basic changes should be made in the structure of the executive branch until the Commission on Organization of the executive branch of the government has completed its studies and submitted its recommendations. This seems to me a reasonable viewpoint.

But in this bill the Congress has acted contrary to its own declared position, and has attempted to effect a far-reaching change in the organization of the executive branch without waiting for the Commission on Organization to report.

In fact this legislation, which is of such paramount importance to the interests of millions of wage earners and employers, and which is plainly substantive in nature, was passed by the Congress entirely without reference to or hearings by the legislative committees concerned with such matters. Neither the House Committee on Education and Labor nor the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare was given an opportunity to consider the measure. Instead it was conceived by a subcommittee on appropriations and tacked onto an appropriations bill.

I do not believe that it is in the interest of good government that legislation of such importance should be enacted in such a manner. As I stated in December 1945, in withholding my approval from an appropriation bill which contained substantive legislation, "a matter of such grave importance as our public employment system deserves not only permanent legislation, but legislation carefully and separately considered. Issues of such a difficult and vital nature should not be dealt with as riders to appropriation bills." I note also that on March 4, 1946, the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress recommended "That the practice of attaching legislation to appropriation bills be discontinued.'

What makes this matter even more disturbing is that the present bill is another in a series of legislative actions stripping the Department of Labor of essential funds and functions. Last year the Congress removed the United States Conciliation Service from the Department and drastically slashed the Department's appropriations. To remove the United States employment Service from the Department would further weaken and demoralize it and reduce the entire Department to such a minor status as to raise seriously the question of the validity of its continuance as a separate Department.

I am convinced, therefore, that the provisions of this bill which would transfer the United States Employment Service represent unwise legislative action, enacted in an unsound manner.

For these compelling reasons I am returning the bill without my approval.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 14, 1948.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

By unanimous consent, the bill and message were ordered to be printed as a House document.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings in connection with the veto message of the President on the bill (H. R. 6355) making supplemental appropriations for the Federal Security Agency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, be postponed until tomorrow and that it may be in order at any time tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANDIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a brief statement on social security.

Mr. BRADLEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include certain tables prepared by the Maritime Commission as part of the remarks he made this afternoon in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, during debate on the bill H. R. 6401 under the 5-minute rule, I made some remarks under pro forma amendments. I ask unanimous consent that they be incorporated with my remarks made in general debate on the bill, and also to include therein certain extracts from Factory Management magazne.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin (at the request of Mr. O'Konski) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Record and include newspaper articles and extraneous matter.

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the text of a sermon by Rev. John Curry Walker, of Waterbury.

Mr. Mackinnon asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Record and include an excerpt from a speech by Hon. Harold E. Stassen.

Mr. TEAGUE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SADOWSKI asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Record in two instances and include excerpts.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the speech made by the President of the United States at Los Angeles yesterday.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Javits] is recognized for 20 minutes.

EIGHTIETH CONGRESS SPECIAL AND SEC-OND SESSION RECORD AND FORECAST

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, many of the problems which we faced on January 3, 1947, when the Eightieth Congress convened have been dealt with during the past 18 months, but other serious problems will remain unsolved as we adjourn to prepare for the coming Presidential election. A review of the work of this Congress and its record and an assessment of what is likely to face the 81st ieth Congress should prove useful information to all interested citizens.

I campaigned on a platform of international peace through cooperation within the United Nations, and domestic prosperity and stability based on an ever rising standard of living for all of the people of the United States.

FIRST SESSION RECAPITULATED

By the time the President summoned the Members of Congress back to Washington on November 17, 1947, the Eightieth Congress had written a good deal of legislation on the statute books. It had extended Federal rent control, and acted on labor, and relief for European countries like Greece, Austria, and Italy, tax reduction, unification of the armed services, Presidential succession, and had passed the important appropriation measures affecting literally hundreds of thousands of governmental activities. It had laid the groundwork for much of the action that has been taken during the second session of the Eightieth Congress. When the first session recessed on June 26, 1947, the Members dispersed to go home to their own districts to find out how their constituents felt about the momentous national problems confronting us. Other Members, including myself, took up committee assignments either in the United States or abroad. Everyone hoped that it would be unnecessary to return to Washington until the beginning of the new year.

THE SUMMER RECESS

As a member of the Subcommittee on the International Refugee Organization and the International Trade Organization of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I spent 8 weeks in Europe last summer visiting hundreds of DP camps, speaking to thousands of DP's and also to the men and women in the governmental and private agencies responsible for the care and resettlement of these people who had lived through terror and death sustained only by the hope that they would find a new life in a new land as soon as the shooting was over.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRISIS AND THE SPECIAL SESSION

While I was visiting DP camps and studying the ITO, others of my colleagues were making other investigations in Europe, South America, Asia, and other foreign territories, too. More Congressmen went abroad last summer than at any other time in American history. I think this fact is of extreme importance because it highlights the paramount role that foreign affairs plays in our domestic and personal lives. Even before all of the Congressmen had returned to the United States and had analyzed their experiences and reported them to the country, the foreign situation had become so serious in terms of American policy that the President of the United States asked the Members of Congress to reconvene in November of 1947, in a special interim session to take action on a foreign-aid bill. This bill was designed to help the countries of western Europe avoid disaster and reject the grim alternative of the "police state" by providing them with enough food and other basic commodities to see them through until they could rehabilitate themselves economically, socially, and politically, fortify their democracy, and rebuild their resources and trade.

THE MARSHALL PLAN

Preliminary work had already been started by what are now known as the 16 Marshall plan countries of Europe (Denmark, Austria, Belgium, France, Greece, Eire, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom, Sweden, Switzerland, and Turkey). As we all know, they are called the Marshall plan countries because they developed a plan of cooperative economic action as a result of a suggestion made by Secretary of State Marshall at the Harvard commencement in June 1947. Secretary Marshall said at that time if the countries of Europe would cooperate and draw up plans to help themselves in a free and democratic manner, the United States would back them up with money, men, and materials.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I am a member, started hearings on the program for the Marshall plan early in November and carried on these hearings continuously for approximately 5 months.

For 6 weeks the Congress studied, debated, and finally passed an interim foreign aid program preliminary to Marshall plan aid, to meet the immediate needs of foreign countries faced with starvation and the prospect of fuel shortages during the winter months. vote was overwhelmingly in favor of such a program. As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, responsible for carrying this legislation through the Congress, I played an active part in writing this legislation which was so largely responsible for giving life and hope to the peoples of Europe in time to prevent them from plunging themselves and the United States into a new political and economic upheaval which could have led inevitably to war.

Today the European recovery program which was a blueprint for action only a few months ago, is a reality. The United States is appointing heads of mission to all of the ERP countries and the Economic Cooperation Administration is being built up in the United States, but 3 months ago it faced a hard fight. a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I was one of the active participants in the mighty effort to legislatively implement Secretary Marshall's pregnant suggestion of June 4, 1947, and the monumental work of the 16 European nations who joined together to work for their mutual economic recovery. The final vote in favor of the European recovery program was gratifyingly large. I believe it will prove to be one of the really great achievements of American foreign policy as significant as the Monroe Doctrine in expressing our determination to have world peace.

THE UNITED NATIONS AND PALESTINE

The European recovery program is but one example of the action that the United States has taken in the international sphere. The United States is actively working within the framework of the UN to achieve world peace, security, and prosperity. For example, as a result of action recently taken by the Congress, the United States is now a member of the World Health Organization, a proposal which we in the Committee on Foreign Affairs worked for and supported for months.

The UN has had to deal with many difficult issues, a very important one of which is Palestine. Last year during the interim session we had good cause for gratification when the United States through the UN adopted the partition plan of the UN General Assembly on Palestine on November 29, 1947. It seemed possible then that bloodshed would be averted through this timely and decisive action by the nations of the world. Unfortunately, however, the action of the UN on this issue never was implemented. Almost as soon as the decision was made it was repudiated by the very countries which should have breathed life into it. Both as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and as one who had made a tremendous effort to get justice in Palestine so as to establish the true Jewish national home there, I tried to make a constructive contribution toward the education of the other Members of the House who I knew would inevitably have to become concerned with this situation since it affected the peace and security of the United States as well as of the other members of the UN.

With 30 of my colleagues, who acted together on this issue, I kept in constant communication with the President of the United States, the Secretary of State. and the United States representative to the UN, on the Palestine issue urging that the United States actively work for the realization of the partition plan. the protection of the shrines of Christians, Moslems, and Jews, and peace in the Holy Land. When it became apparent that the UN could not and would not act swiftly enough to prevent the outbreak of war in Palestine, I united with my 30 colleagues in urging the lifting of the United States arms embargo in the Middle East which had been invoked by the President and which in effect was preventing only the Jewish people of Palestine from receiving arms to defend themselves, and not the Arabs, since it was an open secret that the Arabs were receiving arms and money from Britain to carry on a war of aggression for many months. I protested in speech after speech on the floor of Congress against this British double dealing and demanded that it be ended or that the whole United States policy of helping Britain be reconsidered decisively.

When the new state of Israel was proclaimed on May 15, 1948, I introduced legislation authorizing the appropriation of $100,000,000 so that the people of Israel could purchase military and other supplies to help them end the aggression against their territory, rebuild their shattered economy and realize the hopes and dreams that had been nurtured by the Jewish people for centuries. Recognition of the state of Israel by the United States which came almost immediately was the first real break in resolving the problem.

Now that there is a truce in Palestine I have continued to expose Britain's support of Transjordan's Arab Legion in its attack on Jerusalem in the effort to get Britain to atone for her actions by calling off the Arabs; and, second, I have pointed out that the truce cannot be used to appease the Arabs, but that Israel's independence, won by much sacrifice, and the boundaries established by the United Nations partition decision must be respected.

The Palestine situation demonstrated better than any other the present weaknesses of the UN as well as its potential power and effectiveness. Ever since its inception the UN has been plagued by excessive use of the veto and by vacillation instead of determined action of its member nations. The great tension that exists in the world today, especially between the two great powers of Soviet Russia and the United States (which is considered later in these remarks) had dwarfed and almost paralyzed the functioning of the UN. But on the Palestine issue both the United States and Soviet Russia were on the same side and still the new world organization was helpless to cope with the very threatening problem involving the peace of the middle eastern region but perhaps of the whole

REORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The enemies of the UN and the skeptics of international cooperation used the Palestine situation as the occasion for condemning the whole organization and for seeking a reorganization so drastic in character as to have destroyed it in the attempt to rebuild it. They based this demand also on UN failure in resolving the problem of control of atom bombs, or in settling the contentions between the United States and the U.S.S. R. As a result of the extensive hearings held by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the testimony presented by members of the State Department, especially Secretary Marshall and other wellinformed witnesses, any precipitous action has been forestalled and serious and well-thought-out action will be taken by the Congress. I contributed to the discussion and resolution of the issue through participation in the Town Hall of the Air program on the Reorganization of the UN and countless other radio and platform forums, as well as during the open hearings of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. One of the most effective steps taken by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs has been the reporting of a bill on the UN, providing in addition to other things, a $65,000,000 loan to the UN so that it can build a permanent home on the site selected in New York City. I introduced the legislation for the loan in the House of Representatives.

THE PLIGHT OF THE DISPLACED PERSONS

These are fine people, skillful, productive, and anxious to work. About twothirds of them from eastern Europe, of Catholic faith, about 10 percent from northern Europe, Protestant, and about 20 percent, from many parts of Europe, of Jewish faith. But all equally homeless and unhappy. They were faced with the prospect of spending years in almost the same concentration camps that had claimed their friends and families and imprisoned their souls and bodies: labeled DP camps, they were no less deadly to the morale and spirit of already martyred peoples than when they were known as concentration camps. Armed with the knowledge that this could prove to be one of the worst reflections on the record of our own and the other United Nations, I came back to the United States from our investigation determined to do everything I possibly could to eliminate the problem of the DP's. Swift legislative action by the Congress was indicated to open the gates of the United States to our fair share of the DP's, so that instead of displaced persons they could become productive new citizens in the United States and in other peace-loving, democratic countries.

So far the legislation enacted by the Eightieth Congress is not nearly as complete as I had hoped for and worked for and effects a discrimination against one group in the DP camps which I consider fatal to its original purposes. The bill only provides for the admission of 220,-000 DP's in 2 years instead of 400,000 DP's in 4 years, as did the Stratton bill. Also, it picks a date at which eligible DP's should be determined which discriminates most unfairly against the existing population of the DP camps, for it admits not the actual percentage of 23 percent but only about 3 percent of the DP's from Poland and eastern Europe of Jewish faith who escaped from the religious persecution of the months immediately following the war which had been left as a heritage by the Nazis. The only comfort we have left is the United States participation in and contribution to the International Refugee Organization, for which I worked so hard, and the inclusion in the DP bill of the substance of the legislation introduced by Senator Ives and myself early in 1947 to allow DP children who became orphans as a result of the war to enter the United States without regard to immigration quotas. The fight to eliminate discrimination in the DP bill must be continued.

THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION

While in Europe last year I had the opportunity to review at Geneva the beginnings of the International Trade Organization. This organization contains the basis for future world economic cooperation which is the necessary foundation for international peace. Representatives of the United States and 19 other nations sat together at Geneva to catalog the problems that plague international trade and weaken the economic structure of individual peoples. They sought to create machinery capable of dealing with these troublesome problems and promoting international through the elimination of artificially created trade barriers.

Three months later as one of the United States delegates to the International Trade Organization conference in Havana, I again met with the draftsmen of the new ITO in Havana—representing 60 countries—and brought back to the Congress a report of the contribution that the United States delegates were making to the creation of this new organization. Although the United States has not yet formally ratified the new ITO charter, the way has been paved for doing so in the next Congress.

When the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act came up recently I supported and voted for the passage of a straight 3-year extension with no crippling restrictions and testified before the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee to that effect, I also spoke in the House on the debate to warn my colleagues of the dangers to American business if the program were emasculated in favor of protectionism over reciprocity. I am gratified that the Congrèss has seen fit to continue the RTA program for another year without the congressional veto, although I preferred a straight 3-year extension.

DOMESTIC LEGISLATION

I have described at some length the action taken by the Congress in the field of foreign policy because the problems of world peace have lately over-hadowed what are too, the pressing needs that our people face in the United States.

RENT CONTROL AND HOUSING

Our people have been vitally concerned with the problems of housing and rent control as a result of lack of construction during the war and the increase of families and marriages. The housing shortage became critical during the years when millions of American boys were living in foxholes and jungle huts dreaming of the day when they could return to the United States and live civilian lives in comfortable homes. Instead, when they returned they were confronted with the problem of finding any kind of shelter, decent or otherwise, at a price they could afford. The long-dreamed-of privacy that so many veterans had lived for during the war years turned into a cruel joke. Instead of living with his buddies, the veteran found himself living with his in-laws under difficult and overcrowded conditions, or spending much of his income and savings earmarked for other essential commodities and services on providing living accommodations, generally of an inadequate character, for his

As a veteran myself I have been very conscious of the problems faced by millions of veterans and their families throughout the country and I have worked diligently and ceaselessly for adequate rent control and housing legislation.

Congress passed a rent control bill again early this year. It was not as tightly drawn as I should have liked to see it, but we did manage to keep Federal rent control. I fought for better controls to get tenants the painting, decorating, and building maintenance they were entitled to, to prevent unfair evictions of tenants by landlords, and against across-the-board rent increases. I also warned all the people of my district not to be pressured into making the so-called voluntary 15 percent rent increases.

When it comes to housing, however, the story is not encouraging. Millions of Americans cannot afford to buy or rent houses built by private industry under existing costs unless they do so at the price of their standard of living. The Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Act. which I introduced in the House, was the legislation veterans and citizens looked to as a means to end the drastic housing shortage. It was the only comprehensive long-range housing bill up for consideration. It had been before the Congress for more than 4 years, in one form or another, extensive hearings had been held on it by both the Senate and House Banking and Currency Committees, the Joint Committee on Housing which was created by the Eightieth Congress to make an exhaustive study of the housing situation, had supported its main provisions, including federally assisted low-rent housing, Government-supported research to reduce housing costs, slum clearance, and farm housing and it had twice been passed by the Senate.

Together with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Congressman Kennedy, and several other veterans representing all of the major veteran organizations, I sponsored a veterans housing conference which was held in Washington on February 29 and March 1 for the purpose of marshalling support and getting action on the T-E-W bill for the Eightieth Con-More than 1,350 veterans from gress. all parts of the country representing all national veterans organizations attended this conference. The response was immediate and encouraging. Many Congressmen who had recognized the need for action in housing and who had not understood the overwhelming interest that the people of the United States have in the T-E-W bill had their eyes opened, and it got many signatures on the discharge petition by which the bill could be brought up on the floor of the House.

Desipte the drive to bring the T-E-W bill up for action by discharge petition and the ceaseless efforts of those like myself in the Congress in behalf of the T-E-W bill, and although the bill was finally reported out by a majority of the House Banking and Currency Committee, it could not get action on the floor of the House. I pledged the House, however, that the fight for the T-E-W bill would continue and refused to compromise my position in support of this bill in any

OTHER DOMESTIC ISSUES—NATIONAL HEART DISEASE INSTITUTE

Housing is the country's No. 1 domestic issue, but the questions of health, education, social security, minimum wages, civil rights, have also demanded action by the Eightieth Congress. Few of these issues have been acted upon, yet it is very gratifying to me that after a year's work the Congress passed the bill H. R. 3792. which I introduced in June 1947 to create a National Heart Disease Institute within the Federal Public Health Service. There is no doubt in my mind but that heart disease, which is the Nation's fore-most disease killer, will be dealt a body blow as a result of the research and clinical work that will be initiated as a result of this legislation.

FEDERAL YOUTH ASSISTANCE ACT

During the special session I introduced a bill to provide Federal financial assistance to State and local youth projects. In my own district of Washington Heights and Inwood in New York City, the problems of youth demand immediate attention if they are to be dealt with in time to prevent broken lives. An outstanding citizens' organization, Youth Aid, Inc., has been working there and doing a great job on youth problems, under President Wright, of the College of the City of New York, Anne Lee Jacobs, Professor Shulman, of City College, and other leaders. But it needs financial help. This bill has met with a tremendous amount of enthusiasm among those engaged in the fight against juvenile delinquency because it provides what has been lacking for so long, the funds to carry out the many excellent preventative youth programs which never get beyond the blueprint stage, because of the lack of funds to carry them out. The very crowded schedule of the Committee on Education and Labor has prevented the consideration of this bill during the Eightieth Congress. From the evermounting support that this bill is getting, however, I feel confident that the Eightyfirst Congress will pass this or similar legislation.

HIGH COST OF LIVING

Ever aware of the burden that the high cost of living has placed upon the people of this country and my constituents, I have been engaged in the effort to stabilize and bring down the cost of living. I have already mentioned the fight to maintain rent control. This was a principal effort in behalf of stabilizing the cost of living since rents normally constitute 20 to 30 percent of the family budget. But the high cost of clothing, food, and taxes as well as shelter demanded attention and I have tried in every way possible to meet these adversaries of a high standard of living head on. I voted against giving special treatment and a subsidy to the wool growers. I campaigned for food-conservation measures and succeeded in getting the House of Representatives to write such a provision in the interim-aid bill passed by the Congress in December 1947. I joined in the fight to eliminate taxes on oleomargarine. Together with Senator FLANDERS, of Vermont, I sponsored a meat-rationing bill. Although the bill never got out of committee I believe that Senator FLANDERS and I accomplished a great deal by warning the meat industry against the same squeeze on the public of which they had been guilty in the spring of 1946. This action aroused a great deal of discussion and although the bill did not pass I believe the public opinion created was an important element in preventing a complete run-away of meat prices during the ensuing

When the controversial matter of tax reduction came up, I was guided primarily by the needs of the people of middle and low income in my district and all over the country to meet the high cost of living. As I said during the debate, "I voted for the reduction because the need of my constituents for some kind of help to meet the high living costs is so great that I feel as their Representative that I must vote for this bill with its imperfections rather than to accord them no help at all at this time." It is my conviction that the people of our district will be willing to increase taxes again if necessary, but they want the reduction now while we can afford it in view of the high living costs.

CIVIL RIGHTS

The problem of safeguarding the cherished American tradition of civil liberties has loomed large on the congressional horizon during the second session of the Eightieth Congress. The report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights touched off a tremendous amount of discussion in this field. Legislation has been introduced to create a Federal FEPC, to abolish the poll tax, to make lynching a Federal offense, and to eliminate segregation in its many forms.

Together with other Members I introduced legislation to create an FEPC during the first session of the Eightieth Congress, but unfortunately no action has been taken on this measure on the House side and from all appearances nothing will be done on it during the rush to adjourn. But this is must legislation and I intend to work for its passage early in the next Congress.

The dilemma of how to cope with the threat of communism in the United States was crystallized during the debate on the Mundt-Nixon Subversive Control Act of 1948. This measure became one of the most thoroughly discussed pieces of legislation to come before the Eightieth Congress and even was the subject of a great radio debate by two Presidential candidates. I am in accord with those who believe that no stone should be left unturned in dealing decisively with any threat by subversive elements to American political and economic institutions. I had to vote, finally, against this measure because I believed with Governor Dewey and Senator Taft that the Mundt-Nixon bill did not accomplish the purpose we sought, but outlawed the Communist Party and I did not believe that forcing the Communist Party underground is a way of dealing with the Communist threat, but rather of increasing it. There is sufficient legislation on the books, if vigorously prosecuted, to deal effectively with those dominated by a foreign government who seek to undermine American institutions. The Senate has shown that it agrees, for the Mundt-Nixon bill is not even coming out of committee To strike a blow at totalitarianism with totalitarian weapons is to put a time bomb under the great American fortress of civil rights.

I have stood against efforts to overthrow the guaranties of our Constitution, realizing that these guaranties must protect all if they are to protect I showed my evenhandedness in this by voting to punish those guilty of acts against our laws regardless of their politics, hence I voted to cite for contempt Messrs. Eisler and Josephson who had refused to answer the questions of a congressional committee. Disturbed by the manner in which the Committee on Un-American Activities was handling witnesses where their reputation and character was at stake, I introduced by resolutions a plan to substitute for the House Un-American Activities Committee a new joint committee of the House and Senate to investigate all Communist, Fascist, or other extremist movements in the United States with the understanding that the committee would have rules of procedure which would give people whose character was on trial a fair opportunity to clear themselves.

VETERANS' BENEFITS

The whole question of veterans' rights and benefits has also been a major consideration of the 80th Congress. The House Committee on Veterans' Affairs successfully sponsored through the Congress a bill increasing subsistence benefits from $65 to $75 for single veterans, $90 to $105 for married veterans, and $90 to $120 for veterans with more than one dependent.

This Congress took action to authorize the cashing of veterans' terminal-leave bonds.

Legislation has been enacted in connection with the disposal of war housing and to arrange for putting up barracks and other temporary structures for housing students attending schools and colleges under the GI bill of rights. I supported all this legislation and worked for it. I also was able to get some Government buildings put up at 187th Street and Amsterdam Avenue in my own district to help expand the facilities of Yeshiva University.

There was also passed by the House a bill to increase the allowances for dependents of disabled veterans and to help war widows and orphans. Also legislation was enacted to help with homes for paraplegics with Government assistance.

I believe that the Eightieth Congress has dealt with the most pressing of the veterans matters before it but there is still a tremendous backlog that will have to be taken up in the Eighty-first Congress.

FEDERAL AND POST OFFICE PAY RAISES

Another subject which deserves special attention is that of a pay raise for Federal and post office employees. The high cost of living has been especially hard on those who have been receiving incomes fixed by law despite the fact that the cost of living has skyrocketed during the last 2 years. The postal employees have been particularly handicapped because their basic salaries are lower than most other Federal employee pay schedules to begir with. I have consistently worked for and supported a $1,000 Federal and postal employee pay increase which would be realistic in terms of the present cost of living. A bill has now passed granting the postal employees a $450 annual pay raise, and other Federal employees an average $330 per annum increase. That is not enough, but it will beln.

Some action has been taken, also, to help those Federal employees who have already retired through the enactment of the Stevenson retirement bill which increased the annuities of retired Federal employees by 25 percent or $300 a year, whichever was the smaller, made provisions for refunding retirement contributions of employees who worked at least 5 years and less than 10 years, and generally made more flexible the retirement age of Federal employees.

SELECTIVE SERVICE

Every citizen will be giving the most serious consideration to the peacetime draft. It can only be justified if absolutely necessary in the interests of the Nation and on no other basis. People in my district will want to feel that the enactment of the draft at this time is not a measure in contemplation of war. but a measure to keep the peace. It must be tested, therefore, on the basis of its being an essential element in our foreign policy, which is a policy for peace. This policy consists of three parts: First, assisting in the economic reconstruction of the European democracies and other democratic nations provided that they do their best to help themselves and each other: second strengthening the UN to make it what we want-a true world organization for preserving the peace; and third, full performance of our international responsibilities.

It is the implementation of this last point which would require selective service if we could not get otherwise adequate occupation forces in Germany, Austria, Trieste, Korea, and Japan. voted against the bill because I did not believe that a sufficient case was made out that we could not get the necessary volunteer forces, so that we had to have a peacetime draft to fulfill our occupation obligations or to back up our foreign policy. If I thought we needed a draft right now I would have voted for it, but the Navy and Air Force appear to be able to do adequate recruiting, and only the Army is not getting enough men at this time. I believed additional measures should have been taken to recruit men for the Army before enacting a peacetime draft in the present international conditions.

It is estimated that the draft will call up about 200,000 men between 19 and 26 each year for 21 months' duty. are restrictions in the law regarding the exemptions of veterans who have already served a year or more, those with dependents, and the deferment of young men attending schools or colleges until the end of the school year, those taking professional training, and others. It will be up to us as legislators to guard carefully against any dominance of the country by the military and to insure that civilians at all times shall dominate the military forces and the Federal Government, in accordance with American tradition. We showed our ability to do this even in war, and we should be able to do it just as well in peace.

The prize of peace, prosperity, and stability which the American people fought for at great sacrifice and which they thought they had won in 1945 still lies just beyond our reach, but with wisdom, responsibility, and generosity, we can go far during the next years toward really accomplishing the goals for which the recent disastrous war was fought. The 80th Congress made some good beginnings, and there are also failures and frustrations to point to. I believe that in the 81st Congress, as in the 80th, the nettling problems of foreign policy will again be in the forefront of our consideration, and that the people of the United States will also action on the social issues which were passed over by the 80th Congress. gether, we, the people of the United States, will be building tomorrow as we are today a country capable of greatness and of leading toward a united and peaceful world organized democratically for its own salvation.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Plumley] is recognized for 60 minutes.

THE MAKING OF A CONGRESSMAN

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, yielding to the insistence and suggestion of many Members, I had prepared a revision of the 1947 revision of the making of a Congressman. It will be postponed until a later date and either be made by me or somebody else.

FEDERAL PAY BILL SHOULD CARRY FLEXIBILITY FORMULA

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, if permitted by the rule under which the Rees bills for a cost-of-living pay increase are to be considered. I shall offer an amendment to provide for a flexible formula based upon the cost-of-living index. This will not only achieve justice for Federal workers but will avoid maintaining inordinate salary levels if the need for a cost-of-living bonus should cease to exist.

My proposed amendment to H. R. 6917 is as follows:

On page 2, line 19, of H. R. 6917, amend by striking all of paragraph (b) and substituting therefor the following:

"(b) The additional compensation provided in section 1 shall be increased by $90 for each increase of nine points in the Consumers Price Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics as of April 1948; and the additional compensation shall be decreased by $90 for each decrease of nine points in the Consumers Price Index as of April 1948. Such increase or decrease shall become effective on the first day of the month following the publication by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of such nine-point change in the Consumers Price Index.'

The figure $90 is 25 percent of the temporary increase of $360, bearing the same relation to the total as 9 points bear to 36. The April 1948 index is 36 points above the July 1946 index and if the cost of living should decline to the 1946 level then a reduction to the salary level of that date when previous adjustments were made would be achieved in four steps. Further increases in the cost of living would be reflected in gradual advances in salary. It would be sound from the Government's standpoint because it would avoid heavy expenditures if not justified by the economic situation.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. REGAN (at the request of Mr. RAYBURN) for today and tomorrow, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers] is recognized for 10 minutes.

VETERANS' HOUSING

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in our earnest desire to solve the housing shortage let us not lose sight of the preferential order of the importance of our housing problems. The veterans' problem is still the most acute, and its treatment must command our attention until it is completely first solved.

I would like to call your attention to the all-important fact that the preference in occupancy provided in the Housing and Rent Act, and the preference in occupancy provided under title VI of the National Housing Act is a mere sham and delusion unless the veteran is also provided with an effective preference in his attempt to finance his purchase. Today, only the GI bill stands to offer the veteran any such financial preference. It obviously means nothing to tell our veterans that they may have first call on new homes if they do not have at least equal financing resources to compete with non-veterans. But we all recognize that our young veterans who were called away from their jobs and their education during the war cannot be expected to compete on equal terms with those who stayed home and accumulated savings during the war years.

In a nutshell, if we hope to tackle our most important housing problem first, we must provide preferential home financing aids to veterans.

The so-called T-E-W bill fails completely to solve this all-important, first problem. The net practical effect of the combined provisions of that bill is to nullify and destroy the last vestiges of financial preference to veterans of World War II that still remain in the housing picture. To do so in the face of facts published by the Bureau of the Census, that as late as April 1947 there were 14 veteran families overcrowded for every 4 nonveteran families overcrowded, would be an unpardonable repudiation by the Congress of the obligation of their Government to those veterans. This is accomplished through devious twistings of statutes, the meaning of which is already so obscure as to preclude the Members of this Congress from taking time to appreciate adequately their sig-When hearings were held in nificance. the Senate on a bill containing similar provisions to title VI of the T-E-W bill, Gen. Omar Bradley, then the Adminis-trator of Veterans' Affairs, wrote in part as follows:

It is believed that the enactment of those sections into law would accomplish results immediately and positively prejudicial to veterans in that-

(1) The substantially increased advantages to lenders embodied in the proposed changes will channelize lending under title I and title II of the National Housing Act, and thus divert or stem the flow of credit now participating generallly in lending under title III of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, with the result that the veteran will be compelled to accept loans on terms substantially less advantageous to him than of the terms which govern the GI loan.

(2) They will stimulate the ability of nonveterans to compete with the veteran for the purchase of housing in the lower-to-mediumcost brackets. This will further inflate the price of new housing to the prejudice of each prospective veteran purchase

It might be further pointed out that those of the proposals which are designed to inject further credit into the single-family housing field seek to attack the housing problem from almost the sole angle at which it is at least deficient. There is general agreement that the supply of financing under present legislation is more than adequate. The real need is to supply more materials and more labor and to translate those factors into more building at lower cost. approach the problem by providing addi-tional stimulants to credit expansion may result in further price inflation.

The consequences that General Bradley correctly foresaw and feared are even more real and fearsome in view of the elaborated layering of credit support on credit support which is sandwiched into the various titles of the T-E-W bill.

The attention of the Members of this House is drawn to the fact that despite the lapse of the insuring authorization of title VI of the National Housing Act, builders are proceeding with new home construction on an unprecedented scale. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that in April of this year 90,000 new dwelling units were started, with prospects that in May the number may possibly reach the 100,000 level. In the face of such performance and on the record of prior months, it appears that the combination of conventional loans plus the GI bill and FHA's title II will attract and provide ample production credit to keep the home-building industry at full steam. The Federal Housing Administration has liberalized their valuation standards for homes built under title II so that for practical purposes builders have about the same benefits as under the old

Rather than a rejuvenation of title VI. which is available to veterans and to nonveterans as well, the critical need of our home-hungry veterans is for a distinct plan whereby they may help themselves and under which we may be assured that a fair proportion of our nonetoo-large supply of construction materials and labor will be available to them. Precisely such a plan, clear and simple of operation, has been provided in the Veterans' Homestead Act of 1948, H. R. 4488. This bill was reported out by the Veterans' Affairs Committee unanimously. I would emphasize this unanimous endorsement of the veterans' homestead bill after very extensive hearings, because it is in focal contrast to other recent developments in this field.

Accordingly, in justice to our debt to the veterans of World War II, I urge you again to give the most careful consideration to the provisions of the Veterans' Homestead Act of 1948, H. R. 4488. The bill has the wholehearted support of the American Legion.

SENATE

Wednesday, June 16, 1948

(Legislative day of Tuesday, June 15, 1948)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou eternal God, we are again approaching Thy throne of grace through the old and familiar way of prayer which is always open to those who come with a humble spirit and a contrite heart.

Grant that this day may be glorious in the realization of Thy presence, Thy peace, and Thy power, and in the assurance that we are serving our generation according to Thy divine will. May we carry on bravely in the high adventure of building a finer civilization.

Make us eager to have a large part in ministering to the needs of all who are finding the struggle of life so difficult and who are discouraged because of hardships and handicaps.

To Thy name we ascribe the praise. Amen.

RESOLUTIONS OF CUSTER COUNTY, NEBR., POWER DISTRICT

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD two resolutions adopted by the Custer County, Nebr., power district, at Broken Bow, Nebr., relating to power supply by the Bureau of Reclamation.

There being no objection, the resolutions were received, referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CUSTER PUBLIC POWER DISTRICT, BROKEN BOW, NEBR.—REA PROJECT NO. NEBR. 83, CUSTER

CERTIFICATION

STATE OF NEBRASKA

County of Custer, ss.

Ivan D. Evans, secretary of the Custer Public Power District, do hereby certify that the resolution stated below is a full, true, and correct transcript and literal copy of a resolution passed by the board of directors at a meeting held May 26, 1948, as the same appears in the original minutes book, which is now in my possession and custody.

"Resolved, That this district request the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of Interior, and our Senators and Representative in Congress, to take all steps necessary to protect the interests of this district in any proposed allocations of Bureau of Reclamation power that would affect any distribution of power in the State of Nebraska and par-ticularly in the territory this district serves or will serve as an REA project.

"Further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Senator Butler, Senator WHERRY, and Congressman MILLER, and also the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of Interior, Washington, D. C., and Denver, Colo."

Dated this 14th day of June 1948. IVAN D. EVANS, [SEAL] Secretary.

CUSTER PUBLIC POWER DISTRICT, BROKEN EOW, NEER.—REA PROJECT No. NEBR. 83, CUSTER CERTIFICATION

STATE OF NEBRASKA

County of Custer, ss.

I, Ivan D. Evans, secretary of the Custer Public Power District, do hereby certify that the resolution stated below is a full, true, and correct transcript and literal copy of a resolution passed by the board of directors at a meeting held June 12, 1948, as the same appears in the original minutes book, which is now in my possession and custody:

"REQUEST FOR POWER SUPPLY BY THE BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

"Resolved, That the board of directors of the Custer Public Power District hereby request that the Bureau of Reclamation include in its plans to construct a 115-kilovolt transmission line to North Platte, Nebr., sufficient energy and substation capacity to supply the initial and ultimate wholesale power requirements of this district.

"Further resolved, That inasmuch as the Bureau of Reclamation has plans for hydroelectric and irrigation development in the Middle Loup River Basin within the project area of this district, that we urgently request the Bureau to make a full study of the desirability of extending their proposed North Platte transmission line on to the load center of this district, which load center would be immediately adjacent to the transmission lines that the Bureau would construct to interconnect their proposed hydroelectric plants in this area.

"Further resolved, That the Bureau of Reclamation be requested to furnish this district copies of their standard 'if and when' wholesale power contract containing the applicable terms, conditions, and rate schedules for customers such as this district.

"Further resolved, That if such contract is found satisfactory by the board of directors, that favorable action in regard to same be taken. The foregoing action being subject to the approval of the Rural Electrification Administration.

Dated this 14th day of June 1948. IVAN D. EVANS, Secretary.

THE CHILDREN'S FUND

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate for a moment. Last night, or perhaps it was this morning, the question was before the Senate on the European recovery appropriation bill relative to the Children's Fund, and the reduction of the provision contained in the House bill, from $60,000,000 to $20,000,000. Last night I voiced, most inadequately, my disapproval of the Senate amendment. I had not had time to think about it fully, but I thought then that a grave mistake was being made by the Senate. I was disturbed about it. Mr. President, and even after the long hours we had been in session, I did not rest too well last night, because I could not help but think of the circumstances and conditions of the people in the eastern countries of Europe, the people behind the iron curtain.

Mr. President, they are not Communists in large part. The people themselves are liberty loving. Their desire for liberty today is greater than ever, cause they are living under the tyrant's They want the kind of life we They look to America. We are spending millions upon millions of dollars in carrying our way of life to the people behind the iron curtain, and their governments, and the government of the Soviet Union, are combating our efforts with every kind of propaganda. When the word goes out that the Senate of the United States has reduced the sum which was allowed by the House from $60,000 .-000 to the pitiful sum of $20,000,000 for the care of little children in those countries, children who themselves are our hope for the future of democratic life in the very countries behind the iron curtain, I know it will be seized upon and used against us in all our efforts in those countries.

It was said last night that it makes no difference; that propaganda will be used against us anyway. That is quite true. But every bit of true ammunition we give to be used against us makes that propaganda more effective and more deadly.

So I rose again this morning only to express my even stronger and firmer conviction on the subject, and my hope that the conferees on the part of the Senate will see the situation as it really is and will recede from the position taken by the Senate, and permit the appropriation for the Children's Fund to remain at $60,000,000.

TIDELANDS LEGISLATION — TELEGRAM FROM GOVERNORS' CONFERENCE

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the Record a copy of a telegram sent to several Senators by a number of governors relative to the tidelands legislation.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Senator Robert A. Taft, Senator Kenneth S. Wherry, Senator C. Wayland Brooks, Senator Guy Cordon, Senator Leverett Saltonstall, Senator Homer Ferguson, Senator Alebert W. Hawkes, Senator Wallace H. White, Jr., Senator Raymond E. Baldwin, Senator Eugene D. Millikin:

The Governors' conference being on record as favoring the submerged lands and tidelands legislation now pending in the Congress, and this being a matter of vital concern to the States as it affects the fundamental rights of the States, and the Supreme Court having in its opinion clearly indicated that the Congress has the right and power to determine the national policy involved, and it being generally considered that the Congress at this session would pass upon this legislation before irreparable damage is done, and the House of Representatives having some time ago overwhelmingly passed this legislation, we respectfully urge that it be given priority on the agenda of remaining legislation to insure that action be taken upon it by the Senate before adjournment.

Horace A. Hildreth, Maine; Dwight H. Green, Illinois; C. A. Robins, Idaho; Frank Carlson, Kansas; Earl Warren, California; Alfred E. Driscoll, New Jersey; Robert D. Blue, Iowa; Walter W. Bacon, Delaware; Luther W. Youngdahl, Minnesota; Kim Sigler, Michigan; John H. Hall, Oregon; Thomas E. Dewey, New York; James H. Duff, Pennsylvania.

"THE LITTLE MAN" ALSO HAS SOME TARGETS—ARTICLE BY JOHN W. OWENS

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record at this point an article entitled "The Little Man' Also Has Some Targets," written by John W. Owens, and published in the Baltimore Sun of June 16, 1948. It is an article of challenging pith and moment.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"THE LITTLE MAN" ALSO HAS SOME TARGETS
(By John W. Owens)

Whether or not Mr. Truman has made lasting gains on this tour of the country nobody can say, but there is not much doubt left that he has done rather well by himself. The reason is not far to seek. Mr. Truman turned the tables.

Everybody had got into the habit of speaking of the President as an average man and many had come to speak of him habitually as a little man. In Congress, condescension often was unconcealed. What nearly every-body forgot was that this Republican Con-gress, which has been bedeviling Mr. Truman, is not overstocked with intellectual giants. For that matter, the Republican Presidential race is not overstocked with in-tellectual giants. There is no lack of targets on the Republican side. The "little man in the White House" put on his hat, went into the country and began to shoot. From time to time he placed his shot on a target. This, of course, does not overnight project Mr. Truman as a great statesman. But it does bring things into better proportion for Mr. Truman's benefit. It does direct attention to the fact that under the Dome of the Capitol is a considerable number of important figures who certainly need not be accepted as Moreover, the fight itself makes an appeal. Mr. Truman has been politically flat on his back. Flat on his back, he found the stamina which is a prime quality in his make-up. In politics, few things are more appealing—for the moment anyway—than the sight of a mild, good-tempered man who comes up fighting in circumstances which would break the hearts of most of the tough guys.

If one stands off at a little distance and looks at the scene, one may sometimes marvel that the Republicans can be toplofty with Mr. Truman and his mistakes.

Take this question of aid to Europe under the Marshall plan. As a concept it is comparable to the lend-lease plan evolved by Mr. Roosevelt. Each was the work of bold imagination in dealing with international conditions beyond precedent. Lend-lease served mightily in war to keep this Nation's friends on their feet. Thus it served a cause which this Nation believed to be the cause of humanity. At the same time, it helped to guard our welfare while we were trying to find our way and our policy. Aid to Europe under the Marshall plan is designed in the postwar period to keep this Nation's friends on their feet. In keeping this Nation's friends in Europe on their feet, it is designed—according to our kind of democratic faith—to serve the cause of humanity. At the same time it is designed to preserve our national defenses by holding outposts during the months or years in which we move toward some sort of settlement with Russia.

This Marshall plan of aid to Europe—on a scheduled, sustained basis—won the instant support of the large majority of men and women in this country who are concerned in the promotion of law and order in the world. It won their support in its first outlines and it won their support in its patiently detailed structure. It came to Europe as a beacon of salvation. Almost from the hour that it was announced some checking of the process of disintegration could be seen. Winter relief for some nations in the west of Europe became necessary last autumn, and winter relief may have saved the instant situation. But it was the prospect of scheduled, sustained aid in rehabilitation as well as in relief that steadied Europe in the touch-andgo months of the winter and early spring. So clear was the case for the Marshall plan that Mr. Stassen and Mr. Dewey supported it outright and Mr. VANDENBERG led the fight for it in Congress.

And who produced this massive plan for the preservation in Europe of our kind of democracy and our kind of freedom? Secretary of State George C. Marshall. Who appointed George C. Marshall to be Secretary of State? "The little man in the White of State? House." W Who has supported Secretary Marshall full and fair, through thick and thin? "The little man in the White House. who sniped at the plan, who dawdled over the plan? Old-line Republicans in both branches of Congress. There was so much sniping, so much dawdling that but for the fidelity of ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG-aided by the scare in the Italian elections—old-line Republicans might have fatally damaged authorization of the plan. And who in late days has been trying to meat-ax the appropriation to carry out the plan-endorsed as it is by three of the four leading Republican candidates for President? Who, indeed? You know the answer. Old-line Republicans in Congress.

Let "the little man in the White House" make it a fight. The mistakes are not all at his end of Pennsylvania Avenue.

OMINOUS IMPLICATIONS OF THE TARIFF COMPROMISE—EDITORIAL FROM THE BALTIMORE SUN

Mr. TYDINGS. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record at this point an editorial entitled "Ominous Implications of the Tariff Compromise," published in the Baltimore Sun of today. The article deals with the extension of the reciprocal trade agreements.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OMINOUS IMPLICATIONS OF THE TARIFF

The vote in the Senate on the renewal of the reciprocal trade-agreements program was 70 to 18. But the size of the majority in favor of it gives a false impression—23 of those 70 favorable votes were cast reluctantly by Democrats compelled to make a choice between renewal of the trade-agreements program on a weakened basis and no renewal at all.

The attack on the program started in the House of Representatives, which passed a renewal bill in a form calculated to cripple the whole program. The net effect of the House bill, if it had become the law, would have been to throw the whole business of tariff making back into Congress, and thus to revive all that log-rolling and back-scratching which were notoriously characteristic of tariff making for so many years. This evidence of Republican hostility to the program, this outburst of old-fashioned protectionism, was reflected in the Senate. But under the leadership of Senators VANDENEERG and MILLIKIN a compromise was finally worked out which got the approval of the Senate.

The compromise eliminated the worst feature of the House bill—that which would have restored the power of Congress to veto any changes in tariff rates under the program. But the compromise renews the program for 1 year only instead of 3; and it contains certain provisions which will clearly handicap the President in tariff negotiations.

The Senate compromise, therefore, is not one which can be greeted with enthusiasm by those who look upon the reciprocal tradeagreements program as an important element in our foreign policy. The best that can be said of it is that it is the lesser evil.

Yesterday, moving swiftly, the House ac-

Yesterday, moving swiftly, the House accepted the Senate compromise, and the bill has been sent to the President. The tradeagreements program has been saved, thanks largely to the efforts of Senator VANDENBERG and Senator Millikin, but those who are hostile to it have shown their strength, and we may be sure that they will come back to the fight a year from now more determined than ever to kill it.

REPORTING AND PRINTING THE PRO-CEEDINGS FOR THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the distinguished President pro tempore lay down the business that is privileged at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before doing that, the President pro tempore would like to take advantage of this opportunity to express a word of appreciation to some of the Senate servants whose efficiency is so total and constant that it is scarcely ever recognized.

The Chair reminds Senators that the Senate adjourned at 12:50 o'clock this morning. When we arrived at our offices we found the Congressional Record for the day, consisting of 248 pages, a complete and accurate transcription of the entire proceedings, which is, the Chair must say, as one who knows something about the publishing business, little short of a miracle in efficient production.

The Chair wishes to express our debt not only for this performance in itself, but as a symbol of the constancy with which we are served so efficiently not only by our reporting staff but by the Government Printing Office.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to join in the eloquent words expressed by the President of the Senate in expressing my deep appreciation of the services to which he has referred.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2318, to provide for a coordinated agricultural program, and the pending question is on the first amendment to the committee substitute. Meanwhile, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed] is recognized.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT RELATING TO CERTAIN AGREE-MENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 169)

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay down the veto message on Senate bill 110.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 110, a bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers, because it would permit an important segment of the economy to obtain immunity from the antitrust laws, and would do so without providing adequate safeguards to protect the public interest.

This bill would authorize exemption from the antitrust laws for any carrier acting in concert with one or more competing carriers in the establishment of rates and related matters, if the Interstate Commerce Commission approves the procedural agreements under which such action would be taken. The Commission would be required to approve these agreements if it should find that exemption from the antitrust laws would be in "furtherance of the national transportation policy."

Under this bill private carrier associations and rate bureaus, free from the restraints of the antitrust laws, could exercise broad powers over most forms of domestic transportation, including railroads, trucks and busses, water carriers, pipe lines, and freight forward-Carriers could agree privately among themselves upon the rates to be filed with, or withheld from, the Interstate Commerce Commission. Acting through these bureaus, groups of carriers could exercise a powerful deterrent influence upon the filing by an individual carrier of proposed rates which might benefit the public.

The exercise by private groups of this substantial control over the transportation industry involves serious potential harm to the public. Transportation rates affect the cost of goods as they move through each phase of production—from raw materials, through finished products, to the consumer. Power to control transportation rates is power to influence the competitive success or failure of other businesses. Legislation furthering the exercise of this power by private groups would clearly be contrary to the public interest.

My disapproval of this bill does not signify opposition to carrier associations as such, or to all of their present functions. Many of their activities are useful and desirable. However, this legislation is not necessary for the continuation of such activities.

No legislation giving a major industry immunity from the antitrust laws should be enacted unless adequate alternative safeguards are provided for the public interest. This measure fails to provide such safeguards. Even the limited safeguards incorporated in the bill as originally passed by the Senate are omitted from the bill in its present form. It would require the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve any agreement which it finds to be in "furtherance of the national transportation policy." This is a vague and general standard and is manifestly neither adequate nor appropriate as a criterion for waiving the protection afforded the public by the antitrust laws.

Furthermore, the Commission would be placed in the position of applying this general criterion to the basic procedural agreements without being able to foresee fully the nature and effect of the joint actions which would be taken thereunder. Nevertheless, the exemption from the antitrust laws would extend to these subsequent actions without the necessity of further Commission approval. It would extend, moreover, even beyond the parties to the basic agreement to any "other persons" who participate in such actions.

Even though transportation rates are subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the public interest nevertheless demands that the general national policy of maintaining competition continue to be applied to this industry. Our present transportation policy contemplates a pattern of partial regulation, within the framework of which the pressures of competition will remain substantially effective. Regulation cannot entirely replace these competitive pressures. It can guard against some of the potential abuses of monopoly power, but it cannot be an effective substitute for the affirmative stimulus toward improved service and lower rates which competition provides. By sanctioning rate control by groups of carriers. this legislation would represent a departure from the present transportation policy of regulated competition. This, I believe, would be a serious mistake, with far-reaching effects on our economy.

Antitrust cases are now before the courts challenging some of the very activities which would be covered by this bill. Pending judicial clarification of the issues raised in these proceedings, it would be inappropriate to provide the immunity proposed by this bill.

I have repeatedly urged upon the Congress the necessity for a vigorous antimonopoly program. This bill would be inconsistent with such a program.

For these compelling reasons, I find it necessary to withhold my approval from the measure.

HARRY S. TRUMAN. THE WHITE HOUSE, June 10, 1948.

The Senate proceeded to reconsider the bill (S. 110) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, may I ask whether this privileged matter displaces all other business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is entirely privileged, and displaces nothing. Mr. AIKEN. It does displace the pending business, does it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Only long enough for the Senate to act on the veto message, then the unfinished business will be automatically resumed.

Mr. AIKEN. The discussion and vote will not displace the unfinished business? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will not.

The question before the Senate is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum? Mr. BEED. I yield for that purpose

Mr. REED. I yield for that purpose. Mr. WHERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Mc-CARRAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a national delegate by the President to the annual conference of the International Labor Organization, meeting in San Francisco, Calif.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRICKER in the chair). Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, we have just had a quorum call. I should like to propose a unanimous-consent request for a limitation of debate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his request until the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] returns to the Chamber?

Mr. WHERRY. I can make the request, and we can discuss it. The Senator from Georgia will be in the Chamber shortly.

Mr. RUSSELL entered the Chamber.
Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished Senator from Georgia if he will not confer with the minority leader [Mr. Barkley], with whom I usually consult before proposing such an agreement, although I did not have an opportunity to talk with him this time.

I think it would expedite matters if we could agree on a time to vote. I am not one to set the hour. The time for voting should be agreeable to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed]. If the Senator from Georgia could suggest a time which would be acceptable to him, and the time between now and the time for voting could be properly divided, I think the work of the Senate today would be very much expedited.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Let me suggest to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska that he withhold his request for a few moments until I can make a few inquiries and confer with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'Mahoney], who is now on his way to the Chamber.

Mr. WHERRY. If he is on his way to the Chamber, let me make a suggestion so that we can begin thinking about it. It is now nearly 12:30. I am wondering if 2 o'clock would be a satisfactory hour.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sure that that time would not be satisfactory. I am anxious to arrive at a reasonable time, but 2 o'clock would allow entirely too little time to devote to a subject of this

Mr. WHERRY. Would the Senator consider any other hour, depending upon the approval of the Senator from Wyo-

Mr. RUSSELL. I should be glad to consider the hour of 3 o'clock, but I do not wish to be committed to that hour at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. Aiken] wishes to get ahead with the farm program bill, and proceed to a vote. This is a privileged matter. I am quite sure that if we could get unanimous consent we could expedite reconsideration of Senate bill 110 and get back to the farm program bill. I hope to have the full approval of the Senator from Vermont in arriving at a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at some appropriate hour.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, as I understood the ruling of the Chair a few moments ago, the laying down of the veto message is a privileged matter, but reconsideration of the bill is not a privileged matter. However, I would not object to a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that consideration of the veto message is a privileged matter, as well as the matter of laying it before the Senate.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, we had a different occupant of the chair a few minutes ago---

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Chair is absolutely correct. There would be no point in making the laying down of the message a privileged matter, if its consideration were not privileged. I have always understood that consideration of a veto message is a privileged matter.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator in charge of the proposed legislation. My only hope is that Senators in a position to do so can see their way clear to agree upon an hour for voting. I am not undertaking to fix the hour. I should like to have an hour fixed for the vote, for the reason that many Senators are busy in committees, and it would be a great help to them to know when the vote will be had. I appeal to my colleague from Wyoming [Mr. O'Mahoney], who is working with me on a very important conference, to agree to fix a time for the vote.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the persuasive qualities of my friend from Nebraska. This bill is one of the most important measures that this Congress will have to consider. In the terrific rush which the able and distinguished driver of the majority is managing with his bull whip, we have no time to devote to the important problems of the people. Probably I shall not object eventually to a settlement; but until there has been some opportunity to explain what was done with respect to this bill in the conference, and until those of us who are opposed to changing the traditional American system of free competitive enterprise have an opportunity to debate this question so that at least some Members of this body who are not in various subcommittees or conferences which are now meeting all over the Capitol in the insensate rush to close the Congress by the 19th of June may have an opportunity to know what this is all about, I shall not agree to a limitation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in view of that statement, I suppose it is hopeless to go further. We are now taking up valuable time that might be used for debate. However, I am hopeful that after the debate has proceeded for a time the distinguished Senator from Wyoming can suggest an hour which he feels will be acceptable. Later, in the event that the debate promises to continue for some time, we may obtain unanimous consent.

I do not wish to deprive the able Senator from Wyoming of the opportunity to make an argument. However, I wish to observe that the bill has been debated, and the only question before the Senate now is consideration of the veto message. I think it would be a very fine thing if the Senator from Wyoming would consider the fact that Senators working on committees would like to know at what hour the vote will be had.

Mr. President, later I shall make another suggestion, but I shall wait until the Senator from Wyoming feels that the debate has progressed sufficiently far so that we may obtain an agreement to vote.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Members of the Senate who have been working day and night during the past week probably are more or less physically exhausted, and they may not be able to prolong the debate. They may not be able to develop all the issues which ought to be developed. Speaking for myself, I have no intention of addressing the Senate at any undue length. However, I wish to have the opportunity clearly to lay before Members of this body the significance and effect of the passage of this bill, if I am capable of doing it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there gathered in Washington yesterday about 60 or 75 representatives of traffic organizations, covering the entire Nation. At the close of their deliberations yesterday afternoon they issued a statement which is so clearly an exposition of everything that is included in the veto message that I shall read it to the Senate as my statement. Those who issued this statement are the top-flight traffic experts of the country. Among them are representatives of agricultural, industrial, and commercial organizations. At the close of my comments on this matter and the reading of the statement, I shall place in the RECORD a list of the organizations participating in the conference.

Here is the statement of fact the conference made:

President Truman on June 12 vetoed S. 110, the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, to extend the regulatory power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to cover procedures among regulated carriers—rail, motor, and water—through which carriers and shippers may give consideration to rate changes preliminary to their publication and filing with the Interstate Commerce Commission. In his message, the President says his disapproval of the bill "does not signify opposition to carrier associations," many of whose activities be described as "useful and desirable." The shippers of the country go further than the President and say that carrier rate committees are not only useful and desirable but are absolutely necessary.

Mr. President, these are the top-flight executive traffic men in the country, representing shippers, and only shippers.

I read further from their statement:

The system of regulated transportation under the Interstate Commerce Act could not function successfully if there were no such committees.

In transportation circles, either among shippers, carriers, or governmental regulatory bodies there has been no doubt that such committees, as they have been organized and have operated for half a century, were lawful. It is only within the past few years that the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice has made such an issue of their legality under the antitrust laws that it has become necessary to appeal to Congress to say what is its intent in the area of conflict asserted to exist between two of its own acts.

Both Houses of Congress, at the insistent and urgent demand of thousands of shippers in every section of the Nation, and after most exhaustive hearings and careful consideration, passed S. 110, the Reed-Bulwinkle bill. The bill does not do the things alleged in the veto message of the President. It does not enable private groups to control rates. It does not remove the rate-making process from the full and final control of the Commission. It does not substitute private rate making for government supervision and regulation of transportation rates under the Interstate Commerce Act.

It does not, as implied in the President's veto, remove the carriers from the general provisions of the antitrust laws. It does not render moot or defeat the pending antitrust suit of the State of Georgia or the one at Lincoln, Nebr.

It does not remove or weaken the safeguards thrown around commerce by present laws. On the contrary it continues all the safeguards we now have and throws new safeguards around such regulation and procedures by giving the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the first time, jurisdiction over and power to control rate-committee practices.

The bill resolves the conflict alleged to exist between the antitrust laws and the Interstate Commerce Act. It reaffirms the intent of Congress that regulation under the Interstate Commerce Act shall continue to be the responsibility and function of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It recognizes that this is the only way in which transportation rates can be successfully regulated and that the present system of rate making must be preserved in the interest of the shippers.

Large shippers might be able, after a fashion, to cope with the situation that would result from the elimination of the present method of rate making. The hundreds of thousands of small shippers, whose business does not justify the maintenance of large traffic departments, however, would be next to helpless if the present rate-making method is discontinued. No shipper should be subjected to the confusion that would result from such action.

Without present rate-making methods, the small shipper particularly, would not be informed of proposed changes in his rates or those of his competitors, or of existing services. He would be put to the impossible task of trying to confer separately and individually with numerous rail carriers and still more numerous carriers by motor. It would also lead to costly and endless litigation to all parties.

That is why, with virtual unanimity, shippers and shippers' organizations from every section of the country, representing agriculture and industry, urged that Congress pass S.110, the Reed-Bulwinkle bill. That is why today, after the bill has been vetoed by President Truman under an apparent misconception of its meaning and effect, these shippers now urge upon Congress that the bill be enacted into law over the President's

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15, 1948.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in the Recorp a list of the shippers' organizations that participated in the conference yesterday.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Among the national and regional shippers' organizations represented at the meeting on the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, S. 110, on June 15, 1948, were the following: The National Industrial Traffic League, National Association of Shipper Advisory Boards, Conference of American Small Business Organizations, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, National Council of Farm Cooperatives, National Cotton Compress and Cotton Warehouse Association, National League of Fruit and Vegetable Distributors, American Paper and Pulp Association, Manufacturing Chemists' Association, Automobile Manufacturer's Association, Mississippi Valley Association, New England Industrial Traffic League, the Southern Traffic League, the Southwestern Industrial Traffic League, the Illinois Territory Industrial Traffic League, the Central Territory Rate Conference, the New England Shipper's Advisory Board, the Atlantic States Shipper's Advisory Board, the Midwest Shipper's Advisory Board, the Southern Shipper's Advisory Board, the Northwest Shipper's Advisory Board, the Growers and Shipper's League, New England Paper and Pulp Traffic Association, United Fresh Fruit Vegetable Association, Northwest Horticultural Council, Apple Grower's Association, West Coast Lumberman's Association, Georgia-Alabama Textile Traffic Association, Wisconsin Paper & Pulp Manufacturers Traffic Association, Texas Industrial Traffic League, Southern Hardwood Traffic Associa-

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me say to my southern friends that in the conference held yesterday not only was all the shipping world covered by the conference represented, but there were also in attendance representatives of the National Association of Shipper Advisory Boards, the National Council of Farm Cooperatives, the National Cotton Compress and Cotton Warehouse Association, the Valley Association, the Mississippi Southern Traffic League, the South-western Industrial Traffic League, the Southern Shippers' Advisory Board, the Georgia-Alabama Textile Traffic Association, the Texas Industrial Traffic League, and the Southern Hardwood Traffic Association.

In all my experience in the Senate, I have never seen a piece of legislation which has commanded such widespread support from shippers the United States over. The Grange, the Farm Bureau, and the various other agricultural associations, with one exception, have endorsed this bill.

Mr. President, during the hearings we filed in the record approximately 950 expressions of approval of the bill. Its enactment is absolutely necessary.

I do not wish to prolong this debate. What I am saying has been said over and over again. But here is the fact: In the beginning of railroad rate making, every railroad published its own rates. As the commerce of the country grew in volume it also grew in complexity, and the ratemaking process became so complex that to enable shippers intelligently to determine what rates would be applied there had to be rate bureaus and rate conferences that included more than one railroad. About thirty-odd bureaus and conferences of that kind have operated in the last 40 or 50 years. For 40 years, up to 1942, no question was ever raised as to their lawfulness or legality.

There is no way to make freight rates except through the conference method. The Interstate Commerce Act requires that the railroads form through routes and then establish joint rates. The through-route requirement was included in the Interstate Commerce Act, section 1, so that a shipper would not have to unload his car when it got to the end of any particular railroad. As I recall, it is section 18 of the Interstate Commerce Act that requires—not permits, but requires—the railroads to establish through rates on which to operate the joint routes.

Now, Mr. President, in the name of high heaven, how can two or more railroads establish joint rates and through routes without conferring with each The Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, under what was in my opinion a wholly strained construction of the antitrust law, filed a criminal proceeding in Chicago against one of these rate bureaus in 1942. The Interstate Commerce Commission, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Agriculture, virtually all State authorities of the country, and every shipper's organization of which I have any knowledge have filed their approval of the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was interested in the Senator's statement that all the departments of the Government ask that the veto be overridden. I should like to know the basis of the Senator's statement.

Mr. REED. They have supported the

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator have any statement here from any department that is now urging the Senate to override the veto?

Mr. REED. There are the most complete hearings on the bill of any bill of which I have any knowledge. There was special authority given under the War Powers Act to waive the antitrust law where certain things were necessary during the emergency, and after the case was filed in 1942 in Chicago, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Agriculture, and the War Production Board joined in an action through the War Production Board to continue the conference system of establishing rates.

Mr. RUSSELL. It seems to me there is quite a difference between the situation the Senator outlines, and having the departments request the Congress to override a veto of the President of the United States.

Mr. REED. I do not think I said that.

Mr. REED. I do not think I said that. Mr. RUSSELL. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. REED. Of course, they have always supported the bill, and if they were going to be consistent they would have to continue their support. Be that as it may. I want to say to my friend from Georgia and my friend from Alabama, there is nothing in the bill that in any way allows or permits discrimination against the South in the freight-rate structure: there is nothing in the bill that would affect the validity of the Georgia suit in the Supreme Court, and there is nothing in the bill that would affect the antitrust proceedings pending in the court at Lincoln, Nebr. This bill has been trimmed down to where the only thing it does is to give exemption in the making of rates, fares, and charges and the actual handling of equipment and costs of handling equipment as between the different railroads.

Mr. RUSSELL. In the course of the trimming down to which the Senator refers it is quite unusual that the amendment which specifically retained all the rights of action to the State of Georgia was among the first of the casualties. It was the first to be eliminated in the trimming. I hope the statement of the distinguished Senator as to the effect the bill will have upon the right of action in the State of Georgia in the Supreme Court is correct, but I apprehend that if the Congress shall override the veto of the President and enact the bill into law despite the veto, there will immediately be filed a supplemental brief or pleadings in the Supreme Court pointing out that the cause of action of the State of Georgia can only be applied to past conduct on the part of the rate-making agency and can have no possible effect upon what may take place in the future.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Let me answer the Senator from Georgia. I intend to deal with what has been included in the agreements or the definition of agreements in the different phases of what was originally called the Bulwinkle bill, as I shall identify it here.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I think the Senator is entirely too modest. Without the earnest, diligent, continuous and ardent support of the Senator from Kansas the bill would not now be before the Senate after a veto; it would never have been passed. If there is to be any justice in applying names to legislation, and if the Senate is willing to share whatever criticism or ignominy may be heaped upon him in the future as a result of the enactment of the bill. I think the name of the distinguished Senator from Kansas, like that of Abou Ben Adhem should lead all the rest in connection with the amendment, because he has certainly been more responsible than any other individual for having carried it thus far in the legislative process

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will

the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McFARLAND. If I correctly un-derstood the Senator, he stated the bill would not affect the Georgia case.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McFARLAND. The attorneys who are handling the Georgia case will not agree with the Senator, will they?

Mr. REED. I think they will. Mr. McFARLAND. That is not the information the Senator from Arizona has received. Would the Senator say the bill would not affect the western case so far as rates are concerned?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas

so contends.

Mr. McFARLAND. The Department of Justice informed the Senator from Arizona that so far as the rate part of that case is concerned it will do away with it. Where does the Senator get his information? Is it the result of his own analysis, or is it from the attorneys for the defendants in those cases?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the case of the State of Georgia rests upon the allegation of a conspiracy between the railroads to establish rates which were illegal because discriminatory. The bill has no relation at all to any case that rests upon conspiracy. The bill, if enacted into law as I firmly believe it will be today, will not affect the Georgia case or the Lincoln case in the slightest degree.

Mr. McFARLAND. Where does the Senator get his information? Is it from his analysis, or is it from the opinion of the attorneys from the defendants in the cases?

Mr. REED. It is from my own analysis plus the information I have had from attorneys in the case.

Mr. McFARLAND. Attorneys for the defendants?

Mr. REED. Yes; for the defendants. Mr. McFARLAND. Yes—because the attorneys who are handling the case, who are prosecuting the case, say emphatically it will do away with the case so far as rates are concerned.

The bill cuts the very heart out of the case. Who shall we believe-the attornevs who are prosecuting the case, or the attorneys who are defending the case?

Mr. REED. I do not know what particular attorneys the Senator has in mind, but if they were not any nearer to the truth than the group of "screwballs" from the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice who appeared continuously and at length in the hearings. their statement is not worth much.
Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I do not like to hear the Senator from Kansas say that the representatives of the Department of Justice are "screwballs." I would not say that in regard to the attorneys who are defending the legislation. I think they are able attorneys, on both sides. I give them both credit for having their own views and expressing them; but on the floor of the United States Senate I do not like to hear able attorneys called "screwballs."

Mr. REED. I had no reference to any particular attorney engaged in the case. I do not know who the attorneys are.

Mr. McFARLAND. If the Senator does not know who they are, to whom was he referring when he called them "screwballs"?

Mr. REED. I was referring to attorneys from the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. If those gentle-men are not "screwballs," I cannot recognize "screwballs," after listening to them day after day for a long time.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield. Mr. HILL. The Senator says that this bill will not affect the Georgia case. As the Senator well knows, when the bill was before the Senate, the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] offered an amendment, which was adopted by the Senate, expressly stating that this bill should not affect the Georgia case, and yet, when the bill went to conference, his amendment was eliminated. If the bill will not affect the Georgia case, why was not the language of that amendment permitted to remain in the bill?

Mr. REED. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hawkes] made a more careful analysis of the effect of the so-called Russell amendment than did the Senator from Kansas, and he expressed himself during the debate upon the report of the conference committee

Mr. HILL. But it is not a question of what the Senator from New Jersey thinks about it. The Senate of the United States adopted that amendment. and the Senate conferees went to conference as the agents of the Senate to fight for the amendments which the Senate had made to the bill. I am now asking one of those agents of the Senate why that amendment was taken out of the bill, particularly since the Senator from Kansas says that the bill does not affect the Georgia case in any way.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Georgia have sat in many conferences. I suggest they furnish a list of conferences over controverted questions

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Let me finish.

Mr. HILL. The Senate conferees may have come back with everything they individually wanted, but they certainly did not come back with everything the Senate wanted, when they surrendered and permitted the amendment to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. REED. We discussed specifically every amendment which the Senate wrote into the bill. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] offered four amendments which were adopted by the Senate. The conference committee saved one. The other three went out. The Senator from Georgia put in one amendment, but the House conferees were determined not to touch it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Did the House conferees take the position that the amendment did not in any way affect the case pending in the Supreme Court?

Mr. REED. I do not know that the matter was discussed in that detail, but I think that was the impression of the House conferees.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, we all know that in conferences there must be a spirit of compromise if legislation is to be obtained, but it is rather remarkable in this case that an amendment, which the Senator says was of no effect, but which the majority of the Senate thought was necessary to protect the State of Georgia, was stricken from the bill. The mere fact that the House conferees were adamant in their stand against the amendment, as the Senator relates they were, is clear evidence to me that the elimination of this amendment strikes a death blow at a cause of action which has cost the State of Georgia a great deal of money and a great deal of time, and as to which the Supreme Court has said there was a real cause of action. That leaves the State of Georgia, a sovereign State. absolutely helpless in the matter as against the machinations of a group of freight bureaus, after the Senate had put its arm around the sovereign State of Georgia to protect it from such a situation.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. It not only affects the State of Georgia, but, indirectly, affects the whole South. The entire South will be hurt. The Senate of the United States adopted the amendment, and I do not see how the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hawkes] could consent. to the elimination of an amendment which affects all the Southern States.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Western States are just as much involved.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Wyoming will content himself for a few minutes, I shall try to come to the end of the initial discussion of the question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My request of the Senator was designed to illuminate the point which he has made. He said, if I heard him correctly, that the conference report and the bill, as it is now proposed to pass it over the President's veto, does not impair the power of the Supreme Court to rule against conspiracies.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator says that, then may I ask him to interpret to the Senate the reason for the elimination by the conferees of two specific amendments? We have been discussing the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] which was adopted by the Senate. Let me read that amendment so that it may be clear in the RECORD:

The enactment of this section shall not-(a) deprive the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to hear and determine the case of Georgia versus Pennsylvania Railroad Company et al., Docket No. 11—

And so forth-

or any proceeding for the enforcement of the provisions of any decree entered in such suit;

(b)-

I interpolate-"shall not"- change any principle of substantive or procedural law otherwise applicable in the determination of such suit or proceeding, or deprive any party to such suit of any relief to which such party would be entitled but for the enactment of this section; or

(c) render lawful the performance of any past or future act which shall have been found by the Supreme Court in such suit or proceeding as it relates to the parties to such suit to be unlawful or which shall be prohibited by the terms of any decree entered therein or any supplement thereto or any modification thereof.

That amendment has been completely eliminated. So it seems to us that the attempt which was made by the Senate of the United States to preserve this action already initiated by a sovereign State should not have been affected by the conference report.

Just another quotation, with the Senator's indulgence. This was an amendment which was inserted by the Senate in order to make sure that no conspiracies would be permitted under the Bulwinkle-Reed bill. I read from paragraph (6):

Nothing in this section and no approval of any agreement by the Commission under this section shall be so construed as in any manner to remove from the purview of the antitrust laws any restraint upon the right of independent action by any carrier by means of boycott, duress, or intimidation.

In other words, the Senate said there should be no approval of any device by which boycott, duress, or intimidation should be applied to any carrier. The conference eliminated that amendment. Is that the way to prevent conspiracy?

Mr. REED. When some useless language is inserted in a bill for political purposes, and accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill at the end of 5 days' debate in order to get the bill through the Senate, and the conferees on the part of the House say, "If you expect us to consider that kind of bunk seriously you are mistaken."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator say it is useless to prevent boycott, coercion, or intimidation, and can it be prohibited when exemption is being granted from the law which enforces it?

Mr. REED. Of course we are not granting any exemption. The constant misstatements of the Senator from Wyoming—I wish he would make them in his own time—

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no limitation on debate.

Mr. REED. No; and certainly the Senator from Wyoming exercises his privilege very freely in that respect.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator object to being catechised on this subject?

Mr. REED. It would not do any good to object to the Senator from Wyoming utilizing his privilege as a Senator and taking a lot of time in debate. Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator can substitute personalities for argument, and I have no objection to that, because I know the RECORD will show that personalities cannot outweigh the facts. The facts are that the Senate put in the bill a prohibition against boycott, intimidation, and coercion, and the conferees took it out.

Mr. REED. It is in the law, anyway. Mr. O'MAHONEY. Where?

Mr. REED. I shall call attention to it later. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to permit me to complete my statement, and then make his speech and make his statements, including his misstatements, in his own time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator be good enough to point out my misstatements?

Mr. REED. I do not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield, Mr. REED. Now let me deal briefly

Mr. REED. Now let me deal briefly with the history of the so-called Bulwinkle bill. It came up about 4 years ago, and in its original form, as it passed the House, it granted exemption to agreements made between two or more carriers. It did not say what kind of agreements. It did grant exemption from antitrust laws when agreements were submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission and approved by the Commission.

When the bill came to the Senate and went to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, we rewrote the bill. I had an active part in doing so. In our version, when we rewrote it, we defined the subjects which might be the basis of agreement. We named rates, fares, charges, schedules, damages, and various other things. That was the form in which the bill was passed by the Senate. It was presented in the Senate first in the Seventy-ninth Congress, in the year 1946, and did not pass. That was the form, virtually, in which it came up last year, and the Senate passed it.

The House was too restricted in its first version. Here in the Senate—and I accept a share of the responsibility—we perhaps were too liberal in trying to designate too many subjects. So an attempt was made in the form of the bill which is before the Senate today, and was before the conference, to limit the bill purely to rates, fares, charges, and the adjustment of the costs or payments by railroads for using each other's transportation facilities.

Mr. President, that is a part of the reason why the Russell amendment was deleted, and why some of the amendments offered by the Senator from Wyoming were eliminated. It was in order to bring the bill down to its strictest fundamentals, to limit it to them, and that is its form today. It does not touch anything except rates, fares, and charges. It is not retroactive. It affects only those actions for the future. It provides for independent action on the part of any participant in an agreement, regardiess of the action of the conference.

I think that with this statement, Mr. President, I shall yield the floor at this

BOYCOTT, DURESS, OR INTIMIDATION PERMITTED

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has yielded the floor without in the slightest degree giving the Senate any explanation at all as to why in his opinion the bill in the form in which it was reported by the conference prevents intimidation, boycott, or duress. He has contented himself with a mere all-inclusive statement that such practices are prohibited by law, but the purpose of the proposed law which the Senator from Kansas is urging upon the Senate is to eliminate from the prohibitions of the antitrust laws the type of agreement which the transportation industry is permitted under this bill to make.

The language is perfectly clear. These organizations may make agreements—and I am quoting from the language of the conference bill—

Relating to transportation under joint rates or over through routes; and for purposes of this paragraph carriers by railroad, express companies, and sleeping-car companies are carriers of one class; pipe-line companies are carriers of one class; carriers by motor vehicle are carriers of one class; carriers by water are carriers of one class; and freight forwarders are carriers of one class.

So under the bill which we are now asked to pass over the veto of the President of the United States there is authority granted by Congress, not to the railroads to fix rates, not at all, but to an organization of the transportation industry to fix rates, and to deal with matters relating to transportation over every type of carrier that operates in the commerce of the United States. It includes not only railroads, but also express companies, sleeping-car companies, pipe-line companies, motor-vehicle companies, carriers by water, and freight forwarders. So that here the authority is granted by Congress for a combination of all competing systems of transportation in the United States into one single organization, which will then in effect govern the transportation industry of America regardless of the wishes of the individual carriers.

Let us not deceive ourselves. We are not doing what even the shippers believe is being done. We are establishing a private collectivism. We are taking away from the States in their sovereign capacity the right to protect their own citizens, and we are giving to a private organization, privately created, without any semblance of a standard in the law, the power to govern the transportation industry of America.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

GIVES TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY ITS OWN

Mr. HILL. Might it not be well said that by the bill we would be giving them the power to set up a supergovernment of their own?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The truth of the matter, I will say to the Senator from Alabama, is that we are doing precisely that with respect to the transportation industry.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming if he has ever heard of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, the Senator from Vermont knows very well that I have heard of the Interstate Commerce Commission:

Mr. FLANDERS. I would not have thought so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I challenge the Senator to read the bill. If he does, he will see that the bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission is given a mandate to approve the type of agreement authorized here.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is not the fact. That is not correct.

Mr. FLANDERS. There was no evidence, I will say to the Senator from Wyoming, from his remarks that he was aware of the existence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is a creature of Congress, which can set rules for its operations and standards for its approval, and that is the safeguard of the shippers of the country and of the interests involved with the railroads. I merely wanted to call the Senator's attention to the existence of that

DEPRIVES INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION OF POWER TO PROTECT SHIPPERS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Vermont is apparently unaware of the effect of the language of the bill, which takes away from the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to protect the shippers of the State of Vermont as well as shippers of the State of Georgia, because the mandate is here given that. unless these agreements fall within certain very narrow categories, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall approve them.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether those categories are protective categories to shippers, or whether they are categories hostile to shippers?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. These are categories which serve the shippers; categories of transportation companies which serve the shippers; and we are now giving them the right to govern themselves with relation to transportation under joint rates over all through routes, and for the purpose of this paragraph all carriers are grouped together.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Wyoming that it is not clear to me from what he has just said in what way the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission in defending the rights of shippers are decreased by this legislation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall show that to the Senator.

Mr. FLANDERS. That is important. Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to do that. When the bill was before the Senate-

Mr. FLANDERS. I have the bill before me, I may say to the Senator, and shall be glad to be referred to the specific point in the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have now before me the bill as it passed the Senate. I am reading from page 2:

Any carrier, party to an agreement between or among two or more carriers

This Senate language appears-does the Senator from Vermont follow me?

Mr. FLANDERS. I have found the

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator may now have before him the bill as reported by the conference. Does he?
Mr. FLANDERS. That is the bill which is under consideration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. That is what the Senator has before him?

Mr. FLANDERS. That is what I have before me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Very good. I now read:

Any carrier, party to an agreement between or among two or more carriers-

The Senate version had this language. Mr. FLANDERS. But the Senate version is not before us.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will permit me to answer him, he will receive his answer. These words were inserted by the Senate and were stricken out by the conference:

concerning, or providing rules or regulations pertaining to or procedures for the consideration, initiation, or establishment of-

Those words have been deleted. So the sentence reads:

Any carrier, party to an agreement between or among two or more carriers relating to rates, fares, charges (including the charges as between carriers).

Now I want the Senator to see that the substitution of the words "relating to" for the provision of the Senate bill "concerning, or providing rules or regulations pertaining to or procedures for the consideration, initiation, or establishment of" is very much broader.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to ask the Senator if the words which he read from the Senate bill were ever in the

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They were in the bill as it was passed by the Senate.

Mr. FLANDERS. The question have before us is as to whether the bill presently before us diminishes the ability of the Interstate Commerce Commission to protect the interests of shippers.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will permit me to lay before the Senate this entire section, I think he will see the point. I proceed:

Relating to rates, fares, charges (including charges as between carriers), classifications, divisions, allowances, time schedules, routes, the interchange of facilities-

Mr. FLANDERS. Excuse me a min-The words are not exactly the words that I get from the bill which the President vetoed. I do not know the reasons for the differences.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That language of the Senate bill was changed. I have been reading from paragraph 2:

Rules pertaining thereto or procedures for the joint consideration-

Let me go back to the sentence as it is in the conference report:

Any carrier party to an agreement between or among two or more carriers relating to rates, fares, classifications, divisions, allowances, or charges (including charges between carriers and compensation paid or received for the use of facilities and equipment)-

This is much broader than the Senate or rules or regulations pertaining thereto, or procedures for the joint consideration, initiation or establishment thereof, may, under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, apply to the Commission for approval of the agreement, and the Commission shall by order approve any such agreement (if approval thereof is not prohibited by paragraph (4), (5), or (6), if it finds that, by reason of furtherance of the national transportation policy declared in this act)-

That means the policy of the existing law.

The relief provided in paragraph (9) should apply with respect to the making and carrying out of such agreement; otherwise the application shall be denied.

LANGUAGE IS DECEPTIVE

As I pointed out upon the floor in the original debate, this language is very carefully drawn to appear to be a restraint upon those who make the agreement, whereas in fact it is a restraint upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission "shall" approve these agreements. These agreements may be made by all carriers, not only railroads, but also by pipe lines, and motor vehicles, and freight forwarders, and the like. So here we have a clear purpose to transfer from the Interstate Commerce Commission to the new organization to be set up, the power to make these rates.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that he read one section with emphasis, and a second section sotto

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will raise my voice for the Senator.

Mr. FLANDERS. I would like to read that particular sentence with emphasis. Mr. O'MAHONEY. Now, Mr. Presi-

Mr. FLANDERS. I read:

If it finds that by reason of furtherance-

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me say before the Senator proceeds-

Mr. FLANDERS (continuing):

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I decline to yield. Mr. President.

Mr. FLANDERS (continuing):

The relief provided in paragraph (9) should apply-

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming declines to yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Vermont has accused me of attempting to suppress a portion of this language; and that is an accusation which I shall not permit to be made.

I seek to analyze this bill as it is before us. The Commission may prescribe rules and regulations, as I read this bill, only for the manner in which application is made for the approval of an agreement. This is the language of paragraph 2:

Any carrier, party to an agreement * * * may, under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, apply for approval of the agreements * * *.

Obviously these rules and regulations have no effect on the making of the agreement or its contents, but only to the manner in which it is to be presented to the Commission.

THIS IS PRIVATE COLLECTIVISM

Mr. President, as I said a little while ago, we are dealing with the establishment of what amounts to private collectivism. This legislation has been proposed because the operating officials of railroads do not wish to compete in rates and services. Railroad managements have repeatedly undertaken to use their traffic associations to suppress competitive effort, and the Attorney General has vigorously attacked such restrictive policies in suits to enforce the antitrust laws.

If the bill as reported by the conferees becomes law, the ground will be cut from under the Department of Justice. Traffic and rate associations will be organized, and the Interstate Commerce Commission will have to approve them. As a practical matter, it will never thereafter be possible for the Attorney General to attack the renewed use of the associations to suppress the competitive impulses of operating officials.

The way in which the bill would operate would be to prevent individual lines and carriers from fixing any competitive rate upon their own lines, for local, State, or either regional or interregional transportation. Under the provisions of the bill a single railroad company would be deprived of the power of establishing competitive rates within its own territory. The books are full of cases in which the trade associations here sought to be confirmed by law have applied duress and intimidation to the individual carriers to compel such carriers to obey the mandates of the collective managers.

In the past it has been frequently stated by the Interstate Commerce Commission that its powers to regulate the railroads and the transportation systems of the country are slight enough at best. Now it is proposed to whittle this away and transfer to the transportation industry itself the power to regulate transportation. But to me this is probably the least significant aspect of the whole bill.

The real meaning of this measure is that if it is enacted it will be a long step toward the abandonment of the competitive system in the American economy. The United States alone of all the great countries in the world has had an antitrust law. The United States alone of all the great countries in the world has declared as a national policy that the door of opportunity shall always be open, and that every enterprise shall be protected from restraints of trade. That is not the European ideology. The European theory has always been that combinations and cartels should be permitted to operate. The result of the cartel system has been the establishment of the totalitarian form of government.

MONOPOLY VERSUS FREE ENTERPRISE

A rather extraordinary development has taken place this year in Great Brit-In Britain the advance of socialain. ism has been the result of the prior policy of Great Britain to allow trusts and cartel associations. Even the Conservative Party in Great Britain has undertaken to indicate some approval of antitrust policy. What amounts almost to an agreement between the Conservative Party in Great Britain and the Labor Party has resulted in the enactment by the British Parliament of the monopoly—inquiry and control—bill. This measure was presented to the House of Commons on March 25, 1948, by the president of the British Board of Trade. Its purpose was to establish an inquiry in order to see what could be done to prevent monopolistic restraints of trade.

BRITAIN AWAKENING TO DANGERS OF MONOPOLY

A distinguished member of the Conservative Party, the Right Honorable Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, published a pamphlet early this year which he entitled "Monopoly." In 10 chapters of this pamphlet Sir David discusses monopoly, including unit integrations of economic power and agreements among smaller companies to maintain prices and share markets. He gives a history of business agreements in England since the Middle Ages, all of which leads up to some specific conclusion. In this pamphlét, in chapter 5, which he calls Dangers of Monopoly, Sir David Maxwell Fyfe outlines six great dangers as he sees them.

The first is that monopoly promotes industrial inefficiency. When all the transportation systems of the United States are privately governed by a private trade association, so that all the different types of carriers are required to obey the provisions of these agreements relating to transportation, then we may be sure that inefficiency will be promoted.

The second great danger that this author recites is that monopoly uses economic power without any standard of responsibility. There is no standard of responsibility in this measure by which the new monopolistic trade associations may operate. We are neglecting completely the public interest.

MONOPOLY'S GROWING POLITICAL POWER AND PROFITS

The third danger recited by the leader of the British Conservative Party is that monopolies have economic power to wield political influence. Can anyone study the history of the progress of this bill without realizing how monopoly exercises political influence? So great is this power that we are striking down the authority of the sovereign States to protect their own citizens and their own industries.

The fourth danger recited by Sir David Maxwell Fyfe is that monopolies make extortionate profits. Who does not know it? In the Eightieth Congress of the United States there has been exhibited over and over and over again the desire of the majority party to protect the right of big business to make extortionate profits and to levy upon the masses of the people a steadily increasing level of prices for the necessities of life.

I know it was said, back at the beginning of this Congress, that if we would only let these industrial giants have their own way prices would go down. In January 1947 I remember well the announcement of Henry Ford II of a reduction in the price of Ford cars. There was a statement by Fowler McCormick, of the International Harvester Co., announcing a reduction of prices. As a member of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, the joint committee which was created to study inflation and what the Congress could do to prevent depression, I sent Mr. Ford a telegram congratulating him on his action in reducing prices, and a similar telegram was sent to Mr. McCormick. But the Congress of the United States took no action. Prices rose. Only a week ago last Sunday Mr. Ford for the second time in the last 12 months announced another increase in the prices of Ford automobiles. His company was forced to abandon the plan to cut prices and join the inflation parade.

While prices have been going up because the Congress of the United States has determined not only not to take action to prevent inflation, but to also allow concentrated organized business to have its own way, as provided in this bill, profits have been rising by leaps and bounds. The National City Bank of New York, one of the greatest and most powerful banks in the United States, as well as in the world, in its letter for June 1947 on economic conditions and Government finance, recites this very interesting and important fact on page 70 of its report:

The net income, after taxes, of the 100 largest manufacturing corporations in the United States in 1940 was $1,875,000,000.

Mr. President, those were the profits after taxes.

PEOPLE SUFFER WHILE CONGRESS FAWNS
UPON BIG BUSINESS

From that monthly letter we also learn that in 1945 those profits, after taxes, had increased to $1,943,000,000; but that in 1947, last year, net income, after taxes, had increased to $3,730,000,000. In other words, between 1940 and 1947, net income, after taxes, had practically doubled. Dividends, which in 1940 amounted to $1,197,000,000, in 1947 had increased to $1,668,000,000. This is the story of what happens to concentrated industry when the Congress of the United States pursues a hands-off policy. when the Congress of the United States declines to act in the way it is constitutionally empowered to act to protect the economic interests of the masses of

On the preceding page of its monthly letter—on page 69—the National City Bank lists the 100 largest manufacturing corporations. Mr. President, I ask unanlmous consent that this list may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the important thing which I wish to point out is that this list, which gives the total assets of each one of these 100 corporations, as reported by them at the end of 1947, produces the staggering total of $41,600,000,000. In 1947, the 100 largest manufacturing corporations in the United States, out of a total of some 100,000 or more, owned assets aggregating $41,600,000,000. Their total number of employees was about 4,000,000, according to the National City Bank, which said that the assets of those 100 corporations "represented an average investment in assets of $10,000 per employee.'

Mr. President, when we consider that stupendous evidence of the concentration of economic power, along with the report which was made by the House Committee on the Judiciary when it asked the House of Representatives to pass the bill amending sections 7 and 11 of the Clayton Act in order to prohibit monopolistic mergers, we see to what degree the concentration of economic power has proceeded in the United States.

Incidentally, let me say that that bill, approved by the House Committee on the Judiciary, has been buried in the House Rules Committee. A similar bill was here in the Senate. It was assigned to a subcommittee for study. The subcommittee filed a favorable report, and then the whole Judiciary Committee tossed the bill back again into the lap of a subcommittee for additional investigation in connection with the bill, introduced by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], respecting monopoly.

In other words, in the House and in the Senate our policy has been not to act with respect to prohibiting monopolistic mergers; and now the Senate of the United States is asked to pass, over the veto of the President, a bill which conveys away a power which ought to reside in the representatives of the people-a power over the transportation systems of the United States.

I was making a comparison of what has resulted from the concentration of economic power, as proven by the National City Bank's figures, when one takes into consideration what the House Committee on the Judiciary said with respect to concentration in other lines. I shall read now from page 3 of the report submitted to the House of Representatives by the gentleman from Iowa, Representative GWYNNE, on June 17, 1947, approximately 1 year ago.

The body has been laid aside in the Rules Committee, and the Congress is now proceeding by an adjournment to draw the curtain of respect over the laidout corpse of an antimonopoly procedure because the Congress has dedicated itself apparently to permitting concentrated economic power to take over the control of industry. This is what the gentleman from Iowa, Representative

GWYNNE, said in his report:

In copper mining, three companies con-trolled 78 percent of the United States production in 1937. In lead mining, four com-panies controlled 87 percent in 1941. In farm implements, six companies controlled 80 percent in 1940. In dry ice, two companies con-trolled 70 percent in 1941. In rubber tires and tubes, four companies sold nearly 93 percent of all tires sold by the 17 most important tire companies in 1943. In fluid milk and cream, one company, in 1937, sold 56 percent of the total consumed in the District of Columbia, 55 percent in Baltimore, 421/2 percent in Pittsburgh, and 32 percent in Philadelphia. In the icecream business, the same dairy company, in 1937, sold 52 percent of the total in Connecticut, 51 percent in Vermont, 49 percent in New Jersey, and 47 percent in both North Carolina and the District of Columbia.

I could stand upon this floor for hours reciting the record, the cold record, of the concentration of economic power by which a managerial system has been erected in this country because Congress has not paid attention and has failed to exercise the power which the Constitution gives it to regulate commerce among the States. We have permitted this drift to go to such an extent that now the transportation companies of the country ask the Congress to override a veto of the President in order that they may in a private collectivism regulate the whole transportation industry.

One after another I have recited the great dangers of monopoly as pointed out by a conservative Britisher. now recite the fifth danger on his list: The maintenance of prices and profits has the effect of frustrating full employment. Here is a measure which is designed to enable the transportation industry to maintain prices and profits. Here is a measure which puts it within the power of the transportation industry, not the railroads alone but all kinds of carriers, to lay a mandate upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve their private government of this

We are the successors of the great statesmen of the past who said they were establishing here a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. Instead of that, we have a government of big business, by big business, and for big business. The result is that the resources of the States and cities of the United States are drying up. States and cities no longer are able to support their own school systems because under our economic structure we permit a few concentrated industrial companies to drain the resources of the States and cities into their central power.

DRIFTING AWAY FROM FREEDOM AND DEMOCRACY TOWARD RISING TOTALITARIANISM

I point this out because I say it is my solemn conviction that if the Congress of the United States overrides this veto it will be turning the corner away from free competitive enterprise and democratic popular government down the road to socialism and totalitarian power. There can be no doubt in the mind of anybody who has taken even a few hours to study what has been going on in the world that the rise of totalitarianism, the rise of concentrated political power, has been the direct result of the appearance of concentrated economic power. If we have any thought of stopping this trend we had better act now-act now, or it may be too late.

The State of Georgia brought a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States to protect its citizens and its industries. Under the bill, that suit will be thrown out of court. The Congress of the United States is saying to a sovereign State, "You may not further prosecute this case." When that is done to Georgia, it is done to every other State of the Union, including the States of Kansas, Nebraska, and Vermont. There will be nothing left except a basis for the cry which will then arise to expand the power of the Central Government.

The sixth great danger of monopoly described by Sir David Maxwell Fyfe is that prices fixed by agreement allow the survival of firms with financial resources rather than firms which are efficient producers.

Here, Mr. President, is a comprehensive, intelligent, and able analysis of the result of monopolistic practices. I requested the Library of Congress to prepare a brief statement upon the British monopoly-inquiry and control-bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted as a part of my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

I make this request, Mr. President, because it seems to me it is of the greatest importance that Members of the Senate should realize that while we here in the United States are taking over the European ideology of cartel arrangements and monopolistic control of industry, the Government of Great Britain is trying to adopt the American system of free competitive enterprise. At the moment we are abandoning free enterprise and competition, the people of Great Britain are attempting to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BRITISH MONOPOLY (INQUIRY AND CON-TEOL) BILL (AS OF JUNE 1, 1948)

STAGE OF THE BILL

The British Monopoly (Inquiry and Control) Bill was presented to the House of Commons, March 25, 1948, by Mr. Harold Wilson, who is also president of the Board of Trade. Upon the second reading, April 22, 1948, there was lengthy Parliamentary debate; it was referred to committee, con-sidered, amended, and the resolution reported agreed to.

SUBSTANCE OF THE BILL

The purpose of the bill is to provide for the investigation of monopolies and restrictive arrangements in industry and trade, and to give the Government special powers for dealing with those which may "operate against the public interest" (clause 6).

An independent commission, to be called the Monopoly Commission, with a staff to be provided by the Board of Trade, will be set up to investigate and report on particular industries referred to them by the Board of Trade. If the commission upon investigation establishes the fact that particular industries are engaged in monopolistic practices not previously authorized, the relevant Government department (one of nine) will have new powers to make orders prohibiting the making or carrying out of the agreements in question, boycotts, conditional sales, and preferential terms. These orders would be subject to the approval of both Houses of

Conditions to which the act would apply are held to prevail if a third or more of the goods in question is supplied, bought or processed either by one person or by two or more persons who have an arrangement, tacit or expressed, to limit competition in any way in any particular trade. Agreements dealing with wages and employment are exempted.

No criminal proceedings can be brought for breach of an order made under the proposed act, but civil proceedings can be brought, either by the Crown or by any person affected, for an injunction or any other appropriate relief (clause 11).

Subject to security safeguards, cases referred to the commission must be published. Also when the commission has been required to report on the effect on the public interest, its report must be published. In other cases publication is optional. Disclosure of in-formation is restricted to disclosure for purposes connected with the act; and penalties are provided for failure to give evidence or to produce documents.

When the commission has not decided whether the arrangements investigated are against the public interest, the House of Commons may do so by resolution. In such a case the remedies provided may be applied.

Penalties under the proposed act consist of imprisonment for a term of not more than 3 months or a fine not exceeding 100 pounds, or both. In cases of guilt by corporations every officer thereof is to be deemed guilty unless he can prove his lack of consent to and effort to prevent the offense.

Supplemental provisions deal with the payment by Parliament of expenses incurred in putting the act into effect.

Amendment to the bill providing for salaries and other expenses was agreed to after brief discussion.

RECEPTION OF THE BILL

It was expected that the bill would receive approval from all parties. The assumption that it was noncontroversial was based upon the fact that, prior to its introduction, there had been issued a pamphlet written by Sir David Maxwell Fyfe on behalf of the Conservativy Party which advocated measures against monopolies similar to those embodied in the bill.

The expectation was partially fulfilled in that there was general agreement as to the end to be attained. There was, however, opposition expressed as to the means to that end. Both in the lengthy debate in the House of Commons upon the second reading and in the press from time to time since the first reading, the opposition dwelt chiefly upon two principal points, the exclusion of trade unions and the exclusion of nationalized industries from the scope of the bill and the possibility of an attitude of arbitrary prosecution rather than of inquiry in the operations of the commission have been adversely criticized repeatedly.

The effort at a return to the competitive system in trade and industry was welcomed on every hand.

The criticism may be partially summarized in an excerpt from a long account in the London Economist (April 10, 1948, p. 575):
"The bill, in short does at once too much and too little. The main public service that can be rendered at present is in establishing and broadcasting the facts about monopoly and restriction and their effects. * * * The commission should neither be limited to the instructions it receives from the board of trade nor debarred from entering any field. Nor should there be any restrictions upon its findings.

"But when it comes to a matter of action to be taken on the facts * * * there should be an aroused and articulate public opinion * * * (and) principles of sec * (and) principles of economic justice should be drawn up, so that the enforcing authorities may have something other than their own prejudices to guide them."

In a subsequent comment the Economist (May 1, 1948, p. 705) offers an argument also to the opposition:

"Sir David's speech * * * and his view that any definition of prohibited practices would involve administrative chaos deserves, at least, respectful consideration. It is arguable, however, that this would be avoided if the prohibitions were few enough and the definitions right enough. Certainly it should be possible to profit by hard American experience and avoid the type of legal drafting which benefits no one except that particularly close corporation, the legal profession 1

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, observe the contradictory things which are happening around us here. The distinguished acting majority leader, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], is chairman of the Small Business Committee. That committee has been maintained ever since it was established upon the motion, as I recall, of the distin-guished senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. It has been maintained throughout the Eightieth Congress, because the Eightieth Congress believed that it desired to support and encourage small business. It does little good to support small business, Mr. President, to hold hearings and investigations and to read papers, if, at the same time, we undermine the law which prohibits combinations in restraint of trade, conspiracies to establish monopoly, or attempts to establish monopoly. How can we hope to maintain small business while our legislative policy destroys it?

I understand the Small Business Committee, the Small Business Committee of the House, at least, has been authorized to undertake some sort of an investigation during the recess of Congress in order to go among the small-business men of the country and find out how the antitrust law is injuring them. In other words, here is an invitation, apparently, to those who want monopolistic combinations to say that the antitrust law of the United States should be abandoned.

UNDERMINING THE FOUNDATIONS OF FREE ENTERPRISE

Here is this bill, Mr. President. A few days ago the Senate adopted a resolution authorizing a study, which was brought about by the decision of the Supreme Court with respect to the basing-point There is every indication that the leadership of this Congress is now trying to go a step further than merely to let things drift, as we have done with respect to increasing prices, and, by positive action, to undermine the very foundation upon which free enterprise exists, namely, the antitrust law.

I desire to make it perfectly clear how broad paragraph 2 of the conference bill is. It not only fails to delineate the area for permissible joint rate collaboration among carriers, but it goes far beyond the field of collaboration on joint rates. The grant of power is so broad as to permit approval of the regulation of the transportation industry by private groups in the field of all rates, whether charged by an individual carrier on its own line or jointly by connecting carriers, or whether regional or interregional. Nor does its delegation stop with mere rate making.

Paragraph 2 of the bill provides for the approval of agreements "relating to rates, fares, classifications, divisions, allowances, or charges-including charges between carriers and compensation paid or received for the use of facilities and equipment-or rules and regulations pertaining thereto, or procedures for the joint consideration, initiation, or estab-lishment thereof." This goes beyond approval of agreements by joint action in considering and determining rates and fares, and includes agreements by joint action concerning not only the rates and fares to be charged, but the services to be performed, and the schedules and timetables to be effectuated, which could reasonably be construed as an agreement relating to rates and fares. As a matter of fact, a reasonable construction of paragraph 2 could include agreements which, without making specific reference to rates or fares, provide for joint action concerning the elimination or extension of services, schedules, and timetables, and other matters relating to rates and fares could come within the scope of mandatory approval by the Commission. This paragraph goes far beyond the field of rates, as is indicated by the express words in the parentheses which include "compensation paid or received for the use of facilities or equipment." as I have said, Mr. President, the bill comprehends the private control and direction of numerous activities involved in the conduct of carriers in all forms of transportation.

One of the most important omissions is that there is not a word or line in the bill to provide any rule of responsibility for the conduct of the meetings and the negotiations as a result of which an agreement is made. Let me emphasize the significance of that fact. All the agreements which affect rates, fares, equipment, facilities, and services can be made in secret meetings, without supervision, as they are in the process of being constructed. The only thing the Interstate Commerce Commission sees is the final work, the outcome, the result of these deliberations.

It is carefully provided that when the Congress passes laws its procedure shall be in the open. No bill may be passed unless it has been formally introduced upon the floor of either Chamber. It must be printed in the ordinary procedure. It must be sent to a committee for a hearing. The public is given no-Those who are to be affected are told what it is proposed to accomplish. Before it is finally enacted it must come to the floor. But such is not the case with respect to the great power and authority which we are now extending to the transportation industry to draw up its theory, principle, and structure of self-government, without public super-vision, at a time when the agreement is drafted, by anyone representing the public interest. It is true that the agreement must go to the Interstate Commerce Commission for its approval. But the language of the bill clearly states that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall approve it, unless the agreement contains certain subjects in a narrow category set forth in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6). But these exceptions are insignificant because the exemption from the antitrust law contained in paragraph (9) is so broad that it makes the traditional American policy against restraints of trade ineffective so far as the transportation industry is concerned.

Immunity from the antitrust laws is granted not only to the carriers who participate in the agreement and carry it out but to "other persons." The heart of the Georgia case was that coercion by the individual carriers is inherent in and carried out by an integrated railroad association structure which, assisted by banking and other influences, disciplines and enforces its mandates by economic pressure upon individual carriers.

When such an agreement with this inherent power to prevent an individual carrier from acting independently is approved, as under the bill it must be approved by the Commission, all hope of independent action by any member carrier is destroyed. Paragraph 6 in no way preserves the right of a carrier to withhold any matter from joint consideration or action. The whole purpose of the bill is to provide for procedures for determinations through joint consideration.

If it should be argued that the Commission has the power to deny approval to an agreement on general grounds because of violation of the antitrust law, that contention would be rebutted by the fact that under paragraph 2 the Commission is under a mandate to approve the basic organization agreement on a finding that "by reason of the furtherance of the national transportation policy declared" in the Interstate Commerce Act, exemption from antitrust laws should be granted.

The national transportation policy of the existing Interstate Commerce Act embraces a broad range of general objectives unrelated to the antitrust laws.

Thus, the bill gives an effective exemption from the basic antimonopoly law of this country for practically everything the new organizations may do "relating to rates, fares, classifications, divisions," and so forth, set forth in paragraph 2.

The field in which these agreements may be made without limit or supervision is so broad, as I have already indicated, that it covers all sorts of rates and services with respect to every type of transportation in various types of competing carriers.

SAFEGUARD AGAINST INTIMIDATION ELIMINATED

Here we have the grave possibility that these transportation companies are being empowered to fix joint rates for pipe-line companies, railroads, and motor carriers, all of which must obey the mandate of the association which is to be set up.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention over and over again to the elimination from the bill of the safeguard which was written in by the Senate to prevent the exercise of intimidation by the association over any carrier. The language was:

Nothing in this section and no approval of any agreement by the Commission under this section shall be so construed as in any manner to remove from the purview of the antitrust laws any restraint upon the right of independent action by any carrier by means of boycott, duress, or intimidation.

Why did the authors of the bill desire to eliminate the prohibition against the exercise of intimidation, boycott, or duress upon carriers who might desire to announce competitive rates? This semblance of a safeguard was eliminated, and the reasons for the omission of this and similar safeguards have never yet been explained. They were not explained in the conference report, and no explanation was given to the Senate, although requested by the critics of the bill in the Senate debate.

I am glad to see that my distinguished friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the acting majority leader, the chairman of the Small Business Committee of the Senate, is on the floor. During the absence of the distinguished Senator, who has been laboring in the Interior Department appropriation bill conference. I discussed the fact that while the Small Business Committee goes through the motions of expressing its sympathy with independent private en-terprise, we, the Members of the Senate, here upon the floor authorized the establishment of a trade association which will eliminate all semblance of competition in the transportation industry.

If that is eliminated, Mr. President, then the shippers and the people of Nebraska and Wyoming will suffer just as those in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Vermont, and other States are suffering.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Stennis in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator desires to ask me a question.

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder if the Senator could inform me whether it would be possible to get a unanimous-consent agreement for a vote at some time this afternoon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] is very desirous of speaking upon this matter, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] tells me that he wishes to speak upon it, the Sentor from Alabama [Mr. HILL] wants to speak, and I think the Senator from Montana [Mr. Murray] desires to make some comment upon the measure. I have been talking here to empty seats, so that the Members of the Senate are not receiving the true gospel, and I want to be sure that they do receive it. I am hoping that, now that the lunch period is over, Senators may return to the floor of the Senate and listen to those who may succeed me.

Mr. WHERRY. I was going to ask the Senator if he intended to make his speech all over again.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It carries an important message which every Member of the Senate should have.

Mr. WHERRY. Whenever the Senator speaks he makes an interesting address. But does the Senator feel that, if I should suggest the hour of 4 o'clock for a vote, the time between 2 and 4 to be divided, we might arrive at a unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I would not presume to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement in the absence of the Senator from Kentucky, the Senator from Georgia, and some other Senators.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield for an insertion in the RECORD?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey, but before yielding, may I say to the Senator from Tew Jersey that at the beginning of this debate he was given personal credit by the distinguished and able Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed] for the elimination from the conference bill of the provision inserted by the Senate to preserve the virility of the suit of the State of Georgia.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I beg the pardon of the Senator from Wyoming. I did no such thing. What I said was that in the debate on the conference report the debate dealt more in detail with the reasons why the House conferees refused to agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I apologize to the Senator. I misunderstood him. Let me say that the Senator from South Carolina also misunderstood him, as did some other Senators.

Mr. REED. What I was trying to say, and what I think I do say, if the Senator from New Jersey will permit me, was that Senators were asking me about the attitude of the House conferees on the Russell amendment, and I said that the Senator from New Jersey had dealt with that aspect of the matter in his part of the debate on the conference report.

Mr. HAWKES. I think the Senator from Kansas made a clear statement, and I accept the responsibility for that, and made a statement on the floor in connection with it.

(Mr. HAWKES thereupon asked and obtained permission to have printed in the RECORD a certain editorial, which appears at the conclusion of the remarks of Senator O'Mahoney.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks those who are holding conferences on the floor of the Senate to recess their conferences or retire to the cloakroom. It is impossible for even the Chair to hear the speaker and understand what he says.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think we have a reasonable degree of order in the Senate now. I am quite ready to proceed.

Mr. President, I have recited what I conceived to be the dangers of the policy which permits large industrial and transportation units to combine for the purpose of governing their own industries.

I am thinking now of the evil effect of concentrated economic organization, the ideology of business which in Europe led to the establishment of the dictatorial state. This theory of business organization has been condemned uniformly by all American leaders of all parties. A distinguished former President of the United States, and former Chief Justice of the United States, William Howard Taft, was not the least effective of those who condemned monopolistic practices. I remember very well in my studies reading the message which he as President of the United States sent to the Congress of the United States recommending that there be public legislation to provide national charters for the national corporations which carry on the business of the United States. I remember how severely in that very message he condemned the monopolistic practices which have led all over the world to the destruction of free government and to the establishment of dictatorships. We in the Senate and in the House must make the decision whether we desire this country to remain loyal to the tradition of free competitive enterprise, for if we abandon that ideal, be sure it will be lost to the world.

I have no doubt at all that the greatest issue in the campaign of 1948 will be the issue of free competitive enterprise. It is not free enterprise which marches under the disguise of this measure. This is the beginning of totalitarianism; this is the measure that turns the corner.

Almost every great industrial leader condemns the cartel system but that system is the one by which industrial leadership writes its own ticket. Here we are giving into the hands of the transportation industry of the United States the power to write its own ticket.

I have before me a little volume published by the Brookings Institution in Washington in 1947 entitled "The Aluminum Cartel." It was written by Mr. Louis Marlio, who himself was one of the principal officers of that cartel for many years. He tells in this little volume how the cartel was established and what it undertook to do. I read from it as follows:

Unlike previous cartels, the fourth cartel, that is the Alliance Co., adopted the principle of leaving to its members the maximum commercial and industrial freedom compatible with the realization of its objects.

Freedom was permitted to the members only to the degree that it was compatible with the objects of the cartel. Here we have a measure which denies freedom to the individual transportation companies, and makes them subject to what is done and to the decisions which are made by the transportation organization which is to be created.

Regulation was to be imposed only to the extent it proved useful.

Who was to decide what would prove useful? Of course, the managers of the cartel. Who is going to decide what will prove useful in the present case? Again the managers of the trade association which we are allowing the industry to organize in secret session. It will determine—not the representatives of the public—what is useful to do in the transportation industry.

Mr. Marlio continues:

This principle is affirmed in the following clause of the agreement:

"A" shareholders will be free to produce, transform and sell aluminum in all its forms, including raw metal, semifinished products and finished products, without any price agreement, territorial limitations, or any other regulation, except as provided in the present agreement and as may be enforced by ACC (Aluminum Alliance Co.) in accordance with this same agreement.

So here we have an organization which has the power to fix prices and to delimit territory and to control production. And did they do it? Let me read again from Mr. Marlio:

The prices at which aluminum was sold in the Japanese market were somewhat below the prices in London and Paris, in order to discourage the creation of plants in Japan. This did not mean that under the cartel system prices in Japan were lower than they would have been under international competition. It must be remembered that a primary purpose of the cartel was to prevent serious under-cutting in world markets. The result was doubtless a level of prices in Japan somewhat above that which would have prevailed under a system of wholesale dumping by noncooperating producers.

Here was a world-wide organization which frankly undertook to regulate prices and to prevent competition, and made no bones about saying so.

This is the way they divided their business. I read from page 32 of Dr. Marlio's book:

The division worked out as follows: Aluminum Francais, 299 shares, or 21.36 percent; Aluminum Industrie Neuhausen, 216 shares, or 15.43 percent; Aluminum, Ltd., 400 shares, or 28.57 percent; British Aluminum Co., 210 shares, or 15 percent; German group, 275 shares, or 19.64 percent.

FREE GOVERNMENT COLLAPSED IN EUROPE WHEN MONOPOLY TOOK OVER

So the cartel arrangement decided for itself what each participant would enjoy of the world market, and then enforced rules and regulations to prevent competition. That was done in industry after industry, and the result was the collapse of free government in Europe. There is no doubt at all, if past experience of humankind means anything, that if we here in the United States abandon our American tradition of a free economy we shall go the road of those countries which have adopted the cartel system.

There is no evidence before this body that anyone presented himself at the hearings on behalf of the public to endorse this measure. Of course the shippers were represented. The shipping associations were represented. Attorneys for the railroads were there. The transportation companies, the motor carriers, and the pipe lines do not like regulation in the public interest. I can understand their annoyance. But the great danger is that if we now open the door to monopoly by exempting one great industry in all its aspects from the effect of the antitrust laws, there will be no recourse except the establishment of a more powerful Central Government.

When we undertake to destroy the power of a sovereign state to go into the Supreme Court of the United States to protect traditional Americanism and the freedom of its economy, we are laying the foundation for monopolistic control of industry which will lead inevitably, as it has done everywhere, to the destruction of free government. I was never more certain of any statement I have made in all my service in the Senate than I am of this: The approval of this bill, the overriding of the President's veto, means the abandonment of competition as a rule of economic conduct in the United States.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Rate Making," from the Washington Post of this morning. In my opinion it is a very clear statement of the problem which will be in front of the country and the transportation systems unless the pending veto is overridden.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RATE MAKING

The President's veto of the Bulwinkle-Reed bill exempting rate agreements by railroads and other common carriers from the antitrust laws should be overridden. For, if upheld by Congress, it would result in serious disruption of rate-making processes that have stood the test of time and meet with the approval of shippers as well as the Interstate Commerce Commission and State regulatory officials. A great deal depends, therefore, upon the action taken today by the Senate on the rejected measure. If it votes to override the veto the chances are that the House, which passed the bill by a very large majority, will follow suit.

In passing the Bulwinkle-Reed bill, Congress sought to remove the confusion and uncertainty that have resulted from a conflict regarding the applicability of the antitrust laws to certain kinds of agreements among regulated common carriers. As the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce said in its report on the bill, "a large measure of collective action by and among common carriers is necessary if the national transportation policy is to be effected and if the public is to receive the kind of transportation service to which it is entitled and if rates are to be reasonable and nondiscriminatory." If, as the Department of Justice maintains, rate agreements effectuated through rate bureaus and associations are to be regarded as illegal restraints of competition, the regulatory system under which the carriers have been operating for years will be shot to pieces.

The late Joseph B. Eastman, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who was also director of the Office of Defense Transportation, was an ardent defender of the existing system of rate conferences. He said some years ago that he did not know how the carriers could comply with the mandates of the law and the orders of the Commission unless they could consult and confer with one another. He further pointed out that such joint action was always subject to protest and review by the ICC if in violation of the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act. The bill vetoed last week by the President does not impair any of these existing safeguards against abuse. The carriers will have the right, as at present, to propose rates to the ICC, subject to its approval. And the Commission may suspend any proposed changes on protest or of its own initiative as at present. The bill also protects the rights of a carrier to take independent action regardless of conference decisions. Spokesmen for the Department of Justice have made much of the fact that few protests reach the Commission, citing it as an indication that rate bureaus are in a position virtually to compel individual roads to adhere to collec-tive agreements. However, it can just as well be maintained that the small proportion of protested rate changes is proof that the conference method of rate adjustment works very satisfactorily for all interested parties, roads and shippers alike.

The President's charge that the Bulwinkle-Reed bill represents a departure from the present transportation policy of regulated competition simply does not fit the facts of the case. For the bill does not impair the regulatory powers over rate-making now exercised by the ICC. Nor does it render the carriers immune from the antitrust laws except as to joint rate agreements of the kind they have long been accustomed to enter into with the approval of the ICC.

In the absence of rate conferences tariff schedules would have to be filed by individual railroads and by thousands of motor carriers. The result would be not competition but regulatory chaos. The integrated rate structure would fall apart and the ICC would be overwhelmed by the burden of work thrust upon it by protesting shippers and carriers. Consequently, prompt legislative action is needed to insure preservation of a regulated system of rate-making that an overwhelming majority of transportation officials, regulatory agencies, and shippers consider indispensable and in the public interest.

The pending antitrust cases referred to by President Truman as one reason for vetoing the Bulwinkle-Reed bill may not be settled for some time. Nor is it certain that those suits will result in judicial clarification of the issues raised in the present instance. Incidentally, the pending Georgia and Lincoln, Nebr., suits to which the President was evidently referring in his veto message would not be thrown out of court by legalization of carrier rate agreements, since the roads concerned have been charged with conspiracy to fix rates of a discriminatory nature. Such practices are outlawed by the antitrust laws, whether they are engineered by rate bureaus or other agencies. And the Bulwinkle-Reed bill would not legalize such unlawful antisocial practices. In sum, the national interest appears to require that Congress override Mr. Truman's veto of this important measure.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I now propose a unanimous-consent request that the Senate proceed to vote upon the veto at the hour of 4:45 o'clock p. m., 1 hour and 35 minutes of the time to be in the control of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell], and 45 minutes in control of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed]. That would bring the vote exactly at 4:45 p. m.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no objection to that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and if is so ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I yield 25 minutes to the Senator from Montana [Mr. Murray].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the able Senator from Wyoming with reference to the growth of monopoly in this country and how it threatens our American system of democracy. He made a most startling statement; and yet there were very few Senators in the Chamber to listen to him and hear his remarks about what is happening in our country.

THE RAILROAD LOBBY

Mr. President, the support which has been mobilized in favor of this bill among transportation agencies and among shippers and industrial groups must not be permitted to override the public interest in the preservation of healthy competitive enterprise. The public interest is broader than that of any group having a selfish interest in or relationship to transportation. It is the public which pays the freight. The public is interested in the lower rates and in the improvements in service which flow from healthy competition between the carriers.

Shippers are more interested in rate relationships than in rate levels. Indeed, it is charged in the pending antitrust cases that powerful groups of shippers in a number of basic industries have joined with the carriers in private agreements to maintain high uniform rates and to prevent rate reductions which would disturb market relationships favorable to such groups of shippers or which would aid in the establishment of new competition in basic industries. It is also charged in the pending antitrust cases that the private rate bureaus which could be legalized by this bill have in the past been used by combinations of carriers to frustate the will of progressive individual carriers seeking to make rate adjustments which would permit shippers on their lines to compete in distant markets and which would attract new industries to areas where industrialization is essential to the balanced development of our national resources. Such practices, which would be freed from prosecution under the antitrust laws by this bill, are no more in the interest of shippers than of the public

The manner in which support for legislation similar to this bill has been mobilized by the railroads is a matter of record. I refer to the documents and testimony presented to committees of the Congress which describe the organization and functioning of the railroad lobby.

According to the late John J. Pelley, until recently President of the Association of American Railroads, lobbying is one of the primary functions of that association. The chief lieutenant to carry out the lobby activities of the AAR has been R. V. Fletcher, who for many years had been vice president and general counsel of the association. He described the objectives of the general legislative committee of the Association of Railroad Executives, predecessor of the AAR, as being "charged with the duty of assembling and promulgating information relative to legislation affecting railroads, and with the further duty of organizing the States for offense and defense on all matters of legislation, State, and Federal, affecting railroads"—exhibit No. 3448, hearings on Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-fourth Congress.

To accomplish the objective of or-ganization for offense and defense on legislative matters, Mr. Fletcher, as chairman of the legislative committee of the Association of Railway Executives, created a system upon which the present legislative activities of the Association of American Railroads are based, and which was continued under the control of Mr. Fletcher as vice president and general counsel. Senate Report No. 26, paragraph 2, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, on Senate Resolution 71. That system involved the organization within the sphere of railroad organization of a virtual army operating nationally, regionally, and locally, and the maintenance of an alliance with nonrailroad associations to give the railroad lobby, where deemed necessary, a nonrailroad front. The story of the development of this organization and the various intrigues and manipulations in which it engaged is told in detail through documents and oral testimony in the railroad investigation conducted by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce under Senate Resolution 71 Seventy-fourth Congress-Hearings, part 23; Report No. 26, part 2, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session.

First, a plan was promulgated whereby the various States in the Union were assigned by the association to a particular railroad, as follows:

New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad: Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island.

New York Central: New York, Michi-

Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey: New Jersey.

Pennsylvania Railroad: Pennsylvania, Delaware, Indiana.

Baltimore & Ohio: Maryland. New York, Chicago & St. Louis: Ohio. Chesapeake & Ohio: West Virginia. Norfolk & Western: Virginia.

Seaboard Air Line Railway: Florida. Atlantic Coast Line: North Carolina, South Carolina.

Louisville & Nashville: Alabama, Kentucky.

Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis: Tennessee,

Central of Georgia: Georgia.
Illinois Central: Illinois, Mississippi.

Texas & Pacific: Louisiana. Chicago & North Western: Wisconsin. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pa-

Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific: South Dakota. St. Louis-San Francisco: Missouri.

St. Louis-San Francisco: Missouri. Missouri Pacific: Arkansas.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific: Iowa. Great Northern: Minnesota, North Dakota.

Northern Pacific: Montana, Washington.

Union Pacific: Oregon, Utah, Wyo-ming, Idaho.

Southern Pacific: Nevada, California, Arizona, Texas. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe: Kansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico.

Chicago, Burlington & Quincy: Colorado, Nebraska.

In addition to carving out the 48 States and assigning each area to a railroad, the plan further provided for the creation in each State of a State railroad association or a State legislative committee to work on national as well as State legislation. The purpose of the associations was to line up the "boys" in a particular State, to line up the support of all influences-citizens, organizations, newspapers, and so forthwhich could be brought into play upon Representatives in Congress or Senators: and under the guidance of the national organization, to flood Members of Congress with letters and telegrams favorable to the railroads' point of view on pending legislation. As outlined by Mr. Fletcher in letters written by him to the State organizations:

In suggesting the organization of railroad associations in each State, I had in mind putting into effect a plan whereby we would be advised as to who are the influential men behind the several Congressmen, and the further thought that we might be able through personal contact or by the careful distribution of literature to influence in a perfectly proper way the judgment of the men upon whom the several Congressmen rely for support and advice. Indeed, I have thought that we might go so far as to get a mailing list which would show the names of the influential citizens of the United States, meaning thereby those who are influential in a political way, so that we might contact those men through our attorneys, employees, and representatives, and in order that we might provide them with such informative publications as are issued by the various railroad agencies and which discuss the railroad question in a careful and conservative manner. I should be glad, there-fore, if you could send me with reference to each Member of Congress and each Senator, dealing with each separately for filing purposes, a statement as to who he is, where he lives, what profession he follows, what is his social and political background, and particularly who are his friends, advisers, and sponsors in each of the counties in his congressional district. I understand, of course, that the sentence just before this refers particularly to Members of the House of Representatives. In the same way, how-ever, I should like to know something about the background of the Senators and the persons on whom they probably rely for vice. I appreciate the fact that this is a pretty large order and may require a good deal of inquiry in different parts of the State, but I am seeking to assemble here in Washington a very complete record of each Member of Congress with particular reference to the influences which control him and the persons on whom he relies for support.

In addition to the State associations, the technique was subsequently refined by setting up congressional district chairmen to operate in the congressional districts, and to whom local officials of the railroads would be directly responsible. At the disposal of the district chairmen were placed railroad officials, freight and passenger men, local agents, and local attorneys and surgeons, who were charged with the building up, in their respective congressional districts, of organizations to be called in for assistance, either locally or in Washington, as the need should arise. The railroad officials, employees, surgeons, and attorneys were required to respond to the call of the district chairman as and when requested and the district chairman was given the right to call upon them for any assistance he may need without the necessity of going through individual railroads. This corps of railroad men has been considered by Mr. Fletcher as the real strength of the railroad lobby.

Shortly after the Association of American Railroads was organized and took over the work of the lobby, Mr. Fletcher suggested a further refinement of the methods developed in carrying out the work of legislative offense and defense. Under directions of Mr. Fletcher, the person charged with primary responsibility in each State undertook to assign a particular Congressman to some member of the organization or of the committee, with the request that the person to whom a particular Congressman is assigned endeavor to have him interviewed at home by as many of his influential constituents as can be persuaded to undertake the task. Mr. Fletcher expressed the thought that it would be very helpful indeed if a hundred influential citizens in each district could mention the matter to the Congressman and give him to understand that the measures advocated by the railroads meet with the approval of his constituents and that those matters which the railroads disfavor are not looked upon with approval by the influential men among the Congressman's constituents.

Mr. Fletcher looked upon hearings before the congressional committee in which he or his assistant participated as largely matters of scenery to satisfy the public and that the effective work on legislation had to be done by the lobby personnel sent to operate in Washington. Mr. Fletcher, for example, wrote the general counsel of the Milwaukee Railroad regarding a pending maximumhour bill in Congress that "he had pulled every string which is accessible to defeat the bill" and that he desired the railroads to select a list of men who would be "particularly influential with Members of Congress and with Senators to come to Washington." Mr. Fletcher desired only such men to come to Washington as are quite well acquainted with the Members, but who sustain such relations to them as would make it unnecessary that Members of Congress would rise in their places and denounce our friends as lobbyists.

"I have no purpose to interfere with sleeping dogs," Mr. Fletcher wrote, "and I shall, therefore, not send out a Macedonian cry for help unless the situation becomes desperate. However, I would like to have the preliminary work done in the way of selecting men who can come to Washington, if necessary, so that if I wire some time next week or a little later that we are driven to the necessity for canvassing the House and Senate, these men would be available for this service."

The traffic department of the Association of American Railroads, which ostensibly would be considered wholly to be concerned with traffic matters has been engaged in lobbying activities. Under its directions, telegrams have been sent to Members of Congress by citizens and chambers of commerce on the assurance that the Association of American Railroads would make necessary reimbursement for expenses incurred in sending such telegrams.

To give the lobby, where it was deemed desirable, a nonrailroad appearance, organizations supported and maintained by the AAR posed as independent, public organizations, but presented the railroad view under guidance of the railroad · So-called shippers' advisory were established within the boards organizational set-up of the AAR. The shippers' advisory boards are operated under the supervision of the car service division of the AAR, and the district managers of the car service division usually act as secretaries of the shippers' advisory boards. The incidental expenses of the boards are paid by the Association of American Railroads. The members of the shippers' advisory boards pay no dues. These shippers' boards, posing as representatives of the shippers, appear before congressional committees and otherwise support railroad legislation. In a statement made by the AAR authorizing the shippers' advisory boards to pursue legislative activities, it was

The boards afford a splendid set-up for handling all questions of this kind. Each important section of the country, and every industrial and agricultural interest in each section have both adequate and localized representation in the board.

Of the personnel of the membership in these boards, there is no need to say anything other than that it represents the leading and most intelligent thought on transportation matters of industry, agriculture, and banking in each territory and throughout the Nation as a whole.

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, in making a report on the shippers' advisory boards, said: "Obviously, such a far-flung organization could wield great power and influence in promoting railroad legislation, and it quickly got into action."

Other organizations have been used in the same manner. Such front organizations include taxpayers' associations, security owners' associations, railwayemployee organizations, and chambers of commerce. The extent to which the Association of American Railroads control the front organizations is revealed in a letter written by the secretary of the car service division of the AAR to the president of the Security Owners' Association concerning proceedings of a meeting of the Northwest Shippers Advisory Board at which resolutions were passed in favor of a special railroad bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRICKER in the chair). The time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Montana one more minute.

Mr. MURRAY. The letter said:

You will find the discussions in the proceedings leading up to the passage of these resolutions very interesting. The antagonism shown was from a small minority block of barge-line advocates or enthusiasts, which we use as scenery occasionally, and they performed very nobly in this case, although they do not know it.

The purpose of obtaining the passage of resolutions by the shippers' advisory board and their dissemination in Washington was, as stated by the secretary of the car-service division, "to impress them with the fact that these gentlemen represent the largest single block of organized and intelligent public opinion in the Northwest." The chairman of the Senate committee asked the president of the AAR:

The AAR utilized the machinery of the shippers' advisory boards to promote the railroads' legislative program, did they not?

Mr. Pelley answered:

I think the answer to that is yes—wherever it can be done.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 6355) making supplemental appropriations for the Federal Security Agency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was—

Resolved, That the said bill pass, twothirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6801) making appropriations for foreign aid for the period beginning April 3, 1948, and ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Taber, Mr. Wigglesworth, Mr. Engel of Michigan, Mr. Stefan, Mr. Case of South Dakota, Mr. Keefe, Mr. Cannon, Mr. Kerr, and Mr. Mahon were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE
ACT RELATING TO CERTAIN AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS

The Senate resumed the reconsideration of the bill (S. 110) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I yield 20 minutes to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Hill].

Mr. President, as I said Mr. HILL. when this bill was originally under consideration, an analysis of the bill, made in the light of the facts of record and the reports of the committee, compel the conclusion that through its passage the legislative policy of competitive enterprise in public transportation would be supplanted by a Nation-wide cartel monopoly under the domination of the Association of American Railroads and the traditional railroad bankers. This is so because the bill would, first, effectively repeal the antitrust laws as applied to public transportation.

There should be no misunderstanding as to what we are now doing. We are taking the railroads, the Nation's means of transportation, out from under the antitrust laws. We are putting them into a privileged class, separate and set apart from the class in which we find all other segments and elements of American business and economy. The transportation industry is to be in this special class, entirely exempt from the antitrust laws.

In the second place, this bill legalizes the continuation and extension of control over every phase of a carrier's operations by the Association of American Railroads and the traditional railroad bankers. They are to be insulated from the courts, for, under the bill, the railroads cannot be taken into the courts under the antitrust laws, because the antitrust laws will no longer apply to the railroads. Insulated from the courts, and without fear of hindrance from other agencies of the Government, they would be free to create combinations of carriers on a Nation-wide scale, with power not only to fix rates, but also to determine what part of the rate each carrier shall receive, what time its trains shall arrive and depart, over what routes they may operate, what equipment shall be built and how it shall be used, and what should be done collectively to promote, to use the words of the Interstate Commerce Act. "adequacy, economy, and efficiency of operation or service."

In view of the vast powers thus conferred upon the transportation cartel and the extent of the pressures which it would be able to exert upon otherwise independent carriers, it is clear that no carrier could afford to remain long outside the cartel. In other words, Mr. President, we are so legalizing this railroad supergovernment, we are so confirming the machinery and the operation of the machinery of the Association of American Railroads that no independent carrier could operate. This association, which we today confirm, which brings such tremendous economic power to bear on any independent railroad, could so hold the power of life or death over any independent railroad as to force that railroad to surrender its independence and to become a part of the Association of American Railroads.

Mr. President, this bill would strike a telling blow to private enterprise. We in the United States hold today the last citadel, we constitute the last stronghold, of free enterprise on this earth. Free enterprise is the basis of our whole Ameri-Without free enterprise we can life. cannot enjoy the other freedoms which we cherish and of which we so proudly boast. Freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion-these freedoms cannot long survive in a land where economic liberty has been de-Elsewhere throughout the stroyed. world we see nation after nation moving toward some form of nationalization, some form of socialization, some form of totalitarianism. Even our friends in the British Isles, who, for so long, have held fast to the great principles of individual liberty, are today rapidly moving toward socialization. We have witnessed their socialization of one industry after another.

Only last night the Senate passed a bill appropriating billions of dollars, to be given to nations and peoples across the seas in the hope of holding the frontiers of freedom, in the hope of preserving liberty to men and women. Yet right at home, within 24 hours after the appropriation of those billions of dollars we find this bill before us, a bill which would strike a terrible blow at the free-enterprise system of America.

Mr. President, the bill would undo the public benefits which have resulted or may be expected to result from antitrust suits involving the Pullman monopoly, the western agreement, the investment banking houses of J. P. Morgan & Co., and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., equipment manufacturers, safety and signal monopolies, and rate-fixing combinations dominated by the Association of American Railroads, all of which have been and are adverse to the interests of carriers in large sections of the country. In other words, the benefits which the American people have derived from the antitrust suits which have been brought in the past would now be wiped out, at one fell swoop, by the passage of this bill.

As we know, when the bill was originally before the Senate there was placed in it an amendment specifically stating that nothing in the bill would in any way impair or affect the case which the State of Georgia now has pending in the Supreme Court of the United States against the railroads in the matter of unfair and unjust discriminations in freight rates as they affect Georgia, the people of that State, and the national economy. Yet, we find that when this bill went to conference, that amendment was eliminated from the bill, and there is now no protection in the bill for the suit of the State of Georgia against certain railroads in the matter of unfair and unjust discriminations, but, on the contrary, as we well know, the very purpose of the passage of the bill is to prevent such suits as the suit of the State of Georgia, and to wipe out any other suits which may have been filed against the railroads for unfair and unjust discriminations in the matter of freight

If this bill passes, Mr. President, we may know that the conditions which exist today as to unfair and unjust freightrate discriminations will continue. Because of such unfair and unjust discriminations, the States of the West, as well as the States of the South, have largely been placed in the status of colonial provinces. They have been denied the opportunities for economic and industrial development which their natural resources and the character and genius of their people entitle them to enjoy. The States of the West and of the South have been thwarted, and, indeed, paralyzed in their economic and industrial development, because of unfair and unjust discriminations in freight rates. This bill would now confirm and freeze this paralysis.

Mr. President, if this bill passes today representatives of the Western States and representatives of the Southern States need no longer protest against unfair and unjust discriminations, because there will be no opportunity to go into court and have those discriminations removed, there will be no opportunity to translate those protests into action, there will be no opportunity to secure relief from discrimination and injustice.

Today we find the railroads organized in the Association of American Railroads, with the control, with the power, with the dictation and the domination under this association in the hands of a few great investment bankers in New York City, largely in the hands of the two great investment banking houses of Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

What this bill would do would be to approve this supergovernment set up in the form of the Association of American Railroads, this supergovernment for the transportation industry of America, this supergovernment controlled by great investment banking houses of Wall Street.

We speak of our democracy, we speak of government of the people, yet what is proposed to be done today if we pass this bill is to take the Government, so far as the transportation industry is concerned, out of the hands of the people and their chosen representatives, and out of the hands of the courts created for the protection of the people, and put it in the hands of these great investment bankers. We would sign and approve the relegation of the States of the West and of the South to a colonial status.

Mr. President, when the case of the southern governors, which was designed to remove unfair and unjust discriminations against the Southern States, and to open the door for the removal of unfair and unjust discriminations against the Western States, as well, was tried before the Interstate Commerce Commission, a witness for the eastern railroads, testifying, as shown on page 832 of the record of the Senate committee on this bill, did not hesitate to make this statement:

Official Territory-

And the Official Territory is the preferred, the privileged, territory of the East—

Official Territory lines have perhaps the most vital interest in interterritorial competitive adjustments of any single group of carriers in the country for the reason that the populous Official Territory provides the markets for a large part of the traffic produced elsewhere in the United States. That territory is hemmed in on the South, the Southwest, and the West by territories, and carriers serving them, all seeking to market their products within the territory served by Official lines.

In that Official Territory, let me say, Mr. President, live more than 70 percent of the people of the United States who constitute more than 70 percent of the purchasing power of the country. It is in that territory that we find the great markets.

In many instances, such commodities, sought to be marketed within Official Territory, come into direct competition with the commodities produced in that territory. Official lines—

That is, the eastern railroad lines therefore, are in duty bound to protect the geographical or other natural advantages possessed by shippers or producers on their lines, and, as a matter of justice and equity, they may not be required to join in such low bases of interterritorial rates as to nullify or neutralize these natural advantages.

What the witness was saying, Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 20 minutes allotted to the Senator from Alabama have expired.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Georgia yield me one more minute?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield 1 minute more to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for one more minute.

Mr. HILL. I wish to sum up by saying that if the bill is passed over the President's veto we shall have struck a heavy blow to the free-enterprise system which has built and made great our country. By passing the bill we shall have taken the first step leading inevitably toward Government ownership and operation of the railroads, for the people will soon come to realize that if we are to have a monopoly cartel, a supergovernment, controlling the transportation industry, then that supergovernment should be their government, and they will insist that that monopoly cartel be turned over to the Government of the United States, which will mean Government operation and control and ownership of the railroads.

If we pass the bill today, we shall have taken a step toward the socialization and the nationalization of American industry.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I yield 20 minutes to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Johnston].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the legislation now pending before the Senate is not anything We have been discussing what is commonly known as the Bulwinkle bill, or the Reed bill, for many years. I am glad to say that in the years that have passed we have been successful in keeping such a law as this off the statute books. During all the time the legislation has been pending in Congress the railroads have been crying that they could not operate properly without legislation such as is carried in the bill. But I should like to call to the attention of the people of the United States that the railroads have continued to make rates and have continued to operate under existing law.

I want to make it plain that defeat of the legislation will not prevent the railroads from continuing to operate in the future as they have been operating in the past. So long as they see fit not to violate the antitrust laws they can meet together and enter into agreements respecting rates and operation of their railroads, but such agreements must not violate the antitrust laws or be detrimental to the people of the United States.

Mr. President, in reality, what is being asked of us by the pending bill? We are asked to permit the American Association of Railroads to meet together as a group and decide upon policies, rates, the making of timetables, and everything else that goes into the operation of railroads, and submit their agreements to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and if the Commission approves them, the railroads will be protected from prosecution, even though they have in fact violated the antitrust laws of the United States. Should the railroads be permitted to hide behind the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or should they, like all other corporations in the United States, abide by the antitrust laws of the United States? That is the question before us upon the reconsideration of the bill which was vetoed by the President.

Mr. President, I commend the President of the United States for vetoing the bill and sending it back to us, thus protecting the people and the shippers of "the United States.

Why do I object to the Association of Railroads getting together and entering into agreements such as provided by the bill? I can give the Senate a few reasons why I object.

Hearings were held over a long period of months and years on the pending legislation. In those hearings it will be found that time and time again a certain railroad endeavored to reduce its rates between one city and another city in the United States, but was prevented from doing so-not by any law similar to that represented by the measure which is now before us, but by intimidation. That was the only way that existed at that time by which to keep a railroad from reducing its rates. During the investigation, when the records were explored, it was found that a railroad would be told, "No, you cannot reduce your rates from the one city to the other." The railroad would contend that it thought it advisable to reduce the rates, not only for the advantage which would accrue to the railroad itself, but for the advantage which would accrue to the shippers by a reduction in rates.

Those behind the bill are afraid of what may happen to them because of such records which have been dug up respecting them. They have in the past violated the law. If the pending measure were passed over the President's veto it would result in blotting out any violations of the antitrust law committed in the past, and would, by direct provision of law, give the railroads permission in the future to violate the antitrust laws, and thus penalize the people of the United States because of the shipping rates which would be applied to them.

Do Senators for one moment believe that the Department of Justice of the United States would oppose the bill if the Department did not believe it would result in breaking down the antitrust laws of the United States?

I am warning the Senate and the people that if we pass this legislation it will be only the forerunner of similar legislation exempting one corporation after another in the future.

All during the hearings the Department of Justice kept a close watch upon this legislation. In the minority views on similar legislation in 1946, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Tobey] and I had this to say:

This bill would give the railroad, motor-carrier, water-carrier, pipe-line, and freight-forwarder industries the opportunity of obtaining complete exemption from the antitrust laws. If enacted into law, the proposed legislation would cut the antitrust laws from the heart of our economy—the transportation industry. Such legislation would be an opening wedge in entirely destroying the antitrust laws, designed to guard and preserve the American system of free enterprise.

The reason we made that statement was that we wanted free enterprise. But we did not want any combination or group telling people even within the group what they must do, telling them that they cannot reduce rates, even when a carrier may think it is to the best interests of the people to reduce rates.

Reading further from the minority

The obvious purpose of the bill is to deprive the courts of jurisdiction in pending cases instituted by the Department of Justice and the State of Georgia.

In invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that those same cases are still pending in court, and thousands of dollars have been spent to carry the cases forward since this report was written in 1946.

The Department of Justice, in a suit at Lincoln, Nebr., is seeking to enjoin powerful combinations of railroads—

And it is still seeking to do sois seeking to enjoin powerful combinations of railroads, railroad associations, and bankers from violating the antitrust laws, fixing arbitrary and discriminatory freight rates limiting railroad services, suppressing improvements in railroad equipment and facilities, and preventing the development of modes of transportation competitive with the railroads. The State of Georgia's suit is now being tried in the Supreme Court of the United States—

As I stated a few moments ago, it is still in the courts; it is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States—and seeks to enjoin combinations in the railroad industry from fixing noncompetitive and discriminatory freight rates. These important cases, brought to enforce basic laws enacted by the Congress, could become moot if this bill is enacted.

I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that when this bill was being considered by the Senate an amendment was offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell], which was adopted, exempting from the provisions of the bill the cases then pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and which are still pending there. But after the bill passed the Senate and went to the free conference, someone got hold of the free conferees, and that amendment was wiped out. Do Senators imagine that the railroads had anything to do with that? Do they imagine that the railroads wanted that amendment out? As a result of its being stricken out I fear that all the money spent by the State of Georgia and by the Department of Justice in an effort to uncover what the railroads had done and how they had violated the antitrust laws will have been spent in vain. After the money has been spent, the amendment placed in the bill by the Senate is stricken out.

Reading further from the minority

A dangerous precedent would be set, encouraging other powerful groups to seek legislation immunizing them from established laws and the power of the courts to enforce them.

Cartelization of the transportation industry cannot be isolated from the national economy.

Give me the right to regulate traffic into and out of any commodity, and I can make or break any producer of such commodity, whether it be a textile-manufacturing establishment, a coal mine, or any other kind of business. I can so arrange rates that it would be more profitable to go into that kind of business in another locality.

I have had a little experience along this line. The South has had experience when it comes to discriminatory State That is the reason why I am rates. watching this legislation so closely. invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that even when the case was carried through the Interstate Commerce Commission and on through the courts of the United States-which requires yearsthe Supreme Court said, in a decision a few months ago, that the people living in the South below the Mason and Dixon's line have been charged 10 percent more than they ought to have been charged, and that the people living in the official territory, north of the Mason and Dixon's line, had not been charged enough. They ought to have been charged 10 percent That made a differential of 20 more. percent, which has been in existence for many years.

If we leave it to the shippers of the United States to establish rates and regulations dealing with the making of rates, then we find, as was brought out in the hearings, the big railroads of the United States dominating and controlling smaller railroads and telling them what rates to charge between one locality and another. The people themselves do not even know about it. When these associations get together, there will be no opposition. Proposals will be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission for approval or disapproval. How easy it is to obtain approval when no one is objecting. After such an arrangement has once been approved, it is put into effect and the people of the United States pay the bill. The consumer, even though he himself may not be shipping anything, pays the bill. That is what I am speaking for at the present time. Of course, rates must be established, but in no instance should the carriers be allowed to fix them in violation of the antitrust laws which are now on the statute books of the United States. Why should they be allowed to violate a criminal statute?

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a letter which I received from the late Honorable Josephus Daniels. He wrote the letter to me back on June 10, 1947:

DEAR SENATOR: I am enclosing an editorial appearing in today's News and Observer headed, "OLIN JOHNSTON Right."

If we exempt railroads, insurance companies, and newspaper associations—

And, Mr. President, bear in mind that he was a newspaperman—as asked by this Congress we might as well, not only repeal the antitrust law, but pass an act to give monopoly the right to rob the people and repeal what we call American freedom in trade.

A stronger statement of the case could scarcely be made than that, Mr. President, as it appears in a letter coming from a former Cabinet officer and a man whom most people will say fought for the rights of the people of the Nation.

The letter closes -

With high regards, sincerely yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Mr. President, he was stating the matter just as I see it.

As I recall the hearings, I remember that the then Governor of Georgia, Ellis Arnall, came before the committee and testified for several days; and in his testimony he begged and pleaded with the Congress not to legislate him out of court. His attorneys in that case came before the committee and testified to the same effect. The attorneys from the Department of Justice pleaded with the committee in the same way, and begged that the committee not legislate them out of court.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Then, Mr. President, I close by saying that in my opinion this bill should not be passed; and I warn the Senate that if we let this proposed legislation be enacted, then in the future we shall have other corporations asking to be treated in the way that the railroads are treated.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, 28 minutes remain to those who favor-sustaining the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twentyseven minutes remain, the Chair is advised.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then I yield myself 13 minutes.

Mr. President, I have not always found myself in agreement with the President of the United States. However, I wish to say that in my judgment the veto message he has submitted in disapproving this bill contains as fine a statement of democratic principles and of true Americanism as has ever been sent to the Congress of the United States by any President. In two paragraphs of the message the President makes an argument, that it is impossible to refute, as to the dangerous consequences of overriding his veto and enacting this bill into law. I wish to read those two paragraphs. I quote now from the President's veto message:

No legislation giving a major industry immunity from the antitrust laws should be enacted unless adequate alternative safeguards are provided for the public interest. This measure fails to provide such safe-guards. Even the limited safeguards incorporated in the bill as originally passed by the Senate are omitted from the bill in its present form. It would require the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve any agreement which it finds to be in "furtherance of the national transportation policy." This is a vague and general standard and is manifestly neither adequate nor appropriate as a criterion for waiving the protection afforded the public by the antitrust laws.

Furthermore the Commission would be placed in the position of applying this general criterion to the basic procedural agree-ments without being able to foresee fully the nature and effect of the joint actions which would be taken thereunder. Nevertheless the exemption from the antitrust laws would extend to these subsequent actions without the necessity of further Commission approval. would extend, moreover, even beyond the parties to the basic agreement to any "other persons" who participate in such actions.

Mr. President, since this bill first made its appearance on Capitol Hill some 7 or 8 years ago I have consistently opposed it with every resource at my command. When we in the Congress of the United States proceed to throw around any segment of American industry the cloak of congressional immunity from prosecution for violating the antitrust laws, we are starting a process of destroying free enterprise in this Nation. That would be true, Mr. President, if it were applied to the great automobile industry and if a law were passed which enabled the automobile manufacturing companies to meet together and fix the prices of their products without any regard to competition. But, after all, automobiles are not an absolute necessity to thousands of families in this land.

Mr. President, we should not immunize those who manufacture radios in this country from the effects of violation of the antitrust laws and permit them to agree upon the prices and upon the terms of disposal and distribution of radios in the channels of commerce. But, of course, there are millions of American families who could exist without having a radio.

We are now dealing with an enterprise whose operations directly affect every citizen of the United States and every family in the United States in their every-day living costs and standards; and it is nothing short of criminal to enact this bill and exempt the great transportation industry from any fear of punishment for violation of the antitrust laws, and permit them to enter into cartels and create a monopoly that can directly affect and increase the cost of living of every family in this land by increasing the cost of transportation for the delivery of food and clothing to the consumers.

Mr. President, the legislation is strongly urged here by one of the greatest lobbies that has been assembled in all the history of parliamentary govern-ment. We are told that the bill, if passed, would simplify the work of freight and shipping bureaus and of shippers in establishing rates. I freely agree, Mr. President, that the enact-ment of the bill would simplify the work of freight bureaus, but to no greater degree than immunizing any other industry from the effects of the antitrust laws would simplify the operations of their business. The simplification for which they plead will result in evils which may not be felt adversely for the next 2 or 3 years, but when the conferees on the part of the Senate eliminated from the bill the provision that would have confined the negotiations solely to those directly interested in transportation and permitted any person to sit in on the fixing of rates and conditions of travel, it in the last analysis will turn this important function which should be regulated by Government over to two great banking houses in this country,

J. P. Morgan and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., which advance the finances enabling the carriers to exist and to operate.

I have no antipathy to great enterprise as such. I wish to keep alive in the breast of every American youth the hope that he too may accumulate a vast fortune. But I realize, Mr. President, that in the complicated world in which we live it is necessary to impose some restraints and some controls upon those who have gathered into their possession a tremendous part of the wealth that makes these United States, if small business and enterprise are to be permitted to exist, and if the hopes and aspirations of thousands of those who today have not, are to be kept alive and retain their faith that under the American system they, too, may reach the top of the heap and enjoy the distinction of possessing great wealth.

Mr. President, through the control of the shipping bureaus centralized wealth can control to a minute degree the location of future industry in this land. It may determine whether one section of the country shall prosper while another shall lie prostrate. In the past we have seen the result of the manipulations of railroad associations and freight bu-We have seen how the so-called Official Territory, has enjoyed great advantages that were denied other sections. It has resulted in a centralization of industry and of wealth in America, not altogether due to the unusual capacity and genius and ability of those who lived in Official Territory, but because when they entered into a business they possessed a 10- or 15-percent advantage in the cost of marketing their products, which denied the right of expansion to industry in other sections of the country. I have nothing against them because of their bigness, but I am opposed to issuing them a license to exploit and to rob one section for the benefit of another section of the country. That is no reflection upon them as being honorable men. I regard the Members of the Senate of the United States as being honorable men, but I would oppose issuing a license to steal even to Members of the Senate of the United States.

As I see it, that is what the measure does to those who might wish to oppose the powers which are granted by the act through rigging the freight structure for the benefit of one section as opposed to another.

Mr. President, representatives of the West and of the South have for years striven earnestly to secure full fellowship as American States and as American citizens by obtaining an equality of opportunity in the application of freight rates. The enactment of the bill will long defer that day when those great sections may hope to have industrial development through a diffusion of the industrial plants of the United States equally to each and every section.

I am opposed to the bill on general principles, because it immunizes the great transportation industry, not only the railroads, but the truck lines, bus lines, and pipe lines, from prosecution under the antitrust laws. That applies also to services such as buying new cars and other equipment that will enable the stronger to stifle the weak.

I am strongly opposed to this bill because it strikes down the constitutional right of a sovereign State to bring a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States and kills the cause of action that has already been recognized by that Court. Even if I favored the general principle of the bill I would be opposed to action of the Congress taking from the jurisdiction of a co-equal branch of the Government an action at law brought in that Court in good faith and recognized by the Court, and even now in the process of determination. We should not permit this industry, because they blowing hot upon their neck the breath of retribution at the bar of justice, to escape the consequences of that decision by denying the Supreme Court jurisdiction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Georgia, and shall yield to the Senator from Kentucky, such time as they may desire in which to conclude their remarks.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator is very generous. Under the prodding of the Chair, who held up his finger when it was 2 minutes, and 1 minute, I undertook to compact what I was undertaking to say in that brief period of time, and I therefore shall not expand upon my remarks. I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Kentucky, in order that he may avail himself of the generosity of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope I may conclude what I have to say within that time, and I thank the Senator from Kansas for his offer. If time runs rapidly, as it frequently does, I may avail myself of it.

I have discussed this proposition several times in the past. I discussed it when the bill was before the Senate, I discussed it in a previous session of Congress when a similar bill was passed. I have not changed my views with regard to it. My views have been strengthened by the President's message vetoing the

I have deplored heretofore and I now deplore the constant effort on the part of Congress to whittle down the jurisdiction of the antitrust laws. Those laws were enacted under the commerce clause of the Constitution, under which we have dealt with railroads, all sorts of transportation companies and organizations, transportation labor organizations, and organizations using transportation facilities for the shipment of their products. The same provision of the Constitution authorizing Congress to regulate commerce among the States is the foundation of all our legislation dealing with that subject, whether it dealt with the railroads themselves or steamboats or other forms of transportation among the States, or whether it dealt with the companies producing commodities shipped over the transportation lines.

I have always contended, and I believe now more firmly than ever, that morally we have no more right to exempt railroads from the operation of the antitrust law because they are railroads and because we have established an Interstate Commerce Commission as an agency of the Congress to regulate rates. than we have to exempt from the operation of the antitrust law corporations which manufacture the products which are shipped over the railroads, because we have established a Federal Trade Commission to deal, in some respects, with violations of the antitrust law by corporations. The Federal Trade Commission, no less than the Interstate Commerce Commission, is an agency of Con-We have recognized the fact that the Congress could not by law fix rates on There had to be an agency established by Congress for that purpose. We recognized that the Federal Trade Commission, which has the right to hear and determine controversies arising in business in regard to practices in which businesses indulge, should have the power to issue orders to cease and desist from certain practices. This was done in order to get away from the interminable litigation which cluttered up our Federal courts because one concern would bring a lawsuit against another, involving only a controversy between the parties to the litigation. Then, if a decision were finally rendered by a Federal court, it would be taken as an example of what might be done by other business concerns engaged in similar activities.

It has been customary in the past few years, as I have heretofore reminded the Senate, that when the Supreme Court has a case before it involving a controversy the determination of which might be unfavorable to someone's contention, to undertake to get Congress to reverse the decision of the court in advance, by cutting the ground from under the Court in connection with its jurisdiction to pass upon the question. The same thing occurred with reference to insurance companies, when they were indicted, prosecuted, or brought into court because they were violating the antitrust law. An effort was made to exempt them, because the Supreme Court had a question of that sort before it, involving their guilt as violating the antitrust law, and the Court might render a decision, which it later did render, holding the insurance companies guilty and holding them under the jurisdiction of the antitrust law. But, in order to take time for the forelock, an effort was made in the Congress of the United States to enact legislation exempting those companies from the provisions of the antitrust law.

The same thing occurred when the question of ownership of oil under the tidelands on the coasts of the United States came before the Supreme Court. A decision was imminent. Legislation was sought and, I believe, passed, and was vetoed by the President, which denied to the Federal Government ownership, jurisdiction, or control over the tidelands oil, which may be so necessary in the immediate future for national defense. That legislation, undertaking to reverse the Supreme Court's decision, is still pending in the matter of the ownership of tidelands.

There is now before the Senate legislation dealing, or endeavoring to deal, in the same way with this trio of great interests, the great insurance companies. the great oil companies, and, now, the great railroad companies, in an effort to give the railroads a charter by legislative enactment which would exempt them from the operation of the antitrust law. merely because there is an Interstate Commerce Commission which Congress established in the beginning with jurisdiction to regulate rates. In no legislation have we enacted heretofore, either in the original act to regulate commerce. which was passed in 1887, a whole century after the Constitution was adopted. or in the amendments to that act, including the Transportation Act of 1920, or any other railroad legislation enacted by the Congress, based upon our regulatory powers in regard to transportation companies, have we exempted the railroads, by implication or directly, from the operation of the antitrust law.

In certain sections of the country we have suffered, particularly in my State. because of an artificial and arbitrary division known as the Official Rate Territory, under which differential freight rates were sanctioned by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The result has been that our section of the United States has been discriminated against and, in some respects, stunted because of these differential freight rates. I have stood on the Kentucky-side of the Ohio River, where are located wonderful cities dotting the southern bank of that river, and have looked across at the other side and have seen factories on the north side which had an advantage over those located on the south bank of the river. merely because of this artificial and arbitrary division.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY, I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I assume the Senator did not see a great many factories on the southern bank of the river.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. I saw where they might have been had it not been for the discrimination under which industries on the southern bank suffered.

The factories on the north bank of the river could ship their products across the river without paying a differential in freight rates, but those which were unfortunate enough to be located on the south side of the river could not ship a pound of their products to the north side without paying a differential in freight rates. Naturally it was a severe handicap, because the Ohio River is a great artery of commerce. It is one of the large rivers of America. I have often said in connection with consideration of the question of improving our waterways. that if improvement in navigation on the Ohio River could not prove itself to be beneficial, I did not believe there was any other river in America the improvement of which would prove to be beneficial or profitable. I think that is a true state-

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator has referred to railroad rates. I am glad that he is now dealing with the subject of water transportation. It is true that the railroad companies have organized a powerful lobby which has generated a great deal of sentiment, real and synthetic, behind the bill. It is not only railroad transportation, but water transportation, bus and truck transportation, transportation by pipe lines, and every other means of transportation in the United States which will be affected.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator, and I thank him for amplifying my argument in regard to the railroads. We have been generous, if I may say so, to the railroads by allowing them, under the law, to form organizations through which they may control bus and truck lines, and other forms of transportation, especially as feeders. But under this bill, if it becomes law, those subsidiary organizations can enter into combinations in restraint of trade and not be subject to either civil or criminal prosecution.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY, I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I thought I might be helpful to my friend—and I underscore the word "friend"—

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a reciprocal trade agreement.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator and I agree unanimously on that feeling. I thought I might relieve the Senator's voice for a few minutes, in view of the mention by my friend from Georgia [Mr. Russell] of the words "railroad lobby." I want to give a very concrete illustration, which I think I may have used heretofore; if not, I used it in the committee. It is exhibit A of the tragic situation which confronts us in America when the insidious lobbies really get to work. There are those in this Chamber and in the other body of the Congress who ridicule the term "lobbyist" and say it is like talking about the weather. They dismiss it too lightly. The railroad lobbyists themselves admitted their action in their testimony. group of railroad lobbyists were under examination before a subcommittee of the Senate a few years ago. Before the subcommittee, under cross-examination, they said:

Legislative committees?

They snapped their fingers.

We pay no attention to them. They are only scenery. We go back into the hinterlands, the States of the country, where the men come from to Congress, we find how much money they have, we find who controls them, and who has them in their grip, and then we get our men.

Or words similar thereto.

So that is the way they function.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Kansas to yield me further time.

Mr. REED. I shall be very glad to yield the Senator 10 minutes.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, that was an illustration. I could give others ad infinitum, ad nauseam. What has come over the American people and what has come over the American Congress? Have we lost our sense of righteous indignation? Some day the people will put us on the spot, at the bar of political justice, and at that time will ask, "Where were you back in those days when the game was being played on the lower level? What did you do to purify the body politic, to save the people from evil things that were going on in high places?" And you will hang your head. You have a job to do this afternoon by voting to sustain the veto against this Bulwinkle bill, albeit it is sponsored by my friend the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Every cleanliving and right-living man who loves justice and free government, and who believes in having things done in the open, ought to rebuke this rotten crowd of railroad lobbyists by voting to sustain the veto of the President of the United States, and so come through clean this afternoon.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to take a minute or two in my own time?

Mr. BARKLEY, If the Senator will pay me back.

Mr. REED. After the Senator from New Hampshire has made his emotional appeal—

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator has not heard any emotional appeal yet. It is but just beginning.

Mr. REED. All the shipping organizations in the United States of which I have any knowledge, some 950 of them, have filed their approval of the bill with the Congress of the United States.

Mr. TOBEY. That indicates unanimity, and that very degree of unanimity is suspicious, and it ought to excite the common sense of Congress, and cause us to say there is reason to be suspicious of such a degree of unanimity. "There is a reason," as Mr. Post used to say in his advertisements.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ap-preciate the fact that traffic organizations have been importuned to support this bill. I received a long letter this morning from the Ohio Valley Traffic Association urging me to vote for it. But I am not going to do it. I can understand that it is more convenient for traffic officers and traffic organizations to deal with railroads if there are no restrictions. It is more convenient and simpler for them and the railroads to get together and conduct their business without any interference of the antitrust laws. I am not blaming them for lobbying; they have a right to present their views to Congress. But I am amazed that any Member of the United States Senate, who from time immemorial must have had experience with lobbyists, allows himself to be influenced by them.

We hear it constantly said, "I voted against this bill a few days ago, but I have received letters, I have received telegrams, I have received calls, asking me to vote now against my convictions, which were expressed 1 week or 2 weeks ago, now that the bill has come here with a veto from the President of the United States." I would be amazed—I cannot believe it would happen—that anyone who believes this is vicious and wicked legislation, unjust and unfair to the American people, would now change his attitude because someone has called him up on the telephone or written him a sheaf or feed basket full of letters, which have no doubt been inspired by the railroads themselves.

Mr. TOBEY. That is an excuse, and not a reason.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator. That is what I am trying to urge and emphasize. I shall be surprised if it becomes effective, not only surprised, but disillusioned also.

Our forefathers in this very legislative hall thought it wise to protect the American people, after 100 years of inaction by the Congress, because no effort was made to regulate commerce among the States from 1787, when the Constitution was adopted, to 1887, when the first act to regulate commerce was adopted. In the wisdom of our forefathers who sat in the two Houses of Congress legislation was enacted not only to protect the people, but to protect small business against big business, and every amendment of the Interstate Commerce Act has been at the instigation of the victims of business, though they themselves were small business. It has not been the result of the efforts of demagogs or labor leaders or agitators, it has been the victimized business world in this country that has demanded the creation, for instance, of the Federal Trade Commission, and the enactment of the Clayton antitrust law as an amendment of the original antitrust law.

I think we are unwise and even stupid, considering the possibilities of the tendency to which I have referred, if we now sanction the exemption from the provisions of the antitrust laws of these great arteries of trade, not only those which are bound together with steel rails, but busses, steamboats, and every form of transportation, which may or may not be under the control of the railroads which have instigated this legislation.

I have nothing against the railroads. I am their friend. I tried to show that when the question came before me in the other body as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I was a member for 14 years. And during all the time I served on the Commerce Committee in the United States Senate, when matters of this sort came up, I insisted on fair treatment to railroads, to their employees, and to the shippers as well. But there is someone involved here besides railroads, and besides traffic organizations and shippers. The American people, the consumers of our country, are involved in this legislation, and one by one we will be asked to whittle down the restrictions of the antitrust laws until the people will be victims en masse of restrictions and impositions which Congress may hereafter be called upon by an outraged public to undo, retracing its steps, to undo what we are about to do here today if the veto message shall be overridden.

I certainly hope we are not going to override it. I am going to vote to sustain the veto, because I think it is a righteous veto against a vicious principle, as exemplified by a vicious piece of legislation. In saying that, I make no reflection upon anyone who supports the legislation. I concede to the Senator from Kansas and all other Senators as much honesty, integrity, and sincerity as I possess. Nevertheless, we can be very stupid sometimes when we are most sincere.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield for just one observation?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Although I am sitting over here to listen to the Senator from Kentucky, I point out to the Senator that over yonder is the Republican side of the aisle, my party's side.

Mr. BARKLEY. We welcome the Senator from New Hampshire over on our side any time.

Mr. TOBEY. I came over to listen to the Senator, but over there are my colleagues, in absentia 100 percent. about the Bulwinkle bill, Mr. Republican Party? Let me talk to you a minute. You, my party, are going to Philadelphia next week to attend a national convention, to make a platform on which to elect a President.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has now gone back to the Republican side. Does he mind if I come over there, too?

Mr. TOBEY. Not at all. I say to my party, in absentia, when you get to Philadelphia, at the meeting of the committee on resolutions, headed by the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe] and others of my Republican colleagues, there I pray you begin this thing aright. If you want to deserve the acclaim of the people and win the election, there are some things you can do about it. You can and should condemn the killing of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill by the Rules Committee today, striking down a farreaching piece of legislation in the interests of the people, a bill which has had Nation-wide interest and support, and which passed the Senate twice. You can and should condemn the burying of the education bill which passed the Senate, only to be buried in committee, not privileged to be considered and voted on upon its merits by the representatives in Congress of the American people. You can demand that in the passage of legislation we place first the interests of the people of the United States. Another thing you can do in the platform is to adopt measures against the railroad lobbyists who infest the Capitol, who have tried to get the Bulwinkle bill passed, to throttle free competition and trade in this country, and to nullify the antitrust laws now on our statute books. Having done such things in all sincerity, my Republican colleagues at Philadelphia, you may then come before the American people asking their support, with high hopes of success.

I want to join with you in such appeals and principles but we cannot make such effective by closing our ears and shutting our eyes to human needs. Remember that human life is more important than things, remember that, fellow Republicans at Philadelphia.

So with those brief remarks to my many colleagues now before me, all in absentia, I take my seat with a "God bless you everyone," and the hope that you may see the light and walk in the light as you enter upon your activities next week in Philadelphia.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President— The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. REED. I yield the Senator the time he may require.

Mr. BARKLEY. I only wish that the empty benches which have been addressed by the Senator from New Hampshire could speak and vote.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has just addressed the Senate. I think this is the first time he has been in the Chamber

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator is about three times wrong; that is all.

Mr. REED. Well, the Senator did not stay very long when he was in the Chamber, I will say that.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator knows the answer to that. The Senator knows I have heard the Senator from Kansas make the same remarks he made today many times respecting the Bulwinkle

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the seats which are now empty are usually occupied by Senators who have heard over and over again talk similar to that which has been heard in the Senate today, which has no application to the question immediately before the Senate. If the Senator from New Hampshire had been present when the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'Mahoney] was speaking-and as I recall he spoke for about an hour and twenty minutes-he would have observed that there were not more than two or three seats occupied on the Democratic side of the aisle. The subject we are considering today has been discussed more frequently in more different Congresses than any other question since I have been a Member of the Senate, and I came to the Senate some years ago. We have exhausted the subject. None of us can make a speech on the subject without repeating what he has said before. I opened the debate this afternoon and occupied about 30 minutes, including the interruptions which occurred. I only repeated what I had said on numerous previous occasions. The same has been true respecting the whole debate. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARK-LEY | have all repeated today what they have said over and over again in the course of the consideration of this legislation in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.
Mr. MURRAY. I do not recall any repetition of the facts I placed in the RECORD today. It seems to me the Senator from Kansas is making a misstatement when he says the subject has been hashed and rehashed over and over again. That statement is not quite accurate.

Mr. REED. I did not pay close attention to the entire speech of the Senator from Montana, but I did pay some attention. As I recall he devoted a part of his address-I was tempted to use another term, but I shall not-which I understood was prepared for the Senator from Montana by the Department of Justice, to an attack upon the advisory shippers boards, the regional shippers boards of the country.

Mr. MURRAY. I was discussing the arrangements the railroads had built up with the shippers and other organizations of the various communities to make them a front for the railroads, and also discussing the program they had with reference to contacting the people in the States who might have influence on Senators and Representatives and use that pressure on Representatives and Senators to influence them in their action on this matter.

Mr. REED. I happened to have been chairman of the shippers' board in my territory, the Trans-Missouri-Kansas Shippers' Board, for 15 consecutive years, which is the record for such service in the whole country. At no time was that board ever used, or could it be used and there was never any attempt on the part of the railroads to use that shippers' board for such a purpose. Shippers' boards—and I think there are 15 of them in the country—are regarded universally by economists, industrialists, statisticians, and commercial organizations, as among the most useful agencies of the country, by anticipating at least 3 months in advance the probable movement of traffic, as to volume, so that suitable arrangements may be made by the railroads for the equipment necessary to handle the traffic. That is the principal function of shippers' boards. During the 15 years I was chairman of the Trans-Missouri-Kansas Shippers' Board I never received a dollar of salary, nor a dollar toward payment of my expenses. I paid my own expenses. That is the universal practice everywhere. All Senators have to do is to inquire about the board in their own territory and they will find how it functions. The shippers' boards which were attacked by the Senator from Montana are regarded as performing one of the most useful functions in transportation, and they pay their own expenses and receive no salary.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. RUSSFLL. I shall plead guilty to the Senator's accusation that there has been something repetitious about the remarks which have been made here. For a number of years I have protested against what I believe to be the great injustice and wrong contained in the bill. I propose to continue to do so. If the Senator's theory were adopted, a preacher would deliver one sermon against sin, and then never preach another. is a continuing struggle, and I do not propose to relax in my efforts nor in my remarks, even though the Senator from Kansas were to prevail here today, because if men do not cry out against evils, soon they will encompass them and engulf them. So, Mr. President, I plead guilty to the indictment that there has been something of repetition in my remarks.

Mr. REED. I do not make any other charge against Senators, including myself, than the charge that what we have said today has been said over and over again before on previous occasions. Criticism has come from several Senators concerning repetition. The statements as to why more Senators have not been present during the debate, which have been made, but not quite so vehemently as made by the Senator from New Hampshire just now, were based on the fact that there has been so much repetition in the debate. They have listened to a discussion of the legislation before. have placed a limitation on debate at 4:45 today, so I assume discussion will continue until then. If there is any way to advance the time 15 minutes I shall be glad to yield the remainder of my time so it may be done.

In the time that remains I wish to talk sanely about some things in the bill which have been persistently misrepresented. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Flanders] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'Mahoney] indulged in a colloquy earlier today over the fact that the Senator from Wyoming read some sentences of the bill in a loud voice, and then others in not so loud a voice. I think the Senator from Georgia was not guilty of doing such a thing, but I think he was guilty of a mistake in his interpretation and reading of the bill.

The first thing in the bill which the shippers demanded as one of the conditions of their unanimous support was that railroads, pipe lines, water carriers, and motor carriers should not be allowed to participate in agreements between them in these different classes except for the purpose of setting up and maintaining joint rates and through routes. That is the first requirement in the bill. The language is:

The Commission shall not approve, under this section, any agreement between or among carriers of different classes unless it finds that such agreement is of the character described in paragraph (2) of this section—

Which goes back to a limitation of the agreement concerning rates, fares, classifications, and charges; and unless it is limited to matters between these different groups. It must be limited to matters of joint rates or through routes.

This is the way the bill divides the carriers into classes:

And for purposes of this paragraph carriers by railroad, express companies, and sleepingcar companies are carriers of one class; pipeline companies are carriers of one class; carriers by motor vehicle are carriers of one class; carriers by water are carriers of one class; and freight forwarders are carriers of one class.

Those different classes of carriers cannot participate in an agreement as between different classes except for one single purpose. That is to set-up joint rates and through routes, which the Interstate Commerce Act imposes upon every class of carrier. It imposes that burden upon them. They must assume it to comply with the law.

There has been frequent reference to a monopoly of transportation—and nothing could be further from the truth—because these different classes were permitted to come together. They have been kept as far apart as possible. Agreements between carriers of different classes are prohibited if they refer to anything else than the establishment of joint rates and through routes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to have the Senator point out anything in the bill which would prevent, say, an investment banking company which owned stock in one of each type of transportation from having a representative in each of the conferences. I concede that they are divided by types, except as to through traffic; and that is the important part. But since representatives of banking houses have been eliminated from the bill, there is nothing to prevent them from having a representative in each type of conference-water transportation, bus transportation, pipe-line transportation, and railroad transportation.

Mr. REED. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I think it is possible that those interested in the various types of carriers might have representation on the boards of directors. Banks might have such representation. Life-insurance companies which own railroad securities have representation upon boards of directors of railroads. That is also true of investment bankers. While I do not know that it is a particularly desirable practice, on the other hand, I do not see how we are going to prevent those who have heavy investments in the properties and in the financial stake of the various carriers from having some representation which watches over the management.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a brief statement?

Mr. REED. I am very happy to yield to the Senator from North Carolina. He may have all the time, within the limit of my time, that he wishes to use.

Mr. HOEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I served with the Committee on Interstate Commerce during the years since I have been a Member of the Senate, until the Reorganization Act took effect. I happened to be a member of the subcommittee which considered the Bulwinkle bill. I have never known any other bill with respect to which there has been so much misinterpretation or misunderstanding as there has been with respect to this measure.

It is noteworthy that every single shipper who came before that committee testified in favor of the bill. Practically every single State utilities commission in the United States favors the bill. No shippers, no representatives of chambers of commerce, no representatives of those who pay the freight bills, came to oppose this measure.

It is opposed on the ground that to some extent it interferes with or nullifies the antitrust laws. It is necessary to have rate bureaus if we are to have rates efficiently fixed for shippers. I do not know how it would be practicable to have the railroads operate and conduct their business in the public interest without having the opportunity for rate bureaus to meet and discuss rates. Any man who establishes a new business or new industry on any railroad line in the United States must of necessity obtain rates for the products of his manufacture in order that he may ship goods to every part of the United States. He cannot get rates unless the railroads can confer on the subject. If he applies to the railroad on which his plant is located in order to get a rate, that road must necessarily take the question up with other railroads in the United States in order to have a rate agreed upon. It is impracticable to take up the question in any other way than through a rate bureau, where representatives of the various railroads meet and discuss rates.

Mr, REED. Let me say to the Senator from North Carolina, who is a former governor of his State, that in all the rate-bureau meetings, when rates are up for discussion, shippers participate as freely in the discussions as do representatives of the railroads.

Mr. HOEY. They certainly do. In addition, anyone has an opportunity to object to a rate. Notice is given, so that anyone can appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission and show cause why the rate should not be put into effect. After all this is done, and after the rate is put into effect, it then becomes beneficial to those who wish to use it.

In this connection, let me say that as Governor of North Carolina I joined with other southern governors in instituting three different suits in order to get better freight rates for the South. We succeeded in winning what we call the Classification Rate case. We won straight out the Commodity Rate case. We secured a very substantial reduction. which was of benefit to the Southern States, as well as to people in the western area of the country. Recently, after my term of office expired, we succeeded in winning the Classified Rate case, by which most of the discrimination has been removed.

Mr. REED. All those cases were filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and tried before the Interstate Commerce Commission; and it was from the Interstate Commerce Commission that the South obtained relief.

Mr. HOEY. That is true. All the relief which the South has ever received by way of reductions of freight rates has come either through the work of the rate bureaus or through the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has been a slow process. We have not obtained relief quickly. It has required a great deal of time, and we have not yet received all that we should have.

Mr. President, I believe that this method provides the best means by which we can continue to get improvement in our rate structure and obtain some of the benefit of lower freight rates.

I would not take the time to discuss this subject except for the fact that I believe that the purpose of the bill is misapprehended. I certainly believe that in practical operation this system has been beneficial to the entire South, as it has been to the Nation. If it should be abolished, I do not see how we could go about the practical plan of having rates fixed: and we must have rates fixed before we can use them.

Mr. REED. As the Senator from North Carolina knows, a common carrier may not perform any kind of service for a shipper and collect from the shipper, nor may the shipper pay the common carrier any money for any service rendered, unless the common carrier has a published tariff on file describing the charge which will be made for the service rendered. It is illegal, both for the carrier and the shipper, to do anything else.

Mr. HOEY. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. President, in this connection, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a very fine editorial from the Washington Post of this morning.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] had the editorial printed in the RECORD earlier in the day.

Mr. HOEY. Of course I do not wish to duplicate the printing of the editorial. It gives a very clear, full, and fair statement of the functions of this rate-making body.

Mr. REED. It is as able an editorial as I have ever seen.

Mr. President, I wish to read from what was said by the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] who is also a former Governor of his State, as is the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Hoey]. The Senator from Florida opened his remarks on May 28 with these words:

Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly in support of the conference report on Senate bill 110. I believe that no other subject has come up for consideration in the Senate since I have been a Member with respect to which there has been a greater store of misinfor-

That is what the Senator from Florida said, and that is correct. The opponents of the bill have said more things that are not true, that are not germane, and that do not affect the bill, than have been said with respect to any other piece of legislation with which I have had experience during my service in the Senate.

The Senator from Florida stated that every shipping interest in his State was for the bill. That is true of every shipping interest in every other State in the Union.

Let me amplify a little what the Senator from North Carolina said, and then I shall yield to the Senator from Nebraska for a quorum call.

As I stated a moment ago, no common carrier can legally accept a payment for service rendered, nor can a shipper legally pay for the service, unless there is on file a published tariff. That is the first requisite to moving the commerce of the country.

In the beginning—and I am repeating myself; I have said this many times before—each railroad issued its own tariffs. The railroad mileage was limited at that time, and commerce was not so great as it is now. In those days each railroad made its own rates.

Then came the mandatory injunction upon the railroads to establish joint rates and through routes. That was for the purpose of moving traffic without having to unload at the end of any particular railroad. The Congress of the United States in passing the Interstate Commerce Act made in mandatory upon the railroads to do that.

How in the name of heaven 2 or more railroads-and sometimes 30 or 40 railroads are interested in 1 set of rates and 1 set of through routes-could establish joint rates and through routes without having conferences between and among themselves is beyond, anyone's understanding. The shippers of the country are at least 9999100 percent in favor of this bill, because it would preserve the only method of making freight rates to move the Nation's commerce known to any of us who have had experience with the traffic question and the transportation question. That is why the enactment of this bill is necessary and desirable.

Mr. President, some mention has been made of monopoly in this connection, but that is silly. Some mention has been made of gouging people. The Senator from New Hampshire would have us think that all the shipping organizations and all the people of the country have been misled, but that is quite a reflection upon a great mass of people in the United States. I do not hold that view. The shippers' advisory boards and other shippers' groups, which have been attacked by the Senator from Montana, have been useful.

So the whole argument against this measure represents, as the Senator from Florida has said, more misinformation on this subject than he has heard on any subject since he has been in the Senate.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and the remainder of my time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in the few minutes available before the appointed time for voting on this question, if Senators wish to request insertions in the RECORD, or if they desire to make some other brief request, I shall be glad to yield for that purpose. Otherwise, we shall have a quorum call.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will it be possible to bring up at this time a matter on the calendar?

Mr. WHERRY. I think not. We are under a unanimous-consent agreement as to the distribution of the time.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, am I correct in saying that under the unanimous-consent order previously entered. the vote is to be taken at 4:45 p. m.?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to state that immediately following the vote on the President's message vetoing the Bulwinkle bill, another veto message will be laid before the Senate. having to do with the Federal Security appropriation bill, on which we shall get a vote as quickly as possible after the vote on the Bulwinkle bill.

POST OFFICE AT BUNKER HILL, ILL,

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Works, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2759) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a post-office building at Bunker Hill, Ill., and I submit report (No. 1715) thereon. I request immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I should only like to say that on March 19, 1948, the town of Bunker Hill, a small community in the State of Illinois, was entirely demolished by a cyclone, as a result of which, among other structures, the post office was demolished.

There having been no opportunity in the last 3 months to acquire suitable space in which to render adequate postal service, both the Federal Works Administrator, General Fleming and the Postmaster General have indicated their very keen desire to have an authorization passed by the Senate, which would permit the rebuilding of the post office at Bunker Hill, Ill., for which the sum of $160,000 is required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal Works Administrator is authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation. otherwise, a suitable site in Bunker Hill, Ill., and to cause to be erected thereon, at a total cost including administrative expenses not to exceed $160,000, a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the United States post office at Bunker Hill, Ill. Plans and specifications for such building shall be approved by the Administrator and the Postmaster General.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $160,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS

The Senate resumed the reconsideration of the bill (S. 110) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I made an announcement a moment ago, since which time Senators have been coming into the Chamber, leaving their commit-tee work in order to be present to vote on the Bulwinkle bill. I request them not to leave immediately following the vote on that bill, as there is another veto message which will be immediately laid before the Senate, having to do with the Federal Security appropriation bill.

Mr. President, if I am correct on the veto, a vote "yea" is a vote to override, and a vote "nay" is a vote to sustain the PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Nebraska is correct.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement the hour of 4 o'clock and 45 minutes having arrived, the vote will now be taken. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Constitution requiring a yea-and-nay vote, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll. Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bush-FIELD] is necessarily absent, and is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarranl and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Stewart]. If present and voting, the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea" and the Senator from Tennessee would vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas] is necessarily absent on official business. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Mc-CARRAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] are necessarily absent

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a national delegate by the President to the annual conference of the International Labor Organization, meeting in San Francisco, Calif.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMASI, and the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] would vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART. On this vote I have pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bushfield], both of whom, if present, would vote "yea." I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." or to sustain the veto.

SUPPLEMENTAL FEDERAL SECURITY AP-PROPRIATIONS, 1949-VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 714)

Mr. President, I Mr. KNOWLAND. have a privileged matter. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the veto message of the President of the United States with reference to House bill 6355.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 6355, "making supplemental appropriations for the Federal Security Agency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes."

This bill would provide funds for the next fiscal year for the Social Security Administration, the United States Employment Service, and some functions of the Public Health Service. A measure of this kind clearly should not be disapproved by the President except under unusual circumstances and for the most compelling reasons. Such circumstances are presented by the provisions of this bill which would transfer the United States Employment Service from the Department of Labor to the Federal Security Agency.

I believe that this transfer would be a serious error from the standpoint of the proper location of this important function of government. I believe also that this transfer is clearly substantive legislation which should not be included in an appropriation bill.

Over the past 3 years considerable study has been directed to the proper location of the Employment Service in the Government. It is apparent that a system of public employment offices to secure jobs for the workers of this country is directly related to the major purpose of the Department of Labor, which is "to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States." It is equally apparent that it would be far less appropriate to place the Employment Service, together with its auxiliary Farm Placement Service and Veterans' Employment Service, in the Federal Security Agency, which is primarily concerned with matters of health, welfare, and education.

I am, therefore, firmly convinced that because of its intimate relationship to the functions of the Department of Labor the Employment Service should remain permanently in that Department.

To achieve this end, I transmitted to the Congress on January 19, 1948, Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1948, placing the United States Employment Service permanently in the Department of Labor and transferring to that Department the Bureau of Employment Security, now in the Federal Security Agency. This reorganization plan was not accepted by the Congress, principally on the ground that no basic changes should be made in the structure of the executive branch until the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government has completed its studies and submitted its recommendations. This seems to me a reasonable viewpoint.

But in this bill the Congress has acted contrary to its own declared position, and has attempted to effect a far-reaching change in the organization of the executive branch without waiting for the Commission on Organization to report.

In fact this legislation, which is of such paramount importance to the interests of millions of wage-earners and employers, and which is plainly substantive in nature, was passed by the Congress entirely without reference to or hearings by the legislative committees concerned with such matters. Neither the House Committee on Education and Labor nor the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare was given an opportunity to consider the measure. Instead it was conceived by a subcommittee on appropriations and tacked onto an appropriation bill.

I do not believe that it is in the interest of good government that legislation of such importance should be enacted in such a manner. As I stated in December 1945, in withholding my approval from an appropriation bill which contained substantitive legislation, "a matter of such grave importance as our public employment system deserves not only permanent legislation, but legislation carefully and separately considered. Issues of such a difficult and vital nature should not be dealt with as riders to appropriation bills." I note also that on March 4, 1946, the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress recommended "That the practice of attaching legislation to appropriation bills be discontinued."

What makes this matter even more disturbing is that the present bill is another in a series of legislative actions stripping the Department of Labor of essential funds and functions. Last year the Congress removed the United States Conciliation Service from the Department and drastically slashed the Department's appropriations. To remove the United States Employment Service from the Department would further weaken and demoralize it and reduce the entire Department to such a minor status as to raise seriously the question of the validity of its continuance as a separate Department.

I am convinced, therefore, that the provisions of this bill which would transfer the United States Employment Service represent unwise legislative action, enacted in an unsound manner.

For these compelling reasons I am returning the bill without my approval.

HARRY S. TRUMAN. THE WHITE HOUSE, June 14, 1948.

The Senate proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 6355) making supplemental appropriations for the Federal Security Agency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, H. R. 6355, the Supplemental Federal Security Appropriations bill for 1949, provides total appropriations for 1949 of $975,914,-700.

Practically the entire sum is for grants to States, including public assistance grants, public employment and unemployment compensation grants, maternal and child-welfare grants and mental health grants.

Millions of people are involved in the funds provided by the bill, as beneficiaries in either the funds paid out or in the service rendered to them from the grants. Federal beneficiaries amount to 2,471,200, and other beneficiaries from funds or services amount to 16,141,000. Pay to Federal employees is in the bill for 14,432, and pay to State employees is in the bill for 100,828.

Under assistance to States, general, of the Public Health Service, 228 Federal employees are involved on the dental health program.

Under mental health activities of the Public Health Service, 1,128 Federal employees and 1,200 State employees are involved, as well as 2,000 other people under the grants.

The emergency health program in Alaska involves 56 Federal employees and 92 State employees.

Under the Social Security Administration, public assistance grants involve 295 Federal employees, 47,000 State employees, and 3,773,000 beneficiaries. These beneficiaries are divided between 2,490,-000 for old-age assistance, 1,216,000 for aid to dependent children and 67,000 for aid to the needy blind.

Under the Employment Service, 468 Federal employees are involved, and under the unemployment compensation program, 200 Federal employees are involved; and for the combined program in the States, 48,000 State employees are involved, as well as an estimated 4,000,000 beneficiaries from the service of placement or unemployment benefits.

Under the old-age and survivors' insurance fund, 10,870 Federal employees are involved, and insurance beneficiaries of 2,469,000.

Under the Children's Bureau, 278 Federal employees and 4,536 State employees are involved, and the services resulting are extended to 8,368,000 people.

Under the Commissioner's office, 52 Federal employees are involved, and the total for the Social Security Administration shows 12,163 employees involved.

Under the Office of the Administrator, Federal Security Agency, Federal employees are involved in the amount of 550 in the Administrator's office, 159 in Service Operations, and 148 in the general counsel's office.

Another incidental item of Federal beneficiaries is under the program of civilian war benefits, amounting to 200 people.

Mr. President, we are now within 2 or 3 days of the time when the session will end. I think the Members of the Senate know that with respect to some of the provisions in the bill the junior Senator from California, who is chairman of the subcommittee, and was one of the Senate conferees, did not see eye to eye with the House action. But it is my considered judgment that, should the veto be sustained, the next bill that would have to be passed would be essentially the same bill, except that, in my opinion, we would not have as much in the way of funds as we have under this bill.

For that reason, Mr. President, I respectfully urge that the veto of the President be overridden.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Does this bill carry the fund for hospital construction?

Mr. KNOWLAND. No; that is under the other bill, under the regular bill. This is the supplemental bill.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator. Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I do not care to take the time of the Senate, because we are now in the final days of the session; but I should like to point out that I intend to vote to override the veto, although I do not approve of some of the contents of the bill. As I stated when the bill was passed by the Senate, I do not approve of the transfer as provided in it. I think that such action should await the findings and recommendations of the Hoover Commission, and largely for this reason I opposed the President's Reorganization Plan No. 1. In this particular instance, I was opposed to this kind of action also because it entailed an amendment including substantive matter in an appropriation bill

At the time the bill was before the Senate I further pointed out that I did not favor, and I still do not favor, the reduction in the appropriation for the Women's Bureau, which is carried in this particular bill. I think this reduction is most unfortunate, and under ordinary circumstances I would be voting against a measure of this kind.

But as I stated before, at this late day in the session, when we are faced with a great many problems still unsolved, I feel it would be entirely out of order for me to vote in opposition to overriding the veto. I agree with the Senator from California that, if the veto shall be sustained, the appropriations as they now stand in the bill would be very likely reduced, and that eventuality would be most unfortunate.

Mr. President, for all these reasons I shall vote to override the veto.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the veto, except to say what I stated when the bill was before the Senate, when I took a position against the merger referred to by the Senator from New York. I regret very much that it was included in the bill.

I do not wish to take any undue risk of reducing the amount of money involved in the appropriation, and not being on the Committee on Appropriations, I am not in a position to say that I confirm or reject the statement of the Senator from California and the Senator from New York that the amount would be reduced in another appropriation bill. But because the President's veto has called attention to the objections which I urged when the bill was on the floor of the Senate. I feel it to be my duty to vote to sustain the veto of the President, though I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to go any further into the matter.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I desire to take but little of the time of the Senate. I merely want to say that I intend to support the previous action of the Senate on the bill. I do so, however, with some reluctance. In the first place I do not believe the Employment Service should have been taken out of the Department of Labor. In the second place. I regret that the committee found it necessary to make such a substantial cut in the appropriation for the Women's Bureau as practically to make it inoperative. For those reasons I feel considerable reluctance in voting for the bill. However, because the time is short and because there are so many other matters contained in the bill which are of great consequence, I feel I must support the bill.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I shall take only a minute. I supported Reorganization Plan No. 1 because I am completely convinced that the sooner the Unemployment Compensation Bureau and the United States Employment Service are together in the same department the better the morale and efficiency in both those agencies will be. From my knowledge of these matters gained both in the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and in the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which handled the appropriation, I am convinced that the continual turmoil-after all the Employment Service is only in the Department of Labor temporarily-respecting where that agency is going to wind up has seriously impaired the morale and efficiency of the employees of the Employment Service.

Mr. President, I think we have worked out with the House a reasonable compromise which will permit better service in both agencies concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. The question is, BRICKER in the chair). Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? Under the Constitution, the yeas and nays are required. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bush-FIELD] is necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from South Dakota would vote "yea."

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is necessarily absent on official business at one of the Government departments.

I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Mc-CARRAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a national delegate by the President to the annual conference of the International Labor Organization, meeting in San Francisco, Calif.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S.3. An act to provide for the training of air-traffic control-tower operators;

S. 1087. An act to amend section 502 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944:

S. 1447. An act to prohibit the importation of foreign wild animals and birds under conditions other than humane, and for other purposes;

S. 2251. An act to authorize the Army and Navy Union, United States of America, department of Illinois, to construct a recreational park on the grounds of the United States naval hospital, United States naval training center, Great Lakes, Ill.;

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3214) to revise, codify, and enact into law title 28 of the United States Code entitled "Judicial Code and Judiciary."

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Jackson of California, Mr. Maloney, and Mr. Courtney were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

TRANSFER OF ADMINISTRATION FEDERAL CREDIT UNION ACT TO FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2225) to transfer administration of the Federal Credit Union Act to the Federal Security Agency, which was, on page 3, line 6, to strike out "1948" and insert "1949."

Mr. BALDWIN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4071) to amend sections 301 (k) and 304 (a) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CAPEHART. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CAPE-HART, Mr. REED, Mr. MOORE, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, and Mr. McMahon conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSTRUCTION WORK ON RIVERS AND HARBORS-CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 6419, authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The conference report was read, as fol-

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6419) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered, 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, and agree to the same. Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words "in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers dated March 1948" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "House Document Numbered 682, Eightieth Congress;"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the figures "568" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "668"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words "his report dated February 19, 1948" and insert in lieu thereof the words "House Document Numbered 643, Eightieth Congress"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: change the period to a comma and add the following: "and the authorization for the lower Mississippi River project is increased accordingly."; and the Senate agree to the Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words "his report dated August 22, 1947" and insert in lieu thereof the words "House Document Numbered 651, Eightieth Congress"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: on page 10, lines 10 and 11, of the amendments of the Senate, strike out the following "at prices, on terms, and with titles satisfactory to him"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the figure "65,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following figure "62,000,-000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JUDICIAL CODE AND JUDICIARY

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, on page 7927 of the Congressional Record of June 12 of this year, there appear, among other things, in the course of remarks made by myself, the following two sentences having to do with H. R. 3214:

Extensive hearings were held, at which various controversial matters, and particularly one controversial matter, relating to the Tax Court, were heard. As a net result of the facts so developed, it was concluded by the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee that it was advisable to withdraw from House bill 3214 all provisions by which the Tax Court would be placed under the judiciary.

Mr. President, in making that statement I was in error. As a matter of fact, as a net result of the facts developed at the hearings it was concluded by the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee that there should be retained in House bill 3214 the various provisions by which the Tax Court would be placed under the judiciary.

Subsequently, however, when the matter was presented by the subcommittee to the Committee on the Judiciary, it became obvious that it was impossible to secure the passage on the Consent Calendar of this very important bill if the provisions with respect to the Tax Court were to be retained in it.

Therefore, Mr. President, the members of the subcommittee, uniting with the other members of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary who were present, arrived at the conclusion that it was advisable and proper that the provisions with respect to the Tax Court should be withdrawn from H. R. 3214.

Mr. President, the fact is that the subcommittee, of which I had the honor to be chairman, in its own conclusion determined that the Tax Court should be left in the bill. The Committee on the Judiciary itself, with full approval of the three members of the subcommittee, including myself, determined, for the reasons stated, that the Tax Court provisions should be withdrawn. In the interests of accuracy, Mr. President, I desire to make this statement. I may say that the provisions with relation to the Tax Court were withdrawn from the bill as passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. KNOWLAND asked and obtained consent to be excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate for the remainder of today and all day tomorrow.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let me say for the benefit of Members of the Senate that it is our intention to continue in session until at least 9 o'clock on the farm program bill, which is the unfinished business. The Senator from Vermont has been very patient while privileged matters have been considered. The afternoon has been taken away from him, but I hope that Senators will give this bill their attention so that it may be expedited.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks in support of the farm-program bill which is now before the Senate.

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has been at work for months on this measure. We have discussed the need for and content of a long-range program with the Secretary of Agriculture, we have held public hearings not only here in Washington but across the country, we have written and rewritten the several sections which we thought should go into a long-range bill, and we have finally agreed upon S. 2318 and respectfully present it to the Senate for consideration.

This is much more than simply another bill. It is a summary of all our experience and study in the farm program field over the last decade. Good legislation grows. This is that kind of legislation. It is the first general agricultural bill which has been before the Senate since we enacted the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. It is specifically related to that and other farm legislation now in effect with a view of rounding out, as far as possible at this time, a coordinated, well-balanced agricultural program

The bill in its present form is somewhat different from the bill which was introduced by members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on March 15, 1948. In the bill originally introduced there was a provision which would make it optional with farmers to accept the old parity formula or the new parity formula which is now based on the 10-year moving average. After much discussion the committee concluded to stick to one formula rather than two. I understand that an amendment will be submitted to the Senate in an effort to restore the option to growers to take either the present parity formula or the new one provided for in the pending bill. If and when such an amendment is presented, I expect to support it, because it was at my instance that the original bill included that language.

The bill streamlines and continues what we are now doing in the agricultural field. As I have already said, its roots go a long way back. Some of the outstanding legislative items which have concontributed to our agricultural program are worth recalling.

It started with the Agricultural Adjustment and Farm Credit Acts of 1933. It was under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 that farmers first found an opportunity to work together in order to stabilize their prices and bring supplies in line with demand. Then the Congress enacted the Soil Erosion Act of 1935, the act under which the Soil Conservation Service presently operates. There were other acts amending or supplementing these basic acts-for example, the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934. the Kerr Tobacco Act of 1934, the Jones-Costigan Sugar Act of 1934, and the De-Rouen Rice Act of 1935.

Then the processing-tax benefit-payment provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 were invalidated by the Supreme Court in January 1936. Shortly thereafter the Congress passed the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, which extended the original Soil Erosion Act by the addition of sections 7 to 17, authorizing an agricultural conservation program and shifting emphasis in the agricultural adjustment field from temporary acreage adjustment to soil conservation and improved farm-management practices.

We then started to work trying to write a new Agricultural Adjustment Act. This resulted in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 which continued and amended the conservation legislation, authorized the establishment of acreage allotments and marketting quotas on cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and (later) peanuts, authorizing the making of loans by Commodity Credit Corporation on agricultural commodities, and provided for the establishment of four regional research laboratories for the purpose of finding new uses and markets for agricultural products and byproducts.

Let me say at this point, Mr. President, that I participated in the drafting as well as the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. I was fortunate at that time in being appointed a member of a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That committee made a tour of the country, and the facts gathered by the committee formed the basis of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

This act, the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, was the last piece of really broad-scale agricultural legislation which the Congress has considered and enacted. Meanwhile, there have also been other acts relating or adding to the agricultural program—the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act of 1937, the several acts authorizing further research or increased extension activities, including our most recent act for strengthening work in the research field and giving increased emphasis to marketing work, the Research and Marketing Act of 1946.

Much of the legislation I have been talking about centered around our great staple or basic commodities, but the Congress has not forgotten or overlooked the nonbasic or more perishable commodities. Section 32 of Public Law 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, appropriated funds for each fiscal year equal to 30 percent of the customs receipts for agricultural purposes; and, following the Supreme Court decision in January 1936, the Congress reenacted and revised all of the earlier marketing-agreement legislation in the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937.

It was under those several acts that our agricultural program was being operated when we found ourselves faced with World War II. To further strengthen the agricultural program and to meet our wartime needs, the Congress passed, and the President approved on July 1, 1941, the so-called Steagall amendment. It was under that amendment and related legislation that the Secretary of Agriculture was directed to support prices for the producers of the basic and specified nonbasic agricultural commodities at various rates, finally at 90 percent of their parity or comparable prices for all of the basic and Steagall commodities except cotton, for which the final rate was 921/2 percent of parity. Those supports were to run for 2 years following the actual end of hostilities, and all of us are aware that the termination date of this legislation has now been definitely fixed as December 31, 1948.

Senate bill 2318 streamlines and continues what we are now doing, but it is not in itself a complete farm program. Many of the things we desire in a farm program are provided for by legislation already in effect, and some of them are provided by separate proposed legislation which the Congress must finally pass before adjournment, especially the bill providing a Federal charter for the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. President, at this point I wish to say that I understand that my distinguished colleague the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] will submit an amendment providing for continuing the Commodity Credit Corporation for at least another year.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me say that is correct. It seems to me that the safe thing to do is to add to this bill an amendment continuing the Commodity Credit Corporation for another year, because although the Commodity Credit Corporation charter bill may be acted on by the House of Representatives and may go to conference, we simply cannot afford to take the risk of having the Commodity Credit Corporation go out of business on July 1.

Mr. ELLENDER. I have understood that the bill rewriting the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation, which the Senate passed, is now pigeonholed in the House Banking and Currency Committee. Is that correct?

Mr. AIKEN. I would not say it is pigeonholed. They are talking of acting

Mr. ELLENDER. At any rate, it is still there.

Mr. AIKEN. But they are talking of amending it to such an extent that I fear it would be difficult for the House and the Senate to get together regarding it during the time remaining in this

Mr. ELLENDER. Then I repeat that in order to make our program complete, as it has been in the past, it will be necessary that we revitalize, as it were, the Commodity Credit Corporation, if we are to obtain the support-price conditions which are outlined in the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Actually, Mr. President, Senate bill 2318 has two general objectives. The first is that it provides for the coordination of agricultural programs, especially conservation activities. at the national, the State, and the county levels. Second, the bill provides for agricultural commodities a flexible pricesupport program which takes into account changes in supplies and is specifically designed to obtain fair prices for farm products and assure abundant production. We believe that Senate bill 2318 not only will benefit farmers, but also will aid in stabilizing our national economy at a satisfactory high level.

Title I of the bill is concerned primarily with the coordination and administration of agricultural programs, and especially with the general reorganization and administration of the agricultural conservation program and the Soil Conservation Service.

To begin with, section 101 provides for combining into a single "Bureau of Agricultural Conservation and Improvement" the functions presently assigned to the Soil Conservation Service and the Agricultural Conservation Programs Branch, Production and Marketing Administration, as well as other functions deemed by the Secretary to be principally related to soil conservation and improvement. This is in line with recommendations of the Secretary of Agricul-

The assignment of the new agency would also include those aspects of the program of the Department which require direct dealing with farmers, except for, first, educational, informational, demonstrational features, which would be exercised through the Extension Service; second, research and investigational features, which would be carried out through the State agricultural experiment stations; and third, such other functions as would be performed in the States and counties through the State agricultural councils, county and community agricultural program committees, and county agricultural program executive committees. This section specifies that the furnishing of technical service, machinery, and equipment to soil conservation districts and others would be performed directly by the Bureau of Agricultural Conservation and Improvement. Regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service are required to be abolished.

In addition to consolidating the Agricultural Conservation Program and the Soil Conservation Service into a single new agency, the chief changes in the existing law or methods of operation required by section 101 are first, the shifting to the Extension Service of educational, informational, and demonstrational work relating to conservation; second, the shifting of the research and investigational work relating to conservation to the State experiment stations; and third, the abolishing of the regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service. Technical assistance, machinery, and equipment to soil and other conservation districts would be supplied directly by the new agency, and the agricultural conservation program, as well as other activities, would be administered or given general direction through the community, county, and State agricultural committees or councils.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I gladly yield.

Mr. THYE. In the consolidation and unification of the educational, informational, and demonstration work under the Extension Service, and the shifting to the State experiment stations of the research and the investigational work relating to conservation, does the Senator believe that such a program coordinates and brings together desirable units, and makes use to the best advantage of all the services available in the

Mr. ELLENDER. That is my belief. Mr. THYE. I honestly believe that we shall have a more effective program as a result of the consolidation which will go forward under this program. In the same way that we recognize that new machines constitute improvements in the mechanical field, so in this case we recognize that improvements can be made in an administrative field.

Mr. ELLENDER. There can be no question about that.

Mr. THYE. I am delighted to hear the Senator agree as to that; I am very happy to hear the Senator make that statement.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, section 102 authorizes the use of funds appropriated for conservation work for educational functions which the Secretary determines should be carried out by the State extension services. The section also authorizes the use of such funds or of funds appropriated specifically for educational or demonstrational functions covered by section 101 (a) to be paid to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii in accordance with the terms of the Smith-Lever Act of May 8. 1914, except that there is no requirement for matching such funds. It is expressly provided that these sums shall be in addition to and not in substitution for other extension moneys.

Section 103 provides for the creation of a new division in the Office of Experiment Stations to be known as the "Division of Soil Conservation and Improve-ment." That is to carry out the plan the Senator has just discussed. Section 104 authorizes the Secretary to allot funds, other than grants-in-aid funds, which are available for functions to be performed under section 101 (b) to the agricultural experiment stations in the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. That is, sections 103 and 104 provide the mechanics by which conservation research and investigations now carried on by the Federal conservation agencies shall be decentralized to the States and administered.

Section 105 provides for the election by the farm operators within each local administrative area of a community agricultural program committee having three members, and certain alternates. community committee is to perform within its area functions assigned to it by the Secretary pursuant to section 101 (c), or otherwise, and the local areas now used under the Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act are to serve as the local areas under this section: but the county agricultural program committee may from time to time designate different areas. This section redefines the method of electing community committees and broadens their responsibilities.

Section 106 provides for the creation of a county agricultural program committee which consists of members of the several community agricultural program committees in the county, the agricultural extension agent for the county, and one representative designated by each of the agencies concerned with conservation or other agricultural interests as the State agricultural council may specify, except that such representatives must be at least one less than the total number of community committees. That, of course, makes the committee almost completely controlled by the farmers themselves. Again, this committee is to perform such functions as the Secretary may assign pursuant to section 101 (c), or otherwise. This section creates a county agricultural program committee for which there is no counterpart under present legislation.

Section 107 provides for the election of a county agricultural program executive committee of not less than three nor more than five members as determined by the State agricultural council, and first and second alternate members. The committee is elected by the county agricultural program committee from among its members and through personnel employed by it performs such functions as the Secretary assigns pursuant to section 101 (c). In effect, this section provides for changes in the method of the election of the county committee which now handles the agricultural conservation program.

Section 108 provides for a State agricultural council to consist of 3 ex officio members and 4 elected members plus 1 additional elected member for each full 20 counties in the State or fractional remaining number of 11 or more, except that in any event the number of additional members shall not be less than 2. The commissioner, secretary, or director, as the case may be, of agriculture, the director of the agricultural experiment station, and the Director of the Agricultural Extension Service, or their respective designees, shall be the ex officio members. The election of the regular members is by the chairmen of the county agricultural program executive committees but not more than half of the elected members are to be chosen from among their number.

This section also provides that the State agricultural council shall develop plans to effectuate the purposes of section 7-the section providing for the agricultural conservation or national payments program-of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act in each State, shall perform functions assigned to it by the Secretary pursuant to section 101 (c) or otherwise, shall supervise and direct the work of the county committees, and shall with the approval of the Secretary make arrangements with the Agricultural Extension Service for the conduct of educational and demonstrational programs. Provision is made for the council to employ a State administrator and other necessary personnel. This section provides for electing members of the State council whereas presently such members are appointed. They are appointed, as all Senators know, by the Secretary of Agriculture. I understand the distinguished Senator from Vermont proposes further to amend the pending bill so as to provide that the Secretary shall have the opportunity of selecting the State councils from panels elected by the farmers.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Louisiana is referring to a matter which was discussed in the Agricultural Committee meeting yesterday morning, as a result of which an amendment will be offered providing that the Secretary of Agriculture, in order to maintain continuity from the Secretary right down through the grass roots, shall name a State council, but that he shall name it from a list submitted by the farmers of the State through their county agricultural chairman.

Mr. ELLENDER. It is really indirectly done by the farmers themselves, is it not?

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. The farmers elect the county committees.

Mr. AIKEN. That is true. The Secretary may not appoint anyone not nominated and approved by the chairmen of the county committees, who are chosen by the farmers themselves. They submit three names for each one the Secretary has to choose. In this way we feel we are requiring perfect cooperation all the way from the Secretary's office down through to the community committee.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand that plan was submitted by a representative of the Secretary of Agriculture, and I also understand it meets with the approval of the Secretary.

Mr. AIKEN. The Department of Agriculture itself objected to any change in the present method of naming the State committee, but a few days ago they came to the conclusion they were willing to have the farmers of the State submit a list of nominees, from which list the Secretary is required to choose the committee. In that way it is practically farmer-controlled, because the Secretary cannot name anyone not approved and nominated by the farmers of the State.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator will agree, will he not, that that is really a compromise between the views of the Secretary of Agriculture and the views of the committee?

Mr. AIKEN. That is a compromise, but it seems to me to be a very healthy compromise.

Mr. ELLENDER. I agree.

Mr. AIKEN. The Department was fearful that if the State committees were not at all tied to the Secretary's office, a wide variety of programs might be set up—possibly, if we wanted to go to the extreme, 48 different programs in the 48 different States—which would probably result in wastefulness, at least in some States.

It seems to me to be a very workable and sensible compromise, because the farmers still name their committeemen, and their State councilmen. The farmers nominate them, and then the Secretary goes through the process of appointing them.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on this point?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; I yield gladly. Mr. LUCAS. Is the Senator still discussing section 108?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Has that been changed in any respect?

Mr. ELLENDER. Not as yet.

Mr. AIKEN. There was a meeting of the committee, at which about eight or nine members were present yesterday morning, and it was discussed at that time. We decided upon offering several amendments. This particular amendment, which is the longest, has not yet been printed and brought to our desks, but that is what it provides, that the Secretary shall appoint the members of the State council from a panel submitted by the chairmen of the county committees of each State.

Mr. LUCAS. How many would there be in the panel?

Mr. AIKEN. There would be three farmers in the panel for each one the Secretary appoints. He would have to appoint one out of three selected by the farmers and certified to him.

Mr. LUCAS. That at least is a compromise of section 108 as written in the bill. I have always been concerned about that section, because of what the Senator from Vermont has pointed out. I think I have made my position concerning it known from time to time. I undertake to say the whole authority for the conservation program cannot be lodged in 48 different State councils or 48 different groups, if it is desired to continue to have the kind of national and regional soil-conservation program which seems to be so vital and so necessary to the welfare of all the people.

Mr. EILENDER. We are all familiar with the views of the distinguished Senator from Illinois, and of course his views are in strict accord with those of the Secretary of Agriculture. As the Senator from Vermont will recall, several meetings were held in his office. Representatives of the Secretary's office visited with us and discussed the problem. The suggestion which is incorporated in the amendment which the distinguished Senator from Vermont expects to offer to this bill was really made by a representative of the Secretary's office.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Thye] was a member of the committee. I know there was a representative of the Department of Agriculture present, and we got together on this compromise. I can say it is wholly acceptable to and has been declared workable by the Department of Agriculture. I know that it is acceptable to some farm organizations, although not all have been consulted as yet.

Mr. LUCAS. It would not make any difference to me whether a farm organization agreed or disagreed. I would never agree, as one individual Senator, to permit the soil-conservation program to be divided up into 48 areas and lodge the sole responsibility for its development and administration in the respective States. The responsibility for the development and the broadening of the soilconservation program rests upon every individual in America, and collectively the citizens of America can discharge that obligation only through the Federal Government. Soil conservation is a national policy. We cannot break it down into States. In my opinion, the formulation and control of the policy must remain with the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to another series of amendments which will be offered. The Secretary of Agriculture approves this or that suggestion after consultation with the State council. At the suggestion of the Department we are offering amendments which will authorize him to approve programs and other things upon recommendation of the State council. Secretary himself said he thought that would be more workable and, in his opinion, along with the other amendment which has just been discussed, would bring the actual carrying out of the operations closer to the people of the States. There seems to be no possibility of a diffusion of effort for the establishment of many diverse programs in the various States.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator recall to what section that amendment would apply? I am referring to the last amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. On page 48, lines 10 and 11, there is an amendment in connection with incentive payments to farmers in each State for soil-conservation practices. The bill provides that they shall be made only for practices approved by the Secretary of Agriculture after consultation with the State agricultural council.

At the suggestion of the Department, we are proposing that it shall read "only for practices approved by the Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture upon the recommendation of the State agricultural council."

The Secretary thought that would be more workable.

There is a series of similar amendments to different parts of the bill which will have the same effect.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say, if I may, in the Senator's time, that throughout the hearings my contention has been that we cannot divide the responsibility. We must lodge responsibility somewhere, and that somewhere, in my judgment, is the Secretary of Agriculture. The moment we give, even by inference, any reason for a State group to obtain authority, we are courting a situation whereby the soil-conservation program will be seriously impaired, because we shall have two agencies trying to make a decision on the same question. If this amendment shall accomplish what the able Senator from Vermont intends, I am very happy that there is an agreement with the Agricultural Department

Mr. ELLENDER. I have no doubt that it will accomplish what the Senator is now contending for.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. The Senator from Illinois raised the question of whether there could be divided authority between the Secretary of Agriculture and the State council. As the bill is now written, I do not believe there could be any question as to whether the authority was di-The State council would make a recommendation to the Secretary as to the type of program known to be best suited to the areas of the State, and the Secretary would accept it, execute it, and carry it out. So, rather than having divided authority, we are aiding the Secretary by getting a recommendation from the State council as to type of program.

When we met with the Secretary and the Secretary's assistants, the very fear that the Senator from Illinois recognized and stated was discussed. The reason for the amendment is to clarify the question so that there shall not be any divided authority or responsibility.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I think it is well to bring out these points in the debate to show the legislative intent of the language which is being used in the bill, so that if there be any doubt about it, the Secretary of Agriculture will know how the legislative body feels regarding it.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. From my experience in serving on boards of this character, I think this amendment will bring about better coordination than did the old program. The States will have an opportunity to offer a program, and the Secretary can modify it if he so desires. In the past there were frequently long arguments. So here is a chance for the counties and States to initiate their own program and have it rejected or accepted by the Secretary.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the duties and functions of the committee or council are spelled out in more detail than is now the case and additional duties are added, such as the development of State plans under section 7 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

Section 109 authorizes and directs the Secretary to make payments from available funds to the council and committees set up under the preceding section to cover their estimated administrative costs. It is further provided that these costs may be deducted pro rata from payments or grants-in-aid to farmers as is now being done in administering the current agricultural conservation program. Section 109 further provides that no person shall be a member of more than one council or executive committee established under the act.

Title II of Senate bill 2318 consists of a series of amendments to the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act in order to further reinforce or supplement the various changes called for under title I.

Section 201 amends section 7 (d) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act to provide for approval of State plans by the State councils prior to approval by the Secretary. Provision is also made for the disbursement of funds available for carrying out State plans under the direction of the State councils. These changes give the State councils a voice in the approval of State plans and make the new State councils and local committees proper agencies to administer such plans.

Section 202 extends for two additional years the authority for a national conservation program under sections 7 through 17 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In line 7 the bill provides:

No such plan submitted by a State of the United States shall be approved by the Secretary, except after consultation with the State agricultural council created pursuant to the Agricultural Act of 1948.

Do the amendments take care of the situation covered in section 201?

Mr. AIKEN. The amendment proposes that the Secretary shall accept the plan upon the recommendation of the State council. It was at the Department's own suggestion that that change was recommended.

Mr. ELLENDER. But the final arbiter will be the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct; the Secretary must approve all these programs. I think in most States that is being done today. The committees which are established formulate the State programs, and I think the Secretary, for the most part, approves them.

Mr. ELLENDER. That has been the case in the past. The only difference is that under the old plan the Secretary of Agriculture appointed the State committees directly, and under this proposal they are to be appointed in the manner we discussed a few moments ago.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. My only reason for continuing to stress the point I raised under section 108, as I recall, was to continue to indicate that I think the final authority for these matters must rest in the Secretary of Agriculture, and in the bill it is provided as I just read. If that language is left in the bill, I can readily see how there could easily come about some turmoil and some differences of opinion as to how much consultation, for instance, the Secretary of Agriculture had with the State agricultural council.

What I hope to see accomplished, if we ever pass a long-range bill of this kind, is the prevention of as much friction and as much disturbance between the Secretary of Agriculture and the various State agencies as possible, in order that we may ultimately have the kind of smoothly running pregram which is necessary.

Mr. AIKEN. I believe that is the reason why the Department recommended changing the words to "upon recommendation of" instead of "after consultations

Mr. LUCAS. I understand the differ-

Mr. AIKEN. The Department said it would make for much smoother oper-

Mr. LUCAS. I think it is an exceedingly wise substitute for the language I have just read.

Mr. AIKEN. That language we propose to ask to have substituted in about half a dozen places throughout the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. Under the language of the bill, with the amendments which will be suggested by the distinguished Senator from Vermont, there is no question, in my mind, that the Secretary will be the final arbiter, and that the plans will originate at the grass roots, as it were—at the community level, the county level, the State level, and on to Washington.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Louisiana is entirely correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. There is no question about that, in my judgment,

I now resume my statement about the bill. This authority for a national program is necessary since less than half of the States have enacted legislation providing for State operation of the agricultural conservation program under section 7 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

Section 203 amends section 8 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act to eliminate the provision for community, county, and State committees and to substitute in lieu thereof the authorization and direction to the Secretary to utilize the new State council and local committees provided for in the bill.

Section 204 amends the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act by striking out the provisions of section 8 (e) relating to the provision of practice payments and substituting a new section which subdivision (1) requires approval of conservation practices by the Secretary after consultation with State councils. I understand that language will be changed.

Mr. AIKEN. That will read "upon recommendation of the Secretary.'

Mr. ELLENDER. Exactly. Subdivision (2) limits payment to those practices which the Secretary after consultation with State councils determines have long-term conservation and improvement value: and subdivision (3) provides for a division of payments among landlords, tenants, and sharecroppers based on the relative value of their contribution to, and benefits from, the practices performed on the farm. This section also eliminates the small payment increases provided for under the current law and further provides for a limit on the amount of payments for conservation practices in the amount of $1,000.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator from Louisiana object to interruptions?

Mr. ELLENDER. Not at all.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask a question or two in regard to section 18, and I think it is well that we do this for the RECORD as we go along.

Mr. ELLENDER. What page?

Mr. LUCAS. It is section 204. It says "section 18" in my draft.

Mr. THYE. It refers to section 18 on line 2, page 69.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct. I refer to paragraph (c), which reads:

Payments or grants of aid to farmers in any State, under a State plan or by the Secretary, for soil-building or soil-conserving practices shall be * * * divided among the landlords, tenants, and sharecroppers of any farm, with respect to which such payments are made, on the basis of relative value of their contributions to, and benefits received from, such practices.

Did the committee at any time have any testimony before regarding the administrative difficulty such a standard might create for the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. AIKEN. If the Senator from Louisiana will yield, I will say that upon the recommendation of the Department those words "and benefits received from" should be deleted, because the Department felt that there would be greater harmony in the operations of the act if those four words were eliminated.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is in the series of amendments which the Senator will

Mr. AIKEN. I mean that they might not be in harmony with the preceding statement. It is difficult to tell what the henefits are

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, section 205 amends section 11 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act relating to the transfer of funds to State and Federal agencies and to State and county committees to conform to the new State and county organization set up under S. 2318.

As I indicated earlier, the second major objective of S. 2318 is to provide for a flexible price-support program for agricultural commodities. Title III, which amends the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, provides for this flexible program. Again I want to say that these amendments or provisions are not new or untried. Rather, they are based directly upon the legislation and administrative procedures which have been gradually developed and tried out since

We all know the job which farmers did during the last war. Food production was increased by a third at a time when the fate of the world literally hungupon American food supplies. prices authorized under the Steagall amendment and related legislation were the most important devices used in encouraging farmers to meet our wartime goals. We need to continue the authority to use support prices to maintain or increase production of commodities under emergency conditions. S. 2318 does that.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield, or would he rather complete his statement before he vields?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; I gladly yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the naval-stores industry because he has much of that industry in his own State. I should like to know from the able Senator what provision for price support of that important industry is provided under the terms of the pending measure.

Mr. ELLENDER. I may say to the Senator from Florida that the products of naval stores are described under the old act as being agricultural products. They would be treated just the same as any other product of agriculture. Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to say that I have received several telegrams today from people engaged in that industry in my State who are concerned about those provisions of the bill which they feel would give them less substantial protection than they are given under the present law. I have been working on other legislation and am not familiar with the provisions of the bill which relate to the naval-stores industry. If the Senator would describe in brief the provisions of the bill which relate to that industry I would appreciate it.

Mr. ELLENDER. There is no specific language in the bill which relates to this industry, no more than there is for nonbasic commodities. The only crops mentioned are the original five basic crops contained in the act of 1938, plus peanuts which were added later. All the other commodities are treated in the nature of nonbasic commodities.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. The definition of "naval stores" which, I suppose are turpentine and resin, was made by the Secretary; that is those products were defined as agricultural products, and under this bill they would be eligible for support up to 90 percent of parity the same as other nonbasic commodities.

Mr. ELLENDER. That was the point was discussing when the Senator from Florida asked me to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. Mr. CONNALLY. I understand that the basic commodities are named in the bill, and then there are a great many others which are called nonbasic com-

The nonbasic commodities modities. are subject to the provisions of the bill as well as the basic commodities, but not in the same fashion.
Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator is cor-

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. Let us consider wool. Is wool a basic commodity under the bill?

Mr. AIKEN. No, wool is not a basic commodity, because a basic commodity is one which is easily storable, and which is usually produced in exportable quantities. But the bill does provide mandatory support for wool from 60 to 90 percent of parity. The Secretary is directed to support the price of wool so as to encourage production of 360,000,000 pounds annually. In order to encourage such production he would have to support wool at 90 percent of parity, which would mean about a 46 cents a pound support level at the present time.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is treated separately, in a provision of the bill which deals with wool exclusively, and it provides for parity loans and so forth of not more than 90 and not less than 60 percent of parity

Mr. CONNALLY. My State produces a great deal of mohair, which is a form of wool, as I view it.

Mr. ELLENDER. If it is wool it is covered.

Mr. CONNALLY. We think it is wool. I wanted to ask the Senator if mohair would be eligible for the benefits of this proposed legislation?

Mr. AIKEN. It is my opinion that mohair would be eligible for support as a nonbasic commodity up to 90 percent of parity, in the discretion of the Secre-

Mr. CONNALLY. So that if the Secretary so ruled it would be eligible up to 90 percent of parity?

Mr. AIKEN. If it were proven that it was wool it would have the same support, of course.

Mr. ELLENDER. I think wool means the wool from sheep. I do not know that it means wool from any other animal. I do not want to mislead the Senator, but I doubt if it would mean wool from any other animal.

Mr. CONNALLY. Some people refer to what is on one's head as being wool. I do not know that that is an accurate description; but, at any rate, it would be a matter for consideration by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. AIKEN. Certainly mohair is eligible for support up to 90 percent of parity in the discretion of the Secretary, after he considers the several criteria, one of which is whether he has money enough to do it, of course.

Mr. CONNALLY. So it is the Senator's belief that it is covered?

Mr. AIKEN. Absolutely; that is my helief

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I might add by way of information for the Senator from Texas that as I understand, from the facts developed before the committee, wool, so far as its production is concerned, is at a low peak, so to speak, compared with former years. The bill definitely provides for a goal of 360,000,000 pounds.

Mr. AIKEN. Yes, 369,000,000 pounds the goal. We are producing now is the goal. only about 300,000,000 pounds.

Mr. LUCAS. So as long as we produce only that amount the parity price is going to stay close to 90 percent, due to the failure to reach the goal we have attempted to achieve.

Mr. AIKEN. Let me add that if this formula does not secure the desired amount of wool necessary for national defense, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to break through the 90 percent limitation and place the support at such a level as will secure any product in quantity essential for national needs.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. The House bill as written does not cover a raise in support level for the product which has just been mentioned even should an emergency exist and stepped up production was necessary to the national interest.

As I understand the Mr. AIKEN. House bill contains no provision whereby the 90 percent ceiling could be broken to encourage an increase in production of any commodity in the event of a national emergency. The Senate bill does carry that provision.

Mr. YOUNG. That is something which has been very important many times in the past. For instance 2 years ago, when flaxseed was very scarce in the United States, and selling for six to seven dollars a bushel in Argentina, our only other chief source of supply, and it was necessary to increase production, the Secretary of Agriculture increased the support level to 165 percent of parity, which brought about the production necessary in the United States and saved the American public a great deal of money. Supporting flax prices at $6 a bushel in this instance benefited both the user and

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator will agree also that the Steagall amendment was passed by Congress for that very purpose; to increase production in nonbasic commodities.

Mr. YOUNG. What I was trying to bring out is that unless this long-range farm bill is passed with such a provision in it, there will be nothing that can be done about it when the bill goes to conference, because the subject is not covered by the House bill.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Do I correctly understand that naval stores constitute a nonbasic crop under the bill, but are not one of the nonbasic crops that are specially covered by a special section as well?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. Mr. HOLLAND. And therefore would come under the provision which fixes the ceiling of price support at 90 percent, but which has no figure below that at which price support begins? Is that cor-

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Florida is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. One further question: Am I also correct in my understanding that the provisions with reference to the computation of parity for naval stores are those which apply to the nonbasic food crops?

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand, in the bill there is a special formula for the six basic commodities; but with respect to the nonbasic commodities there is a formula provided in the bill which is not rigid, but which is more or less spelled out, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to make a determination. We are talking now about the pending bill.

Mr. HOLLAND. My understanding is that under the current law the basic period on which the parity price is figured for naval stores is the period from 1910 to 1914.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Likewise, the 90 percent, which is the maximum permitted under the law, is now applicable to naval stores?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct. Mr. HOLLAND. Does the Senator have any figures showing how the naval stores parity price would be affected by the formula prescribed by this bill for nonbasic commodities, as compared with the way they are affected under the present law?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Vermont has a table in his hand. I shall be glad to yield so that he may give the Senator the exact figures.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I have a table furnished by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which shows that under the modernized parity formula the parity price of gum rosin, all grades, would be $5.83 a hundred, as compared with $6 under the old parity formula. However, as I understand, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] proposes to offer an amendment which would include the cost of hired labor in computing the parity formula. If the cost of labor is included, then the parity price of gum rosin under the new formula would be $6.16 a hundred, or 16 cents a hundred more than it is under the present parity formula. There is very little change.

As to gum turpentine, there is a reduction from $1.14 a gallon under the old formula, or the one we are using at present, to 78.8 cents a gallon under the new formula, without wages, or 83.3 cents with wages. But there is a provision in the bill which prevents a sudden drop in the parity price. It cannot drop more than 5 percent a year. Therefore, the drop from $1.14 would be between 5 and 6 cents a gallon under the new parity formula.

Mr. HOLLAND. For the first year. Mr. AIKEN. For the first year.

Mr. HOLLAND. And thereafter each year until the new parity figure was entirely applicable.

Mr. AIKEN. Assuming that the drop were to continue. However, there is no assurance that it would continue. back in 1938, 1939, and 1940, turpentine was selling at a low price in comparison with other agricultural commodities, and we were to substitute the high price of the past 3 years, there is a possibility that the new parity formula would come back up and meet the old.

In fact, we believe that in 2 or 3 years' time most commodities would level off, so that there would be scarcely any difference between computing parity by the method we use today and by the method which is proposed in the bill.

The average parity price of all farm commodities is the same, whether figured by the old formula or the proposed new one. There would be some sharp drops. For example, avocados, which were hardly known in the period from 1910 to 1914, today have a parity value of something like $800 a ton. They have dropped to $200 a ton, because they have come out of the luxury class. I think there are a few other commodities, perhaps, grown in the State of Florida which have dropped, too. There is no use in trying to say that some would not drop. Others would rise. Here we have the case of rosin rising and turpentine dropping somewhat. Probably the Senator from Florida knows why. I do not know. We do not get anything but maple sirup out of our trees in Vermont. But that is the way the computation is made by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to make one observation, in view of the colloquy between the Senator from Florida and other Senators. If Senators take the position that they require a bill which will give to every commodity, basic and nonbasic, the same kind of parity price which it is receiving at the present time, we shall never get a bill through the Senate, in my judgment. I come from a Midwest section, where we raise corn, wheat, and soybeans. Corn and wheat are taking a terrific lacing in this program at the present time-much more than what the Senator from Florida discusses

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Would the Senator mind if I interrupted to point out that the drop can be only on the basis of 5 percent for a given year? We recognize that we must do that, because there is a drop, so far as the parity formula is concerned, on certain commodities. The reason for that is the extreme low prices in the years 1938 and 1939, which, figured into the flexible 10-year period, cause a drop. Then, as we drop off the year 1939 and pick up the year 1949 in the 10-year period, we immediately commence to restore the balance, and get back closer to the present parity formula. That is the reason for the protection of the 5-percent provision.

Mr. AIKEN. Precisely.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let me point out to the Senator from Illinois, since he has mentioned corn, that under the new formula the price of corn would be $1.42 a bushel. Under the old it would be $1.60. So there is a loss of 18 cents a bushel.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President— Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from North Dakota wants to discuss wheat.

Mr. YOUNG. The Senator from North Dakota would like to have a supported price of $5 for wheat. No doubt the Senator from Illinois would like to have a support price of $3 or $4 for corn. But that is not possible. If we go back to prewar years, before the Steagall amendments, the support levels were away down. I believe that the farm organizations are taking a constructive view. They want, as every farmer wants, a long-range program, rather than 1 year of high support followed by a great deal of trouble, and then no support at all. Some time we shall have to get back to peacetime supports at a fair level and this bill does just that. I believe every farmer would rather have long-range assurance of at least $1.82 for wheat than $2.21 for 1 year and no assurance for the

Mr. ELLENDER. As I pointed out a while ago, the Steagall amendments were adopted by the Congress to increase production. If this bill is not enacted, we shall go back to the old law, which provides a formula of 52 to 75 percent.

Mr. THYE. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I pointed out a while ago, the parity formula in this bill is from 60 to 90 percent.

The Senator from North Dakota mentioned wheat. Under the new formula the price of wheat will be $1.82. Under the old it would be $2.21, or a loss of 29 cents a bushel.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. Does not the Senator think that under the 5-percent provision, it will be possible for the price gradually to decline and taper down?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; over a period of 5 or 6 years it would be possible to make that difference.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I believe that all the farmers much prefer to have a permanent support level which will give them some assurance of security, even at a lower level, rather than to have a high level for awhile, and then have nothing at all 2 or 3 years from now.

Mr. ELLENDER. I think there is no question about that.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ELLENDER. I am glad to yield. Mr. LUCAS. I wish to emphasize the point I made a moment ago, in view of the questions and answers which have occurred on this particular phase of the

Of course some of the producers of basic commodities and some of the producers of nonbasic commodities will have to make a sacrifice. Others will gain by the new arrangement. But we are trying to reach a modernized formula which will enable the farmers to go along year after year without any serious changein other words, a situation much different from that which would exist under an obsolete formula. Under the present proposal, we shall have an up-to-date formula.

A moment ago, the Senator said that in the event the cost of hired labor was included in the parity formula, the particular product about which he was inquiring would have a better price. Of course, that is what I am afraid we shall have to meet before we finish this bill: First one and then another will try to add to this program some amendment by which a particular commodity in his section of the country will receive the benefit. Sooner or later there may be cheap labor. If that does occur, then should cheap labor be figured into the parity formula, the very persons who wanted to have labor included in the parity formula will say, "Labor is cheap now, so let us take it out of the parity formula."

That is the primary reason labor was not included in the parity formula in the beginning—it was cheap. If it had been included then, there would not have been the parity prices which have existed during all these years; parity prices would have been much lower.

So, as one Senator on this floor, I shall do all I can to defeat any amendment to this parity formula; and I hope every member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will stand by the formula. Let us go through with this parity formula as it is, and not attempt to fool around by adding additional factors at this late date, because when we do that we shall be sure to get into unsurmountable trouble.

There is only one reason anyone would wish to add labor to this formula at the present time, and that is to increase the parity price. Under the method as now proposed, we realize that in our section of the country corn and wheat will be taking a considerable loss, but the farmers there are willing to have that done. We want to operate on a permanent basis, as the Senator from North Dakota so well described a moment ago. Obviously these high prices cannot continue forever. We would like to get back to a normal condition under which it will be possible to go along on a basis of sustained abundance and protection to the American farmer, so that he will know. when he puts in a crop, that he will get a decent price for it.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Let me say that the senior Senator from Illinois is entirely correct when he speaks about the question of figuring the labor cost into the parity formula. At the present time, in the inflationary era, the high cost of fabor would work to advantage in raising the parity price; but it would work to a great disadvantage in a period of depression, because then it would have a tendency to pull prices down even lower. Certainly, if there is ever a time when parity support of prices is needed, it is in a time of deflation, rather than in a period of inflation, such as we are in now.

I should like to comment in connection with the thought the able Senator from Illinois expressed in regard to the question of a farm program. Certainly no one who is engaged in agriculture would wish to subject the consumer to unreasonable prices because of the price-support program. All that the farmers want is a program giving soundness to the prices of the commodities they raise in relation to the prices of articles produced by other workers or by business. In other words, the farmers simply want an equal chance with the other groups in our economy in order that they may be able to produce the food the consumers must have at all times and in all years.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. The Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Minnesota are absolutely correct about the question of the inclusion of the cost of labor in the formula. I recall that approximately 2 years ago an amendment to include the cost of labor in the parity formula was offered on the floor of the Senate. At that time I voted for it. Naturally, it would have boosted the parity-price levels existing at that time. But I voted for it, against the advice of the farm organizations, which had made a very intensive study of the farm program.

I admit now that I made a mistake in doing that, and it would be a mistake now to raise the formula by means of such a provision, for we would only hurt the farmers later, when the cost of labor declines

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Louisiana will yield to me at this point, I should like to say that in view of all the changes we are making in this bill at the present time, the Department of Agriculture will have enough to do to administer this program efficiently and effectively in the next few years to come. I undertake to say that the inclusion of hired labor in the formula would make the formula very difficult to administer. If we add another factor to the parity formula, the administration at the other end of the Avenue will find its troubles vastly increased.

I do not wish to disturb the parity formula which has worked so well all these years. The machinery for administering it is now set up, and those who are charged with its administration know exactly what to do; they know all the factors that are involved in it; and the entire operation under the present arrangement is a going and successful concern.

But the moment we add the cost of labor to the parity formula, we upset the apple cart in a way that will make it most difficult for the program to be administered.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me at this point, apropos of the statement that the wheat grower is willing to accept a drop in the parity price in order to get on a stable basis, I should like to read a telegram which I received today from Spokane, Wash. The telegram, which is addressed to me, reads as follows:

Washington-Idaho Wheat Growers League extremely interested in the early consideration and passage of Senate bill 2318, and urge your support to obtain final adoption of the measure.

WALTER R. JOHNSON, President, Washington-Idaho Wheat Growers League.

In other words, Mr. President, they know that the parity price for wheat will drop at least for the present. Yet, although they are producers of that one commodity, they are willing to accept a lower support level in order to have a permanent and sound program.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to commend the vision of the farmers who are looking to the effects of this program over a long period of years, and are not looking just to the support they can receive next year on a particular product.

When we consider the support a particular product will receive for only 1 year, we are not viewing the agricultural situation with sufficient vision. The farmers are willing to accept a parity price for wheat and corn and other commodities under this formula that will cause them some losses, but they are looking at this matter realistically, and not just in terms of the moment. Senators and some farmers seem to wish to receive a little profit for another year under a straight 90 percent support price. I emphatically assert that this approach is totally unrealistic, and it will inure to the detriment of the American farmer over a long period of time.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator from Louisiana for a moment further, let me say that the Senator from Illinois is entirely correct in his statement regarding the importance of this bill because of its effect on a long-range program and because it does not simply ask for a continuation of the 90-percent support price, or the so-called war legislation, for just one more year. If we continue the war legislation, so to speak, for just one more year, it can well destroy any future opportunity for a sound farm program.

That is why I wish to join the Senator from Illinois on this matter and to say that he is entirely correct in his explanation of the importance of providing for this type of program, rather than a mere continuation of some special wartime legislation.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, in that connection, let me say that I understand the House has passed a bill extending the so-called Steagall amendment for 18 months. But if prices were to fall in the meantime, and if we did not pass this bill providing for a long-range program, my guess is that we would not be able to obtain-under conditions different from those which exist at this time-the enactment of a bill as favorable as this one to the farmers as a whole. In other words, let the price of wheat go down, let the price of corn and other commodities go down, and it would be more difficult for us to get so favorable a bill approved as the one we can obtain now, because of the fact that the prices for those commodities are fairly good at present.

We also know something about what happened to farm prices and incomes following World War I and again following 1929. On the average farm prices dropped something more than 50 percent within a 12-month period following the fall of 1920. Again, following 1929 farm prices went into the long, disastrous, downward slide which carried into 1933. Farmers need protection against such disasters. S. 2318 supplies such protection. As has been pointed out on two or three occasions, under the plan in the pending bill farm prices cannot fall below their support levels, which in the case of the basic commodities would be between 60 and 90 percent of parity. In 1929, in a period of 12 months, the price of our basic commodities fell 50 percent.

Essentially S. 2318 provides for mandatory supports for the basic commodities-corn, cotton, wheat, rice, peanuts. and tobacco-through loans, purchases, payments, or other operations at not less than 75 percent of the parity prevailing at the beginning of the marketing year. when supplies are normal. These mandatory price supports would gradually drop to 60 percent of parity as supplies rose to 130 percent or more of normal, or go to 90 percent of parity as supplies fell to 70 percent or less of a normal supply. In addition, the mandatory support schedule would be increased by 20 percent whenever producers of the commodity voted marketing quotas, except that in no case may the support level be increased above 90 percent of the parity level. But these are minimum floor prices and the Secretary of Agriculture is given discretionary authority to support prices anywhere up to 90 percent of the parity level.

The normal supply of wheat, rice, corn, cotton and peanuts is defined as the sum of the previous year's domestic consumption, plus estimated exports for the current year plus allowances of the following percentages for carry-over: 7 percent in the case of corn, 30 percent in the case of cotton, 10 percent in the case of rice, 15 percent in the case of wheat, and 15 percent in the case of pea-The Secretary may also make adjustments for current trends and unusual conditions. In the case of tobacco, a normal supply is defined as a normal year's domestic consumption and exports, plus 175 percent of a normal year's domestic consumption and 65 percent of a normal year's exports as an allowance for a normal carry-over. That of course is made necessary for the reason that tobacco is usually kept and stored for a period of 3 years.

The actual supply for a given year is compared to the normal supply for that year to obtain the supply percentage. For example, let us assume that this bill had been in effect in 1947. In that year the normal supply of wheat might have been about 1,441,000,000 bushels. The actual supply was 1,449,000,000 bushels, so that the supply percentage was about 100 percent. This would call for a minimum support price level of 75 percent of parity. However, the Secretary could have supported prices at 90 percent of parity.

The normal supply of cotton in 1947 might have been about 16,283,000 bales. The actual supply was 17,007,000 bales, or about 104 percent of the normal supply. This supply percentage would indicate a minimum support price of 74 percent of the parity price according to the schedule set forth on page 79 of S. 2318. But let us suppose the supply of cotton might have been as much as 19,500,000 bales. Then the supply percentage would have been 120 and the mandatory minimum support level would have been 66 percent of parity or in case marketing quotas had been in effect 79 percent. That of course is 20 percent of the 66 added. In either case, however, the Secretary might have gone as high as 90 percent of parity under the discretionary authority provided.

Sections 303 through 306 of the bill specifically define the conditions under which marketing quotas may be voted for corn, wheat, cotton, and rice. In the case of the grains-corn, wheat, and ricethe Secretary shall proclaim and the farmers shall vote on marketing quotas in any year when the total supply exceeds the normal supply for such marketing year by more than 20 percent, or whenever the average farm price for 3 successive months in the marketing year does not exceed 66 percent of parity, provided the total supply is not less than the normal supply. In the case of cotton, marketing quotas shall be proclaimed and voted upon whenever the total supply exceeds the normal supply by more than 8 percent, or whenever the average farm price for cotton for 3 successive months does not exceed 66 percent of parity, provided the total supply is not less than the normal supply for such marketing year. In the case of tobacco and peanuts, the provisions relating to marketing quotas remain the same as in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 except that section 309, which was reported as an amendment to S. 2318, provides that the Secretary shall proclaim a national marketing quota for each marketing year for each kind of tobacco for which a national marketing quota was proclaimed for the immediately preceding year.

Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 no price supports are available in cases where producers vote down or disapprove marketing quotas. Senate bill 2318, provides, however, that the level of price support for any basic agricultural commodity normally marketed in any marketing year with respect to which marketing quotas have been disapproved by producers shall be 50 percent of the parity price of such commodity as of the beginning of the marketing year.

I understand that there is a little disagreement in the Department of Agriculture on that phase of the bill. As I have just pointed out, it provides that in the event marketing quotas are disapproved by the farmers, support prices will be accorded at 50 percent of parity price. That is something new.

With respect to nonbasic commodities generally, the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation or other means available to him, is authorized to support prices of agricultural commodities to farmers through loans, purchases, payments, and other operations at not more than 90 percent of the parity price for the commodity as of the beginning of the marketing year or season.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. THYE. With reference to perishable commodities, one reason why perishable commodities would have to be handled in an entirely different manner than would nonperishable commodities

Mr. ELLENDER. I am coming to that. Mr. THYE. I wanted to be certain that that point was explained and clarified, so that no one would in any way feel he was being discriminated against by unreasonably high support prices.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I shall indicate in a moment, there are no loans made by the Commodity Credit Corporation on perishables, but a commodity may be purchased or dealt in with funds under section 32.

Mr. THYE. Perishable commodities are geographically located in very small areas, and there is no possible way that the producer could be protected except in the way which has been provided.

Mr. ELLENDER. I think my statement will explain it fully.

With respect to these nonbasic commodities, however, there are certain standards or conditions which the Secretary should consider. These are: The supply of the commodity in relation to the demand therefor, the price levels at which other commodities are being supported, the availability of funds, the perishability of the commodity, its importance to agriculture and the national economy, the ability to dispose of stocks acquired through a price-support operation, and the ability and willingness of producers to keep supplies in line with

All these provisions, of course, are specifically written in the bill, as the Senator knows.

We also specifically provide that compliance by the producer with acreage allotments, production goals, and marketing practices prescribed by the Secretary may be required as a condition of eligibility for price support.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to point out at this time that there is an amendment to be offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper], and the Senator from California [Mr. Downey] for the purpose of offsetting temporary losses in export markets. There were instances last year of a foreign nation suddenly canceling its orders in this country, thereby sharply reducing the market price, had there been no support price. I think that is a very worthy suggestion on the part of the Senator from Florida and the Senator from California, and I think we will accept it. I know of no reason why it could not be accepted.

Mr. ELLENDER. Special provision is made for wool. The price of wool shall be supported at such level, not in excess of 90 percent nor less than 60 percent of its parity price, as the Secretary may consider necessary in order to encourage an annual production of approximately 360,000,000 pounds. Senate bill 2318 also amends section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 in such a way as to allow the President to take corrective action upon finding that imports are rendering or tending to render ineffective any price-support program, provided, of course, that such action shall not be in contravention of any treaty or international agreement.

Funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation itself will not be used to support prices for perishable farm products, except as such products may be processed into storable form.

That is what I was referring to a moment ago, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota.

However, the measure does recognize that funds must be available to assist producers of perishable commodities and does specifically provide that section 32 funds will remain available to the Secretary of Agriculture until expended in order to meet any future emergency, provided the total at the end of any fiscal year shall not exceed $300,000,000.

Senate bill 2318 also specifies the conditions under which the Commodity Credit Corporation shall sell or not sell the farm commodities owned or controlled by it. Specifically, it is provided that commodities shall not be sold at less than, first, a price reasonably calculated to reimburse it for costs incurred: second, a price halfway between the support price, if any, and the parity price of such commodity; or third, a price equivalent to 90 percent of the parity price of such commodity, whichever is lowest. Exceptions to the foregoing restrictions are allowed in the case of sales for new or byproduct uses; sales of peanuts for the extraction of oil; sales for seed or feed, if such sales will not substantially impair any price-support program; sales of commodities which have substantially deteriorated in quality, or of nonbasic perishable commodities where there is danger of loss or waste through spoilage; sales for the purposes of establishing claims of certain kinds; sales for export; sales of wool; and sales for other than primary uses. A number of other technical amendments are also included to tie in with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

Senate bill 2318 provides for certain revisions in the calculation of parity prices for agricultural commodities. Essentially this revised parity provides for maintaining the same over-all relationship between prices for the things the farmer buys and the prices for things he sells as was provided in the original parity formula-that is, farm prices generally should yield the same purchasing power as prevailed during the period 1909-14. However, several of the farm organizations as well as the Secretary of Agriculture have recommended that the parity prices for the several individual commodities should be revised. This is done by providing that the parity prices of the several commodities shall be so calculated as to bear the same relation to each other as existed in the 10 calendar years immediately preceding the calculation.

Parity prices, according to the present definition are prices for individual commodities which have changed by the same percentage since a specified base period as the parity index. For many important commodities such as wheat, cotton, hogs, beef, cattle, and so forth, the base period is 1910-14, and the parity index is the index of prices paid by farmers for commodities used in farm production and farm family living plus an allowance of interest on farm mortgages and taxes on farm real estate.

Senate bill 2318 retains the 1910-14 period as a basis for the relationship between the general level of prices or rates paid by farmers and the general level of prices received by farmers. However, the price relationships among the prices of agricultural products themselves are determined by the actual prices for these commodities that prevailed in the last 10 years.

Some of the Senators may be interested to know how the general level of prices received by farmers and of prices paid by farmers are determined by the Department of Agriculture. The Department selects a representative period and determines the average quantities of the various products sold during that period. They also collect information on prices received by farmers for a selected list of commodities each month. These different prices for each of the months are multiplied by the average quantities, the same average quantities. The resulting total for each month is expressed as a percentage of the value of the same average quantities at 1910-14 average prices. Since the quantities remain constant the change in the value is a measure of the change in prices. For example, in May 1948 the index of prices received by farmers was 289. In other words, prices were 289 percent of what they were in the base period.

The parity index is obtained in a similar fashion. Prices paid by farmers for a standard list of commodities purchased by farmers for use in production and family living are collected. These prices are averaged together with interest rates and taxes to obtain the index of prices paid by farmers, including interest and taxes. In May 1948, this index indicated that prices paid by farmers, including interest and taxes, were 250 percent of their level in the base period 1910-14.

The starting point for calculating the revised parity price for wheat according to this bill is the average price received by farmers for wheat during the period January 1938 to December 1947. This price was $1.22 per bushel. The general level of prices received by farmers during that period was 168. The index of prices paid, including interest and taxes, as of March 15, 1948, was 247. This index determines the level of parity prices for that month. Prices during the preceding 10 years need to be in-creased by the ratio of 247 to 168 to indicate the March 15, 1948, parity price. Or, stated another way, the average price of wheat for the last 10 years can be divided by 168, the index of prices re-ceived by farmers for the same period, and multiplied by 247, the parity index reported for March 15.

The revised parity prices provided under S. 2318 would be considerably different than now calculated and published by the Department of Agriculture. However, in order to protect producers against abrupt or sharp changes due to the revision, S. 2318 provides for a transitional parity price where needed. That is, no parity price shall be lowered in any 1 year by more than 5 percent of the parity price as calculated prior to the effective date of S. 2318. It is further provided that the Secretary may, and upon the request of a substantial number of producers shall, hold public hearings with respect to parity prices of particular commodities to consider whether revisions in methods of calculating the particular parity are needed. If so, the Secretary is given authority to put into effect any revision so found to be required.

Parity prices are also used in connection with marketing agreements and in order to assure that the shift to the new revised method of calculating parity causes no unnecessary administrative difficulties, Section 403 provides the necessary amendments to the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937.

The effective date of S. 2318, the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1948, is set as January 1, 1949, except for section 402 which shall take effect upon enactment. Section 402 is the section giving the President power to protect any support program from imports which may render ineffective, or materially interfere with, such a program.

In conclusion, let me say that S. 2318 is not a bill to extend price supports for another 6 or 12 or 18 months. S. 2318 is not an endeavor to dodge the farm price issue. It meets it direct. S. 2318 is permanent legislation. It has the full support not only of those of us who have worked upon it but also, I believe, of the American farmers and their representatives. It offers American farmers a fair basis against which to plan for the future and, in so doing, it also goes far toward assuring the American people generally of abundant food supplies over the years ahead.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks a statement prepared by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry respecting parity prices. It further explains the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY—A COMPARISON OF PARITY PRICES AS DETERMINED IN S. 2318 AND UNDER THE PRESENT FORMULA

The new parity price formula in S. 2318 accepts the prices of individual farm commodities for the 10 immediately preceding years as reflecting the current relative supply of and demand for different farm products better than the price relationships between different farm commodities in 1910-14. However, the period 1910-14 is retained as the base period in showing the over-all relationship between the prices of farm products. The period of 1910-14 has advantages as a base period for farm products as a group because no large segment of our economy was badly out of adjustment with other segments of our economy at that time due to the absence of war, depression, or seriously disturbed international trade conditions. On the other hand changes in population, consumption of products, trade, total production, and other factors have had a marked effect in changing the relative demand for different farm products now as compared to the period 1910-14.

Below are given the new (S. 2318) and old parity price computations for the six basic farm commodities of corn, wheat, cotton, peanuts, rice, and tobacco as of May 15, 1948, plus a few examples of nonbasis commodi-In making these calculations the following data were used to tie the new parity formula to the 1910-14 base period: the 10-year average of prices received by farmers for their products (1938-47) was 168 percent of the 1910-14 base period, and the May 15, 1948, index of prices farmers paid for products purchased, including interest and taxes, was 250 percent of the 1910-14 base period. The new parity-price calculation uses the preceding 10-year average price (1938-47) of the individual commodity to determine the current relationship of the commodity to all farm products sold. old parity-price calculation uses the 1910-14 individual commodity price (unless some other base period has been accepted as in the case of tobacco) to show the price relationships between farm products.

COMPUTATION OF PARITY PRICES

Using corn as an example, the calculation of parity under the new parity formula is as follows: The 10-year average price of corn (1938-47) was $0.953. Average prices of all farm products during the last 10 years is 168 percent of the average prices of all farm products during the 1910-14 base period. Thus, $0.953 is divided by 1.68 to show the parity price of corn in 1910-14, which would amount to $0.567. Since the prices of things farmers buy are now 250 percent or 2.50 times as high as in 1910-14, the current parity price of corn would be 2.50 times $0.567 or $1.42.

In calculating the parity price for corn under the old formula, the actual price of corn from 1910-14 is used which was $0.642. Since the prices of things the farmer buys are 2.50 times as high as in 1910-14, the 1910-14 price of corn, $0.642, is multiplied by 2.50 which gives $1.60 as the old parity price of corn.

PARITY PRICES OF BASIC COMMODITIES

Corn (per bushel): New, $0.953 (10-year average price) divided by 1.68 equals $0.567 times 2.50 equals $1.42; old, $0.642 (present base price) times 2.50 equals $1.60.

Wheat (per bushel): New, $1.22 (10-year average price) divided by 1.68 equals $0.726 times 2.50 equals $1.82; old, $0.884 (present base price) times 2.50 equals $2.21.

Cotton (per pound): New, $0.1808 (10year average price) divided by 1.68 equals $0.1076 times 2.50 equals $0.2659; old, $0.124 (present base price) times 2.50 equals $0.3100.

Peanuts (per pound): New, $0.062 (10-year average price) divided by 1.68 equals $0.37 times 2.50 equals $0.091; old, $0.048 (present base price) times 2.50 equals $0.120.

Rice (per bushel): New, $1.44 (10-year average price) divided by 1.63 equals $0.857 times 2.50 equals $2.12; old, $0.813 (present base price) times 2.50 equals $2.03.

Tobacco (per pound): Flue-cured, new, $0.336 (10-year average price)¹ divided by 1.68 equals $0.200 times 2.50 equals $0.500; old, $0.229 (present base price)² times 2.12° equals $0.485; Burley, new $0.340 (10-year average price)¹ divided by 1.68 equals $0.202 times 2.50 equals $0.505; old, $0.222 (present price)² times 2.12° equals $0.471.

PARITY PRICES OF SELECTED NONBASIC COMMODITIES

Cottonseed (per ton): New, $44.60 (10year average price) divided by 1.68 equals

$26.50 times 2.50 equals $66.20; old, $22.28 (present base price) times 2.50 equals $56.40.

(present base price) times 2.50 equals $56.40. Hogs (per hundredweight): New, $12.50 (10-year average price) divided by 1.68 equals $7.44 times 2.50 equals $18.60; old, $7.28 (present base price) times 2.50 equals $18.20.

Beef cattle (per hundredweight): New, $10.90 (10-year average price) divided by 1.68 equals $6.49 times 2.50 equals $16.20; old, $5.41 (present base price) times 2.50 equals $13.60 equals $13.60.

Milk (per hundredweight): New, $2.81 (10-year average price) divided by 1.68 equals $1.67 times 2.50 equals $4.184; old, $1.60 (present base price) times 2.50 equals $4.00.4

It should be noted that while the parity prices of some products are higher and others lower under the new formula, the average parity price of all commodities will be the same under the old and new formulas. In the change from the old to the new parity formula, the parity price of livestock, livestock products and oll seeds are higher, while parity prices for grain crops are lower. It is because the relationships between prices of individual farm commodities have changed materially since 1910-14 that there is need of revising the parity formula to use current price relationships between individual farm commodities.

A provision in the bill (S. 2318), however, provides that where there is a difference between the two parity prices for a product exceeding 5 percent of the old parity price, that the adjustment to the new parity will not take place at the rate of more than 5 percent in 1 year. The main reason for the lower parity prices for the basic commodities under the new parity formula, except for rice and tobacco, is the low prices for the other products in the years 1938, 1939, and 1940. Insofar as the prices in 1948, 1949, and 1950 may be higher than in 1938, 1939, and 1940 for these products, their parity prices under the two formulas will come closer together in the next 3 years, and the new parity for a product may exceed the old if the 10-year average price of the prod-uct becomes relatively higher than those of other commodities. The formula provides for the annual adjustment of dropping the first and adding a new year's price to the 10-year average price of farm products.

It is desirable that the new parity prices for livestock and oil seeds be somewhat higher relative to grain prices because 85 percent of the corn crop and a large part of other grains are normally fed to livestock. This change in the relationship of parity prices for livestock and grains will encourage the feeding of grain which is the most desirable means of utilizing grain when supplies become burdensome.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from Louisiana for his very careful and accurate analysis of the bill, and, too, for his long and splendid work in behalf of the farmers of the United States.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator from North Dakota. He is very kind. Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, at this

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, at this time I call to the attention of the Senate certain amendments approved by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. First there is a series of amendments which were reported and printed on May 25 last, and which I understand automatically become a part of the bill. Then there are other amendments which were approved by the committee yesterday morning, and which were offered last night, but unfortunately they were not printed as committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Typings in the chair). Without objection, the committee amendment will be modified by the amendments now offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. If there is no objection, that certainly is the quickest way to take care of the amendments.

There is one other amendment which was not taken up by the committee yesterday, and which I shall offer at this time. It is an amendment which would extend the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation for another year under the Delaware charter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is this a committee amendment?

Mr. AIKEN. No. The committee did not have it prepared in time to act on it yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is offering it in his own right?

Mr. AIKEN. Yes, although I am sure the entire committee agrees with the amendment. As I have said, there is some doubt whether the House will get around to acting on the Commodity Credit charter bill in time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will send the amendment to the desk the clerk will state it.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 96, it is proposed to strike out beginning with line 14 down to and including line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CONTINUED AS AGENCY OF THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 404. The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 7 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1948," and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1949."

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 405. This act shall take effect on January 1, 1949, except that sections 402 and 404 shall take effect upon the enactment of this act.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, what is the effect of sections 402 and 404? Is that part of the bill?

Mr. AIKEN. The amendment is to extend the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation for another year.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand that part of it, but I did not understand the last line, which referred to sections 402 and 404.

Mr. AIKEN. I asked the draftsman to prepare a bill extending the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation for another year, as is, merely so that the country might be safeguarded in the event the House and Senate did not agree upon a permanent Commodity Credit Corporation charter.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am heartily in favor of the Senator's amendment extending the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. AIKEN. This was prepared by the legislative draftsman, and I am sure that if it means anything else than what I have stated we shall be glad to have it corrected.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was merely curious. On reading the amendment I find it seems to relate to the entire bill taking effect January 1, the Commodity Credit Corporation part to take effect immediately. I think I understand it now.

Mr. AIKEN. I think it is all right. If there is any doubt, we will wait and offer it a little later. If there is no objection, it will save a little time to offer it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSEM. Mr. President, may I inquire as to whether amendment lettered "A," which was reported on May 25, has been agreed to?

Mr. AIKEN. The amendments reported on May 25, being committee amendments, automatically became a part of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator from Georgia that the amendment to which he addresses himself, as modified, has been agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. When was it agreed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was a modification of the committee amendment, and was made a part of the committee amendment, the Chair is advised.

Mr. AIKEN. As I understand, Mr. President, the committee has the right to modify its own amendment to the bill; the amendment was in the form of an amendment to the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment is open to further amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 81, line 3, after the period, it is proposed to insert the following:

Any price-support operation undertaken with respect to either turkeys or chickens shall be applicable to all chickens, including broilers, appropriate adjustments being made as provided in subsection (e) of this section.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, poultry is one of the nonbasic agricultural commodities which is supported under the Steagall amendment, the act of July 1, 1941, as amended.

But in subsequent directives issued under the authority of section 4 of that act, the Secretary of Agriculture, in authorizing support prices for turkeys and chickens, specifically excluded broilers by name. There is nothing mentioned in the law passed by Congress which would authorize any discrimination against any segment of the poultry industry, and insofar as I have been able to ascertain, this is the only case on record in which the Secretary of Agriculture has seen fit specifically to exclude by name any group of farmers from participating in the program as authorized under the law as passed in 1941.

This amendment does not say that the Secretary of Agriculture must support the price of broilers. It merely states that if and when any price-support operations are undertaken with respect to either turkeys or chickens, it shall be applicable to all chickens including broilers with appropriate adjustments being made as provided in the act itself.

The amendment is being offered by my colleagues the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Buck], the Senators from Virginia [Mr. Byrn and Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. Typings and Mr. O'Conorl, and myself, who represent the major percentage of broiler producers in this country. We have discussed its merits with the sponsor of the agriculture bill, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Aiken], who has agreed with us that there is no justification for a continuation of this discrimination, since it clearly was not the intent of Congress when it passed the law in July 1941, and I understand that he is willing to accept the amendment on behalf of the committee.

Mr. AIKEN. As I understand, the amendment does not require the Secretary to support the price of chickens or turkeys or broilers or any other fowl at any particular level, but simply requires that if poultry is supported broilers shall be included. I personally have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, a perfecting amendment would seem to be required on page 49, line 3. At present subdivision (14) reads:

To encourage producers, processors, dis-tributors, and consumers to enter into marketing agreements.

Consumers are not contemplated as parties under the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1937. So I am offering an amendment to strike out the word "consumers" and insert after "processors" the word "and", so the language would be "processors, and distributors", omit-ting the word "consumers."

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the Senator's point is well taken, but a similar amendment has just been approved.

Mr. DOWNEY. Was it offered as an amendment by the committee?

Mr. AIKEN. It was in certain clarifying amendments which I offered on behalf of the committee.

Mr. DOWNEY. I will then withdraw my amendment, of course. I am very happy to do so.

There are two amendments sponsored by the Senator from Florida and myself which I offer at this time and ask to have stated. I send the first one to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 49, after lines 13 and 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

(16) to assist in the retention of foreign outlets in order to (a) maintain long-run export demands, (d) prevent short-run de-moralization of domestic markets, and (c) maintain productive capacity sufficient satisfy expected long-run domestic markets plus foreign demand for agricultural products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. Downey], for himself and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment which I offer on behalf of myself and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 77, line 19, of the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out "and (7)" and insert in lieu thereof the following: the need for offsetting temporarly losses of export markets, and (8)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. President, with re-Mr. AIKEN. spect to the amendments I will say that both of them would only serve to strengthen the bill. I cannot conceive of anyone having any objection to either

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I fully concur, and did so at the time the amendment was offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], with respect to turkeys and chickens. In the State of New York we have also a rather large duck industry, I do not want to say that in this case what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, but it seems to me only fair, if turkeys and chickens are to be included in the bill, for ducks and ducklings also to be included. I therefore offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 81, after the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, it is proposed to insert the following:

That if any support-price operation is undertaken with respect to either chickens or turkeys, the same parity price-support operation shall be undertaken with respect to ducks and ducklings.

Mr. MORSE. I ask the Senator from New York the question whether or not there would be any particular objection to including in the appropriate place in his amendment "and other poultry," because there is an "if" clause in his amendment, that "if any support price," and so forth. Why do we not do this all up at once and insert in the appropriate place in the amendment the words "and other poultry"?

Mr. IVES. That is very agreeable to the Senator from New York, and I ask that my amendment be appropriately modified in accordance with the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment offered by Mr. IVES, as modified by Mr. Morse, to the committee amendment, was reduced to writing, as follows:

Provided, That if any price support opera-tion is undertaken with respect to either chickens or turkeys, the same parity price support operation shall be undertaken with respect to ducks and ducklings and other poultry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] to the committee amendment.

The amendment, as modified, to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President. had submitted an amendment to the committee amendment which has been printed and lies on the table, and has been lying on the table for several days. but after consultation with Senators in charge of the bill and members of the committee who have devoted a great deal of work and time to the subject, I have somewhat varied the amendment. It now comes down to two amendments, and I submit them both for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 49, line 7, between the words "revenues" and "for", it is proposed to insert the words "and funds."

On page 2, line 20, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

And provided further, That in any fiscal year, if at the end of the preceding fiscal year the sums appropriated under said section 32 and remaining unexpended do not exceed $300,000,000, Commodity Credit Corporation may, as provided in section 302 (a) of this act, carry out any operation to support the price of any such perishable, non-basic agricultural commodity to the extent that the reserve for postwar price support of agriculture established pursuant to the First Supplemental Appropriation Recission Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 8) and other funds appropriated for agricultural price support are sufficient to cover any losses which may incurred in connection with such

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I have consulted with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] on his question. He is quite familiar with the change in the original printed amendment, and I hope he will see fit to accept this amendment.

AIKEN. Mr. President, the amendment as read referred to page 2.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is a perfecting amendment, to change language in another section.

Mr. AIKEN. Is this the same amendment which has been printed, which the Senator from Washington submitted?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. It provides, does it not, that the Commodity Credit Corporation may use the funds which are already available to it for the support of prices of nonbasic commodities?

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct. Mr. AIKEN. So far as I am personally concerned, I think the amendment is satisfactory

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I simply wish the RECORD to show that I have checked into this question with members of the committee. I understand that there is no serious objections to the amendment. I join with the Senator from Washington in saying a word in its behalf at this time. The amendment is vital to the fruit industry from coast to coast and from north to south.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
